RAILWAY EARNINGS.

Financial authorities, as well as doctors, disagree. Mr. E. B. Ostler, a director of the C. P. R., says that we are borrowing too much money, and going ahead too rapidly. Mr. C. R. Hosmer, another director of the same line, says the depression is merely temporary. Whatever is the middle way between these two positions, there is no doubt that we are going ahead pretty strongly in some directions. Government statistics show that during the last year Canadian railways have increased their earnings nearly 33 per cent.—a significant indication—on the surface at least—of commercial and general business activity, and prosperity, but not especially for the railways. With large earnings there has been costly operation. Last year the gross earnings of Canadian railways amounted to nearly 174 millions of dollars, a gain of sixteen million dollars, but the operating expenses also took a jump of sixteen millions over the previous year, amounting to 121 millions, so that the margin of profit remains practically stationary. It is to be remarked that the expense of operation of railways, as far as the running of trains is concerned, has practically doubled within the past dozen years, jumping from 77.9 cents per train mile to $1.41 per train mile. But we have all noticed the great increase in the size of trains. Where, a few years ago, on our through lines, we saw only three or four coaches, we now see the number of coaches so largely increased that trains have to be run in two sections. To the laymen the large increase in railway traffic, looks good, no matter what the financial wise-acres say.

NEW JOURNALISTIC ENTERPRISE

Financiers tell us in mournful numbers that we Canadians are borrowing too much money; but we have not heard from any source that we are importing too many citizens. When we have men like Sifton telling of the immense extent of our resources, we all admit, in respect, especially of our agricultural areas, that we must have them occupied. We must, to this end, promote immigration. The Government is doing much in this direction, but other agencies are at work. To insure occupation of our rich farming lands in all the provinces, we must make known, in the proper quarters, and in the proper way and spirit, what we have to offer to home-seekers. Mr. Arthur Hawkes, an old country man, who has spent many years in Canada, with his eyes open, has become an ardent Canadian by conviction. He announces the publication from Montreal of a special journal, "The British News of Canada," a weekly journal, edited by Arthur Hawkes, for those who love the Old Land and the New." The new journal will be mailed at fifty cents a year to any address in Canada or the United Kingdom. The scheme of the publication is very comprehensive. One page will be devoted to news and views of the financial and industrial world of Canada; another will be given over to live "human interest" news from all parts of the Dominion, especially selected in the interests of British readers, another page will deal with subjects of especial interest, in a personal and intimate way, to all who love the Old Land and the New; another page will be devoted to answering all sorts of questions regarding the resources of Canada and opportunities of getting on, still another page is called the "Farmers' page," and will be an illuminating guide to the prospective settler; another page will be devoted to home life in Canada, a reflection of its conditions and happiness; another page will give information regarding our churches and educational institutions, such as will appeal to the coming settler. Another page will deal with the advantages and attainment of Canadian social and amusement life, to aid in demonstrating the wide range of life in the Dominion. In fine, every phase of Canadian opportunity, life and condition that will illustrate the possibility of a larger and more prosperous existence in Canada, will be presented to the British reader. Mr. Hawke's new venture will have a wide field of usefulness, both from the imperial and domestic point of view. It will aim to conduct an intelligent propaganda of immigration, one that will appeal to the better and more thrifty class of Britishers, who would find escape for hampering conditions of life in the Old Land to the land of wide-open opportunity in Canada. Mr. Hawke, with his "British News of Canada" will be doing a timely imperial work that promises great success.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The Ontario cheese industry is a good deal stronger than the cheese produced. Last year Western Ontario dairymen, turned out 17,833 tons of cheese, sixteen thousand boxes more than last year.

The newspapers, critical of Mr. Borden, leader of the Opposition, say that a lack of fixed convictions is one of his faults. That would be remedied if he were brought before our police magistrate on a well proven charge.

Now-a-days reciprocity is regarded in some quarters as the death of protection. A generation ago Sir John Macdonald buttressed his national policy resolution, with the argument that a protective tariff would force the United States into reciprocity.

Mr. Borden, leader of the Conservative Opposition, must find a good deal of difference of opinion on reciprocity even among his own following. Why oesn't he see the wisdom of submitting reciprocity to a plebiscite. It is a subject upon which the mass of the people know more than they do about a navy.

The Ottawa Free Press is persistent. It's an off day when it doesn't tear off an article upon a tariff commission, to permanently deal with questions of tariff adjustment. The tariff we shall always have with us, and it is too important, deep-reaching and far-reaching to be left to busy ministers, who without neglect of other duties cannot give the tariff administration the necessary and expert attention it demands. Like management of national railways, the tariff question might well be placed above political consideration in the party sense.

A PERMANENT TARIFF COMMISSION.

(Ottawa Free Press.)

The proposal of The Free Press for the creation of a permanent Tariff Commission is rapidly winning adherents throughout the country, and we have hopes that Parliament will not be long in session again before the proposal is debated with all the care which its importance deserves.

The latest exponent on the platform of the Commission idea is Hon. Wallace Nesbitt, who in an address before the Chatham Board of Trade said:—

"Let us create a tariff board, non-political and expert, something in the nature of the railway board; a board that has constant employment; that can go to any manufacturer, get his books (their information should be entirely private to themselves), but they can ascertain whether his protection is more than he needs, or less than he needs, and can report accordingly to parliament, without giving the details of his business. This would give us a scientific tariff, and the board could consider the interests of all." He suggested that the duties of this board could include guarding the public against the issue of watered stock in reference to public enterprises and commercial ventures."

If Mr. Nesbitt's scheme provides for giving the proposed commission full power to fix and change the schedules, as is the case with the Railway Commission, The Free Press is unable to follow him. The tariff must remain "in politics" and the responsibility for establishing and rearranging the schedule must, in the last analysis, be left to the government in power.

But it is most advisable that there should exist some machinery for the constant collection and arrangement of data pertaining to the working out of the tariff. Such information would be invaluable to the Ministers in the preparation of the tariff and all of it that was not of an essentially private nature should be available to everybody.

The tariff board, when it comes, as come it must, will be a business organization. It will do business on business principles, and it will result in the interests of both consumer and producer being protected, so that no injury shall be done to neither.

The real cure for complaints against the tariff is publicity. Under our constitution, the Dominion is bound to raise the greater portion of its revenue by customs duties and the only safe and safe way is to see to it that capital shall not be watered, that labour is protected, and that the consumer gets a square deal. That is what ought to be accomplished by a Tariff Board.

A CANADIAN IMPRESSION OF THE NEGOTIATIONS

WASHINGTON, JAN. 11.—There is all the difference in the world between Congress and the Canadian Parliament. The dread and fear of Kings sits enthroned beside Speaker Marcil at Ottawa, every member of Congress, every spectator in the gallery, feels himself just as big a man as Uncle Joe Cannon at Washington. You may talk as you please, but the mace, though once called a bauble, and half a dozen black robes make a deal of difference.

This is indeed the country of ostentatious democracy, and nowhere are the outward symbols of demos more apparent than in the Capitol. There is a free and easy atmosphere about it that we do not have. Members stroll about talking, gather in groups in the semi-circle before the clerks' desk, talk loudly, crack jokes, and laugh in a way that is a bit confusing to the spectator. The result is that although the seating arrangement is better from the press gallery standpoint that it is in Ottawa, it is even harder to hear what a member is saying. The official reporter often has to go up to the man speaking, his notebook in hand. Sometimes, when the House is in committee, the noise rises to a pitch that causes the chairman to intervene. He has a gavel and whacks with the full power of his right arm upon the green baize top of his desk, producing a noise like a gun shot, which makes some somnolent members jump in their seats.

No "Honourable" There.

"The gentleman from Iowa" (no "honourable members" here) has the floor. He is dissatisfied, he is not content, nay, more, he is angry. What he is angry about he and the chairman and possibly three others know. The gentleman from New York arises to explain that—bang goes the gavel, and in the moment's comparative silence that follows the gentleman from Arkansas, frequently known as Dr. Mary Walker, gets to his feet. So it goes for a while, and by and by Uncle Joe gets into his seat again, and the House resumes business.

Cuspidors are indispensable. Your mere private member doesn't get one but the Speaker has a fine big one and the clerks who sit below him have one apiece.

There is a mace at Washington. It lives up against the wall in a little niche. The only time it is used is when some member gets obstreperous. Then the sergeant-at-arms carries the mace over to him, and that settles it. He's just naturally got to be good after that.

It is great fun to spend an hour in the press gallery with some of the kind-hearted but outspoken members of the craft. It is well that the press men do not print the things they say or there would be wigs on the green.

Nutshell Biography.

"See that bald-headed man with the newspaper? That's —— of ——, one of the oldest men in the House. By Gad, I believe he's sober, too!" was one biography in a nutshell.

Nehemiah D. Sperry is an interesting figure, as he gets huddled up in his seat on the Republican side. Extreme age shows in every line of his face and figure. Eighty-four years ago he was born in Connecticut. He has served for eight consecutive terms, and will retire on March 4th next, his public lifework done. This nation has moved quickly. Who now thinks of the Civil War as other than ancient history? Yet this man gave bonds for the building of the Monitor, the progenitor of the world's mighty steel-clad fleets, in the days when the smoke from Southern watchfires hung over the southern bank of the Potomac almost in sight of where he sits to-day.

Always in Dress Suit.

J. Warren Keifer, another outstanding figure. The remarkable thing about Gen. Keifer is that he insists on wearing a dress suit all the time. Brusque, pathetic, people say he sleeps in it, he's so fond of it.

A gallant old figure is the general, in spite of flapping coat tails and bulging shirt front. He was only 25 when the Civil War broke out, and he enlisted. He was a Colonel at 26, and a brigadier-general for "gallant and meritorious service" at 28. During the war he fought in 28 battles great and small, and was present when Lee laid down his sword at Appomattox. His fighting was nearly ended at the Wilderness, but he pulled through. When the Spanish war broke out Gen. Keifer, though 62 years of age, went into it again, and commanded a division and took Havana in that capacity.

Has Some Justification.

Withal, he has had time to plunge into politics, devote time to historical research, write books, and make notable speeches.

If wearing a dress suit down to breakfast is ever justifiable, Gen Keifer, soldier, statesman, lawyer author, and politician, has earned the right.

A PARLIAMENTARY DAY OF PURPOSELESS QUESTIONS

OTTAWA, JAN. 11. The House of Commons resumed this afternoon with one topic paramount in the mind and conversation of the members namely, the trade negotiations with the United States.

The Opposition launched a series of questions in the hope of securing something to relieve the purposeless and policyless position in which it finds itself. Mr. Borden himself took the initiative. Alluding to the negotiations, he asked if it was the intention of the Government to inform the House at the present time as to the basis upon which these negotiations were proceeding, and the principles upon which the Government proposed to act. Mr. Borden also wanted to know why the Prime Minister changed his mind on the matter of the "pilgrimages to Washington."

Sir Wilfrid said that the Canadian Commissioners were conferring with the representatives of the Republic with a view to establishing better trade relations between the two countries, either by treaty or otherwise. Of the basis of the negotiations the House was already in possession. Following the negotiations the Government would pass upon the result but the whole matter would be subject to ratification by the House. As to my personal and oft-repeated statement that we would never again go to Washington hat in hand," concluded the Prime Minister, smiling, "I have not receded from that position. The visit of the Ministers to the United States capital is according to the invitation received from our neighbours."

Mr. Foster asked if there were any additional papers to communicate to the House respecting the proposal to have a Canadian embassy at Washington. Sir Wilfrid Laurier had no recollection of seeing any correspondence on the subject.

Using an editorial in the Grain-Growers' newspaper criticizing the apathy of the western members in the progress of the recent deputation as a text, Mr. Staples (Macdonald) sought to show that the Opposition was prepared to go farther to meet the demands of the Westerners than was the Government. He quoted former resolutions by the leader and the member for Souris affecting terminal elevators. Mr. Meighen (Portage la Prairie) declared the Prime Minister was quoted in the same paper as having assured the Grain-Growers' Executive that the Government was prepared, either through the Railway Commission or other authority, to keep control of freight rates on the projected Hudson Bay Railway and the steamship company to connect therewith. It also credited the Premier with an assurance that the Government contemplated to secure necessary terminal facilities at Liverpool, or some other English port. Mr. Meighen asked if the reports were true.

Sir Wilfrid confessed he had not yet read the report in question. He would do so, however, and then he would be in a position to inform the House as to its accuracy.

"ASHTON-KIRK, INVESTIGATOR"

By John T. McIntyre. Copyrighted and All Rights Reserved

"You know, old boy, there are times when a man thinks quite a bit of himself. This is more especially so before he's twenty-five. But then again there are times when he sees his bad points only, and then of all the unutterable dolts in the universe, he gets the notion that he is the worst. When we were at college and I held down that third base position and hit .320 in the first season, I was chesty enough. I suppose you remember it. And when I came into my money and began to make collections of motor cars, yachts and such things, I thought I had taken life by the ears and was making it say 'uncle.'

"Well, we're only grown-up boys, after all. I recall that I thought I'd dazzle Edyth with my magnificence just as Tom Sawyer did the little girl with the two long braids of yellow hair—do you remember? And it was after I discovered that she was not to be dazzled that I sort of gave up. I wasn't anybody—I never could be anybody, and Edyth would be the sort of woman who would expect her husband to take the front at a jump. And no sensible person could imagine me at the front of anything, unless it was a procession on its way to the bow-wows."

"I think," said Ashton-Kirk, "that you began to prostrate yourself before your idol; and when a man takes to that, he always gets to thinking meanly of himself. The attitude has much to do with the state of mind, I imagine. Miss Vale is a courageous, capable girl; but you can never tell what sort of a man a woman will select for a husband. Girls have fancies upon the subject, and give voice to them sometimes; but it is the man they choose and not the one they picture to whom you must give your attention."

"I suppose that is true enough," said Pendleton.

"Miss Vale's evident strength awed you," went on the other. "And then your timidity began to magnify her qualities. No woman is what she seems to be to the man who loves her. Miss Vale is not so difficult to please as you thought. I fancy that her engagement to young Morris proves that."

"There you have it," cried Pendleton. "That's it, Kirk. I've stood aside, considering myself unworthy, and allowed a fellow to slip by me who is as colourless as water. Allan Morris is no more fit to be her husband than—" at loss for a simile he halted for a moment, and then burst out: "Oh, he's impossible!"

"So far as we have tested him, certainly," agreed Ashton-Kirk, "he has shown no great strength of character."

"He's acted like a frightened child all through this affair. He's mixed up in it, and through his weakness allowed Edyth to also entangle herself. Again and again he's run to her, or called to her, to tell her of some fresh complication that he'd gotten his frightened self into; and to protect him, she has dared and done what would have frightened an ordinary woman into fits."

"I think," observed Ashton-Kirk, "that she has realized his position, to some extent, at least. The fact that he is weak has, I think, dawned upon her already; she may also see his evident selfishness before long. If she does—why, might there not still be some hope for you, Pen?"

Pendleton shook his head in the gloom.

"I'm afraid not," said he, hopelessly. "Somehow a weak man makes a great appeal to the woman who has grown to care for him. He arouses her mother-instinct. And Edyth is so strong that her pity——"

"May induce her to do her utmost to see him through this trouble," interrupted Ashton-Kirk. "But it may not carry her much further. When once the thing is over, a reaction may set in. Who knows?"

But Pendleton refused to be comforted. For a long time they talked of Edyth Vale, Morris, and the killing of Hume. Finally Pendleton said:

"I suppose we can't smoke here to-night, can we?"

Pendleton sighed drearily.

There were many clocks in the rooms; the policemen must have amused themselves by winding and setting them; for at the end of each hour they began to strike, singly and in pairs. The brisk strokes of the nervous little modern clock mingled with the solemn sonorous beat of an old New England time piece whose wooden works creaked and laboured complainingly. Elaborate Swiss chimes pealed from others; through the darkness, a persistent cuckoo could be heard throwing open a small shutter and stridently announcing his version of the time.

It was some time after midnight that Pendleton began to yawn. Then Ashton-Kirk said:

"Open some of those blankets, Pen, and lie down. There is no need of two of us watching to-night; I scarcely expect anything to happen."

Pendleton did not expect anything either, but he said:

"All right, I will, if you'll wake me in a few hours and let me take a turn at it."

Ashton-Kirk agreed. Pendleton stretched himself upon the sofa, and soon his deep breathing told that he was asleep. As the night drew on, the solitary watcher grew chilled in the unheated rooms and huddled himself into another blanket; but he sat near the door leading to the hall, which was slightly ajar; and though his eyes closed sometimes in weariness, he never lost a sound in the street or a tick of one of the clocks. Through the entire night he watched and waited almost without moving; it was not until the dawn of a grey, dirty day began to somewhat lighten the room that he aroused Pendleton. The latter expostulated sleepily when he noted the time; but with scarcely a word the investigator took his place upon the sofa and dropped off to sleep.

"I say, Kirk," said Pendleton, admiringly, "you did this thing rather thoroughly. There's quite a tasty little snack here; and the thermos bottles have kept the coffee steaming."

At the water tap in the rear the investigator bathed his hands and face; then he sat down with his friend and did complete justice to the breakfast. Afterwards, with their cigars going nicely and a feeling of comfort stealing over them in spite of the rather uncomfortable night, Pendleton said:

"You promised the other night to tell me what made you think that the murderers had failed to secure the thing they sought. The words that the promise was couched in made me think that you had also something to show me, and as we could not light up last night, I've waited patiently until to-day. Now you must ease my curiosity. Come, tell me a few things."

Ashton-Kirk took his cigar from his mouth.

"I told you," said he, "that the reports of Burgess and Fuller, together with the conversation we had with Tobin, had enlightened me upon these points." As he enumerated them, he checked them off with his fingers:

"Why was the murder done?

"The identity of the confederate of Locke.

"That the man would return to the scene of the crime."

"Yes," said Pendleton, "those, I think, were the points."

"The first two," went on the investigator, "I will allow to stand for a while. But I promised to illustrate for you, and I think I can do so."

Ashton-Kirk here arose and passed through the storeroom and kitchen into the bedroom.

"The writing upon the step in the hall," said he, facing his friend, "directed Locke's confederate to look for something behind Wayne's portrait. As all the pictures of Wayne's in the place were broken or otherwise showed traces of rough handling, it seemed that the thing desired must have been found. However, I was not sure about that, as I have told you.

"If you will recall Tobin's remarks of the other night, you will note that the only thing he could admire in the man's character was his fighting spirit. Then it developed that Hume made a boast of having come by this naturally enough. He claimed descent from one of Washington's officers. Tobin could not recall the officer's name, but he related an anecdote of him that was unmistakable. The officer was Gen Wayne!"

"By George!" cried Pendleton.

The collection of Wayne portraits was in the next room. It was reasonable to suppose that Hume, an ardent admirer of his ancestor, might have once known as Wayne, and that Locke had overheard him say that name. Of course it was quite likely that he was not really a descendant of Wayne. But he probably called himself Wayne nevertheless.

[illegible] Pendleton [illegible] wrote the name 'Wayne' upon the step in candle grease, forgetting that his confederate only knew their proposed victim as Hume." His eyes rested upon the walls and upon the sneering, unpleasant portrait of the murdered man. "He meant that the thing he desired was there," indicating the portrait with an exultant sweep of the arm. "And by George, it must be there still."

In Dread Of Piles

Many Believe That Nothing Short of the Surgeon's Knife Will Effect Cure. They Do Not Know

The agony caused by the intense itching, the depressing and debilitating effect on the system, the dread lest a surgical operation might be necessary—these are the things which make piles or hemorrhoids so distressing.

The doctors have been recommending surgical operations as the only cure. But the surgical operation, with all its dangers and expense and pain, has not usually effect a lasting cure.

Many a case has been cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment after the surgical operation had failed. Here is a case which doctors gave up.

Mr. J. Mawer, Roden, Man., writes: "Dr. Chase's Ointment is a wonderful preparation. I had itching piles for over six years, and though I used two doctors' prescriptions and many other preparations could obtain much benefit. The doctor told me there was no cure for me and that I would have to undergo an operation.

I bought a box of Dr. Chase's Ointment and was completely cured. As this was six months ago there has been no return of the trouble, I believe that the cure is a permanent one."

One thing certain, Dr. Chase's Ointment will bring you relief from the maddening itching and burning almost instantly as applied.

To make the cure thorough and lasting don't neglect to use Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills at the same time. Don't be satisfied with anything else. Dr. Chase's Ointment will cure you if anything can. One [illegible] at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

63 Years of Age—Younger Than at 40

Mrs. J. W. McPeek, of Herbert, Sask., Can., is more than pleased with the results obtained from the use of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey, which has been of great benefit to her family. She says in her letter: "I have been using Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey for the past ten years. It is the best health giver I ever used. I am now 63 years of age, but I am looking and feeling younger than at 40. My friends all say, 'How young you look!'

"It has also proved just the thing for my daughter, who lives in Ohio. She had such weak nerves and heart that the slightest move would startle her. Your wonderful remedy has practically overcome this, and has done her more good than all other treatments."

Mr. McPeek writes about his remarkable experience: "I am 67 years of age, and for a number of years I haven't been strong. I have a weak heart and for some time was almost helpless. Lately I have been using Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey, and it has helped me wonderfully. I sincerely recommend Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey to every one."

The genuine is sold in SEALED BOTTLES ONLY by all grocers and liquor dealers, or direct, $1.25 a large bottle. AT WIFE'S BIER

Man Passes Away as He Looked Upon Features He Loved

NEW YORK, JAN. 12.—In bending over the coffin containing the body of his wife, in the Catholic church of St Cecilia, at North Henry and Herbert streets, Williamsburg, yesterday, Michael Ormond's heart failed and he died.

The dead woman was Mrs. Mary Ormond. She passed away on Sunday last at her home, No. 14 Herbert street. The couple were devoted to each other and her death was a severe shock to Mr. Ormond, who was seventy-five years old. Mrs. Ormond was a few years younger.

The coffin was taken to the church, where a requiem mass was celebrated for the repose of her soul. The celebrant Mgr. Edward J. McGolrick, who was assisted by Mgr. John J. Barret. Mgr. McGolrick, with Mgr. Barrett, who is a relative of the Ormond family, were entering the vestry when Mr. Ormond arose to look for the last time upon the features he loved. He was assisted by his daughter Margaret, the organist of the church, and his son William. Mr. Ormond rested his hands on the coffin and as his lips moved in silent prayer, he lurched forward. His son caught and held the limp form.

UPHOLD LARGER BODY.

Grimsby, Jan. 13.—Niagara Peninsula fruit growers, at their annual meeting here yesterday afternoon approved of the action of the representatives of the tender fruit interests at the annual meeting of Ontario growers, in agreeing to cut in two the import duty on grapes, in order that the States may be induced to lower the duty on Canadian apples. The duty on grapes is now two cents a pound.

Another very important matter taken up was the recent victory over the express companies in regard to rates. General Manager Bryce of the Canadian Express Co., and General Manager Stout of the Dominion Express Co., have agreed to come to the district to confer with the growers as to a new tariff, satisfactory to both. To meet the express men a committee was appointed, with instructions to prepare a brief on behalf of the growers.

Growers who attended New York State Growers' Convention at Rochester, reported that there it had been demonstrated that an arsenate of lead mixed with lime and sulphur, spray would greatly increase its efficiency. The only danger is in getting too strong a mixture, but to overcome this hydrometers to regulate the strength had been arranged. One has been purchased for St. Catharines district.

The report of Secretary-Treasurer Fisher shows a balance of $275.13 in the treasury. Regarding annual meeting of the institution, to be held late in February, Profs. Parrott and Whitgee of Geneva, N.Y., were suggested, the selection being placed in the hands of the directors.

A life membership and honorary directorship was bestowed on Dr. Jessop, M.P.P., for his active interest in the work of the growers.

Mrs. Schenk on Trial.

Wheeling, W.Va., Jan. 13.—It was woman against woman yesterday in the sensational trial of Mrs. Laura Farnsworth Schenk, charged with placing poison in the food and medicines of her husband, John O. Schenk, the millionaire packer. Unmasking his heaviest batteries, Prosecuting Attorney Handlan called as his first witness "Miss Evans," the woman of mystery in the case, who nursed Schenk during his illness from poison.

When court opened at 9 o'clock half an hour earlier than usual, a storm of wind and rain was sweeping the city, and Judge Jordan had the smallest crowd so far in the course of the trial to contend with.

The request of Judge Jordan that the trial be hurried was pleasing news to the jurors, who were anxious to get to their homes, despite an unusual diversion which is allowed them in their quarters in the court house. The jurors are spending the evening in the fascinating recreation of playing "penny ante," four hundred pennies and three decks of cards being allowed them.

Must Pay Charges.

Toronto, Jan. 13.—No more bargain counter incorporations will be allowed to slip into Ontario. Companies have been securing incorporation at Ottawa and a $25 to $50 license from the Ontario Government to do business in this province. Hereafter the possession of a Dominion charter will not relieve the holders from full incorporation charges in Ontario.

The rule governing such cases in the past was as follows:

Fees for licenses are fixed in each case by order-in-council, depending largely on the amount of capital used in Ontario, calculated on the foregoing table of fees for the incorporation of domestic companies, except in the case of Dominion corporations, which may pay either $25 or $50. If the company's capital is $100,000 or less the fee is $25; if the capital exceeds $100,000, the fee is $50.

Fight on Border.

San Antonio, Tex., Jan. 13.—An Associated Press correspondent, who has been at the front in Mexico near the Texas line, sent the following despatch yesterday. "Comstock, Texas, Jan. 12—Big fight; more than forty killed. Hit myself. (Signed). Ed. O'Reilly."

BIG DOCKET WIPED OFF COURT SLATE TO-DAY

Blacklister Fined $10 for Being Drunk---Vagrant Goes to Jail for Three Months---Young Men Who Got Into Fight Are Fined.

A number of cases were heard in the Police Court this morning. The first was a charge of vagrancy against Bruce Ruddy. Bruce marched into the docket wearing a broad grin, and pleaded guilty as unconcerned as if it were a joke. He proceeded to assist the Magistrate by asking for two months on the hill. His Worship intimated that he deserved five years in the Central, but this did not quite suit Bruce's fancy. "Three months in the county jail at hard labour—and you'll be out with the rest of the April Fools," concluded the Magistrate.

A local young man was fined $2.00 for a minor offence.

Fred Barlow, charged with being drunk in a public place, was found guilty and fined $2.00. He said that he had been here for about seven months, and was employed as bartender at a local hotel. In this case, however, he got too much of his own medicine and lost his job, finally running amuck in the Police Court.

A man named Wm. Arthur was next called. He was found under the influence of liquor while on the black list. He pleaded guilty to the violation of the law and a fine of $10 was imposed. He told the Court the name of the hotel where he got his liquor, but stated that the bartender did not know him, as he did not drink there often.

Two local young men were summoned to Court for fighting on George street on Saturday night. One of the young men has a pugilistic record, and he was the man who struck the first blow, in this case. He is well known about town and is generally known as a "hard hitter." In the present instance he stood still, while the other fellow came forward and he stated to the court that he had to run or do the other thing, so he did the other thing and landed in court. He was fined $4.60 and his opponent was fined $5.40. P. C. Newhall made the arrests.

THE OFFICERS OF COURT CHEMONG WERE INSTALLED

Interesting Event Took Place Last Evening—New Organizer Has Been Appointed for This District

SOME COURT NOTES

Brother Brooker, C.R., presided at the regular semi-monthly meeting of the Court Chemong Lodge No. 530, I.O.F., which was held in the S. O. E. Hall last night. This was the first meeting in the new year and the installation of officers took place. The officers reports were read including Bro. G. W. Powell's Financial Secretary's report and Bro. Wm. McGill, Treasurer's report which showed that the affairs and finances were in a very satisfactory condition. The Court donated $5.00 to the Sick Children's Hopital, and $5 to the National Sanitorium. The officers were then installed by Bro. Frank Mullett, D.H.C.R., in their various chairs of office. Bro Mullett then briefly addressed the Court in the interests of the Order, and gave a very interesting account of his experience in the North West, where the Order is progressing very favourably. In one Court in his district there were over 200 members added to the membership roll.

Bro Mullett has been appointed Organizer for Eastern Ontario, and has decided to make this city headquarters. Arrangements are being made, under the direction of Bro Brooker, V.C.R., and Bro. Webb, P.C.R. to hold a concert and social evening in the near future.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

In the Intermediate Basketball League, two fast games were played last night, the first was between the famous Saw Bones and the Rowdies. After a most strenuous contest the Saw Bones won out. Score, 11 to 25.

Much depended on the outcome of the second game, between the Maple Leafs and Pirates. Had the Leafs won it would have left a chance for three teams, as the Pirates have not lost a game, and they were out in full force, looking for the plunder of the Leafs; and, after one of the most closely contested games of the season, Capt. Hatsie and his crew carried off the loot. Score, Pirates, 10; Maple Leafs, 7. Referee, J. J. Thompson; umpire, C. Nicholls.

Following is the standing of the League:

	Won	Lost
Pirates	4	0
Burglars	2	1
Rowdies	2	1
Maple Leafs	1	2
Saw Bones	1	3
Shamrocks	0	3

A MODERN MIRACLE!

He Had Eczema 25 Years and Doctors Said "No Cure."

Yet Zam Buk Has Worked Complete Cure.

This is the experience of a man of high reputation, widely known in Montreal, and whose case can readily be investigated. Mr. T. M. Marsh, the gentleman referred to, lives at 101 Delorimier Avenue, Montreal, and has lived there for years. For twenty-five years he had eczema on his hands and wrist. The disease first started in red blotches, which itched, and when scratched became painful. Bad sores followed, which discharged, and the discharge spread the disease until his hands were one raw, painful mass of sores. Just think of this state of affairs continuing for twenty-five years!

In that time four eminent medical men tried to cure him, and each gave up the case as hopeless in the end. Naturally, Mr. Marsh tried remedies of all kinds, but he, also, at last gave it up. For two years he had to wear gloves day and night so terrible was the pain and itching when the air got to the sores.

Then came Zam-Buk. He tried it, just as he had tried hundreds of remedies before. But he soon found out that Zam-Buk was different. Within a few weeks there were distinct signs of benefit, and a little perseverance with this great herbal balm resulted in what he had given up all hope of—a complete cure! And the cure was no temporary cure. It was permanent. He was cured nearly three years ago. Interviewed the other day, Mr. Marsh said: "The cure which Zam-Buk worked has been absolutely permanent. From the day that I was cured to the present moment I have had no trace of eczema, and I feel sure it will never return. Having suffered for twenty-five years, I had naturally concluded that my case was incurable, and I regard my cure as a modern miracle."

If you suffer from any skin trouble, cut out this article, write across it the name of this paper, and mail it with one cent stamp to pay return postage, to Zam-Buk Co., Toronto. We will forward you by return a free trial box of Zam-Buk. All druggists and stores sell this famous remedy, 50c box or three for $1.25. Refuse harmful substitutes.

KIDNEY MISERY AND BACKACHE VANISHES

A Few Doses Make Kidneys Act Fine and End Urinary Trouble

No reader of this paper, whether man or woman, need be miserable because of Backache or kidney or bladder disorders.

The time to cure kidney trouble is while it is only trouble — Before it settles into Dropsy, Gravel, Diabetes or Bright's Disease.

Pape's Diuretic acts at once upon the kidneys, bladder and entire urinary system, cleanses, heals and regulates these organs, ducts and glands and completes the cure within a few days. The moment you suspect any kidney or urinary derangement, or feel a constant, dull backache, or notice that the urine is thick, cloudy offensive or full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, you should begin taking Pape's Diuretic as directed with the knowledge that there is no other remedy, at any price, made anywhere else in the world, which will effect so thorough and prompt a cure.

Misery in the back, sides or loins sick headache, Prostatic trouble, rheumatism and darting pains, heart palpitations, bilious stomach, dizziness, sleeplessness, listless, weak worn-out feeling and other symptoms caused by inactive, sluggish kidneys simply vanish. Uncontrollable urination (especially at night), smarting discoloured water and all bladder misery ends.

Your physician, pharmacist, banker or any mercantile agency will vouch for the responsibility of Pape, Thompson & Pape, of Cincinnati, Ohio, who prepare Pape's Diuretic — 50 cent treatment—sold by every druggist in the world.

DOCTOR ON THE STAND IN THE FENTON CASE

Physician Who Examined the Body Says Death Was Caused by Blows With a Heavy Club and That a Fall Could Not Have Been Responsible--Prisoner's Mother Testifies

Hamilton, Jan. 13.—The passages between counsel in the Fenton murder trial have been one of the most interesting features of the affair so far. Yesterday George Tait Blackstock, K.C., and George S. Lynch-Staunton, K.C., had several more bitter exchanges. Mr. Staunton objected a number of times to Blackstock's mode of examining the witnesses, and Mr. Blackstock made similar objections, until it was necessary for Justice Teetzel to act as peacemaker between them.

George Milburn, ex-reeve of Saltfleet, and an intimate friend of the murdered man, said he told Tom that his father had complained to him of the way the son was acting toward him, and that he had threatened to sell the farm, thereby putting Tom and his wife out of the house. He said he went up with Tom to the barn, when ... returned from Hamilton, ... Tom refused to look at the ... Mr. Staunton accused the witness of doing all he could to throw suspicion on Tom.

J. W. Finton, the prisoner's brother, explained that when removing a lounge which came to him as a part of his father's furniture, $60 in Traders' Bank bills were found under the head of it. The witness said he went to the jail at the request of Mr. Staunton to see if Tom had a cut on his finger, but forgot it when he got there. He added that he did not have to look for the cut, and Mr. Staunton replied that he might have made it his business to do so, as he was the prisoner's brother. The witness protested that Mr. Staunton was trying to impute something to him, and told him that he did not like what he said.

"I have not said anything," said Mr. Staunton.

"It's the way he says it," chipped in Mr. Blackstock.

Mr. J. W. Finton said she noticed coldness between Tom and his father, and that he and his wife were not at the old home for Christmas with the rest of the family.

David Muir, cashier of the Traders' Bank at Stoney Creek, said he cashed a check for $100 for Elijah Finton several days before his death. The witness said that Mrs. Tom Finton did not have an account with the bank, but it was subsequently learned that she had, and that it was under the name of Mrs. Tom Finton, and not Mrs. Bella Finton, the name which he had looked for.

At the conclusion of the morning's session, the prisoner's friends all crowded around him and congratulated him on the good fight being made for him. His wife, a pretty, girlish-looking woman, her face much flushed with anxious excitement, shyly approached him, and after shaking hands urged him to "cheer up." He laughed brightly, and thereby showed that he was not in need of encouragement.

Six of the crown's witnesses were heard on Wednesday, and eight yesterday morning. There are twenty-two crown witnesses altogether, and six or seven defence witnesses. At this rate of progress a conclusion in the trial cannot possibly be reached before to-night at the earliest. Both sides are making an effort to get the hearing over by Saturday, so as not to have the jury locked up over Sunday.

At yesterday afternoon's session Dr. ... told of being summoned to the Finton farm and finding the body lying with the arms folded across the breast. The skull was crushed in on top, and there were pools of blood twelve inches from the body.

The skull being produced, the doctor indicated in detail how it was cracked. He did not think that, had the deceased fallen by accident where he was found, the arms would have been folded as they were. In answer to Mr. Blockstock, he said he thought death was caused by a blow on the head.

ATTACK ON WEST

MEMBERS ANGRY

Ottawa, Jan. 13.—For over an hour in the House of Commons yesterday the west "hit back" to an article which both the Prime Minister and the Opposition leader described as maliciously libellous, published in the English periodical edited by Horatio Bottomley, the eccentric financier, journalist, and Parliamentarian. The Canadian west and its people had been anathematized. Settlers were represented as freezing and starving to death, and gruesome pictures were drawn of the hard-ships alleged to have been experienced. Corruption was described as rife, and officialdom as a by-word for robbery, while the women were declared to be of the lowest class. The article added that the English settlers were discriminated against in favor of Germans and Americans. All of which, when brought to the attention of the House by Mr. Lake (Qu'Appelle)—himself of English birth—caused some vigorous western plain speaking from the representatives to the sunset side of the great lakes.

Dr. Schaffner (Souris) complained that he must necessarily express his sentiment in thought, as the language he would use would be censored by Parliamentary propriety.

Dr. Clark (Red Deer), however, found opportunity on the incident to ventilate what he termed an English-born Canadian's opinion of "the fool talk of British decadence with which defeated and discredited Unionist politicians sought to ignorance into disquiet." He alluded to the address of Sir Joseph Lawrence to the Empire Club in Toronto, in which the latter declared that the price Britain was paying for free trade was one million paupers, as the utterance of a man who was either ignorant or irresponsible.

Mr. Ralph Smith (Nanaimo) opined that the article complained of was penned by "a degenerate, useless Englishman who had failed to make good."

"I have no respect for that freedom of the press," quoth Mr. R. L. Borden, "which permits a man in a representative position to publish what he knows to be thoroughly and contemptibly false."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier was grateful that the matter had been brought to the attention of the House. "Not that the statements carry weight," observed the Premier, "because they are so false that they carry their own repudiation, but because of the malice with which they are evidently actuated." It was significant that the libels had been most vigorously met by the English-born members from the west. The allegations were dispelled in no more emphatic way than by the presence of so many of these gentlemen in the Canadian House of Commons.

In the Senate yesterday Senator Landry asked if the Government had given Dr. Grenfell financial aid to place draught reindeer in Canadian Labrador, and, if Dr. Grenfell had not placed the reindeer in Canada, would the Government give further aid.

Sir Richard Cartwright said the Government had granted such aid, and was satisfied with the manner in which Dr. Grenfell had carried out the undertaking. Further aid would be granted.

On motion of Senator Landry the Senate ordered a statement of sums received by the National Battlefields Commission, the expenses of the commission and payments for land.

Senator Lougheed said that the Senate had come back from a long vacation with the expectation of finding a large amount of business ready for its consideration, but had been disappointed, as apparently there was really nothing ready for it. He asked what the prospects were of the Government providing the Senate with some work to do.

Sir Richard Cartwright said that the Senate and the Commons had come back from their vacation on the same date, and this might account for the conditions of which Senator Lougheed complained, as bills had not come up from the Commons. However, he expected that there would be a large amount of legislation placed before the Senate within a very short time.

WILL ALTER THE RULES

Canada Agrees to Some Minor Fisheries Requests—Newfoundland is Still Out

DECISION REACHED

Washington, Jan. 13.—The commissioners for the United States and Canada who have been considering the fishery regulations, have reached a decision. The Canadian and Newfoundland Governments undertake to change the existing regulations to remove the objections of the United States, thus making it unnecessary to call upon the board of experts.

The objections to the Newfoundland legislation were found not so easy of reconciliation, and Sir Edward Morris, Premier of Newfoundland, left for home last night with the further task ahead of him of drafting legislation which, it is hoped, may be accepted at a later diplomatic conference. The rock on which Newfoundland and the United States split was the request of the latter that their fishermen should have the right to purchase bait from Newfoundland fishermen without any restrictions, and use it for fishing on the Banks. Sir Edward Morris so far has been unwilling to concede this, and it is said he is desirous of securing in return for it the removal of the American duty on Newfoundland fish. Canada grants the American fishermen free bait now under a modus vivendi. As to the free entry of Canadian fish into the United States, there are those who look for that as one of the provisions under the pending trade treaty, should one be enacted.

The conferences have been going on since Monday morning and followed similar conferences by the State Department with representatives of the Gloucester fishing interests. The formal statement of the outcome issued at the State Department is as follows:

"As a result of these conferences an understanding was reached that instead of calling upon the commission of experts appointed under the award to determine the reasonableness of certain existing fisheries regulations to which the United States had objected, Canada will proceed voluntarily to make such changes in the existing regulations as are necessary to remove the objections of the United States.

"The effect of this arrangement is to make it unnecessary to reassemble the (Hague) tribunal to act upon the report of the experts, and eliminates any further proceedings at The Hague. All differences which may arise in the future as to these or any future regulations which cannot be disposed of by diplomatic negotiations will be referred to the permanent mixed fisheries commission, to be established in accordance with recommendations of the award."

The regulations thus to be modified are understood to refer to the use of purse seines, Sunday fishing, right of search and like subjects.

The United States was represented in the conference by Secretary Knox, Counsellor Chandler P. Anderson, Robert Lansing, one of the counsel of the United States in The Hague arbitration, and Hugh M. Smith, acting commissioner of fisheries. The British were represented by Ambassador Bryce, Sir Edward Morris, Prime Minister of Newfoundland; Sir Allan Aylesworth, Minister of Justice of Canada; L. P. Brodeur, Minister of Marine and Fisheries of Canada; Geo. Young, secretary of the British embassy; Dr. Wakeham of the Canadian fisheries department, and Captain O'Reilly of the Newfoundland fisheries department.

Stranded In Europe.

Boston, Jan. 13.—The filing of the bankruptcy schedule of the Collevert Tours Co., shows that between 25 and 30 Americans who had paid for tickets for a tour around the world are stranded at various points in Europe and Asia. The habilities of the company aggregate nearly $49,000, with assets of less than $2,500.

When the blood isn't properly filtered the poisons that ought to be cast off by the kidneys are sent back through the system, and it's hardly to be wondered that backaches and lame backs come to make life miserable.

Doan's Kidney Pills are a specific for all kidney troubles. They begin by expelling all the poisonous matter from the kidneys, and then heal the delicate membranes and make their action regular and natural.

Mrs. A. H. Hutton, Jr., McCreary, Man., writes:—"Two years ago last spring I had a very severe pain in the small of my back. When I would rise it seemed as if my back would break. My kidneys were very badly out of order, and I would have to get up three or four times during the night. I took one box of Doan's Kidney Pills and they effected a cure.

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50 cents per box or 3 for $1.25 at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co. Limited, Toronto, Ont. If ordering direct specify "Doan's."

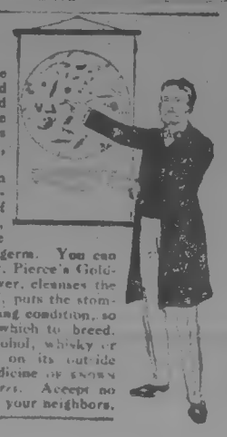
Afraid of Ghosts



Many people are afraid of ghosts. Few people are afraid of germs. Yet the ghost is a fancy and the germ is a fact. If the germ could be magnified to a size equal to its terrors it would appear more terrible than any fire-breathing dragon. Germs can't be avoided. They are in the air we breathe, the water we drink.

The germ can only prosper when the condition of the system gives it free scope to establish itself and develop. When there is a deficiency of vital force, languor, restlessness, a sallow cheek, a hollow eye, when the appetite is poor and the sleep is broken, it is time to guard against the germ. You can fortify the body against all germs by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It increases the vital power, cleanses the system of clogging impurities, enriches the blood, puts the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition in working condition, so that the germ finds no weak or tainted spot in which to breed. "Golden Medical Discovery" contains no alcohol, whisky or habit-forming drugs. All its ingredients printed on its outside wrapper. It is not a secret nostrum but a medicine of known COMPOSITION and with a record of 40 years of cures. Accept no substitute—there is no thing "just as good." Ask your neighbors.

Says Eddy Will Is Void.

Concord, N.H., Jan. 13.—An opinion, signed by former U. S. Senator William E. Chandler and others, to the effect that the will of Mrs. Eddy Baker Glover Eddy, founder of the Christian Science Church, is void, and that she therefore died intestate, and her estate "passed on at her death to her next of kin" was made public here last night. It is not stated whether there will be a contest of the will by Mrs. Eddy's relatives. The matter given out for publication here consists of a letter from Mr. Chandler to Hannis Taylor, professor of constitutional and international law at George Washington University, Washington, D.C., and the reply from Prof. Taylor. This reply contains the opinion that Mrs. Eddy's will is void, and to Prof. Taylor's signature to the opinion have been added those of Mr. Chandler, Attorneys John W. Kelley of Portsmouth and De Witt C. Howe of Concord, who were associated with Mr. Chandler as counsel for the "next friends," and William L. ..., a lawyer of Washington.

Taking No Chances.

London, Ont., Jan. 13.—The preparations have all but been completed for the arrangement of the patrol and the care of the hydro power line from here to the Falls.

It is the intention of the commission to erect, as soon as possible, a big horse-power automobile at each fifty miles.

In the local barn there will be four horses; one to work from here to St. Mary's another to St. Thomas, and one on the main line and a truck horse. The horses will work ten miles each way out of the barns, and the autos 25 miles each way, and the latter will be used only for night and hurry calls.

There will be two men on each patrol, and they will spend the night at watch-stations erected at ten-mile points, to be on hand for any emergency whatever. There will be a 'phone in these houses, and also cooking apparatus, beds, etc.

In this way the commission mean to have the very best possible service given the cities and towns all over western Ontario.

GREAT INTEREST IN TO-NIGHT'S BIG GAME

PETERBOROUGH TEAM PLAYING IN TRENTON TO-NIGHT

Intermediates Have Three Cripples on the Line-up But Are Confident of Giving the Easterners a Hard Battle on Their Own Ice---Examiner Office Will Have the Score.

There is the greatest possible interest among the fans of Peterborough in to-night's big intermediate hockey battle at Trenton and few hockey bugs will go to bed before they have heard the score. The Peterborough team left on the 1.40 G. T. R. train this afternoon in charge of Billy Breen confident and determined to give Trenton a merry battle on their own big rink The Petes are working under a big handicap to-night. Bond has broken thumb. Ray is just back in the game after a ten days' rest on account of a deep gash in his foot, and "Bud" Kelly has been in bed for two days as the result of a vicious slash across the knee in the game at Cobourg on Monday. However, they are determined to put up the hardest game that is in them and the big sheet of fast ice should suit the speedy forwards to a nicety. Trenton should know that they have been in a game anyway. The half-time and full time score will be telephoned to the Examiner office and interested fans may learn the result by calling up Bell phones 57 or 214 or Machine phone 57.

ROOTERS CLUB IS TO ORGANIZE TO SUPPORT THE PETERBOROUGH TEAMS

That is the latest proposition in hockey circles. It is proposed to have an organization of say one hundred or one hundred and fifty rooters to encourage the two Peterborough teams in their ice battles. Arrangements are being made for the formation of the club and also for securing a block of seats for the different matches, so that the club can always be together. A number of good parodies and yells have already been prepared and the organization of the club will be gone ahead with at once. All fans who are interested and would like to join the club are asked to leave their names at the office at Brock street rink, The club will probably get in its first work in the Lindsay-Peterborough game next Tuesday. In any event it is desired to have the club in good working order for the intermediate game against Belleville here on Thursday of next week.

EXCITING FINISH IN A BANK LEAGUE GAME

Talk about your nerve-racking finishes there never was a more exciting wind-up to a Stanley Cup game than the climax of yesterday afternoon's Bank League between the Ottawa-Dominion and the Royal-Commerce combinations, which was won by the Ottawa-Royal by 6 goals to 5. The ultimate winners for four fifths of the game had a wide margin on the losers. They rattled in four goals before the half and followed up with a brace of counters soon after the rest period and with ten minutes to play were away out in front with a comfortable lead of six goals to nothing. Then came the sudden reverse of form. The garnet and gray shirts of the Royal-Commerce aggregation suddenly came to life and they started to buzz around the Ottawa-Dominion nets like a swarm of hornets. Finally they scored and followed the counter up with another in thirty seconds. The Ottawa-Dominion team rallied for time, with their backs to the wall, but in spite of their efforts the Hunter street conglomeration hammered in three more goals and only needed another to tie the score. The excitement was so intense that Billy Breen almost fell out of the gallery. The garnet aggregation kept tumbling through into the Ottawa-Dominion nets and only a half dozen good stops by Milne of shots from close in saved the bacon, as time was called with the O-D team still in front by the narrow margin of one goal. Hague Sawers refereed the game satisfactorily.

SOME HOCKEY PROVERBS

Checking back is the life of the defence.

It is better to have shot and missed than never to have shot at all.

Look before you shoot.

United you score, divided you're easy for the defence.

There is no use starting to check back after the game is lost.

A roving centre gathers no goals.

A check in time saves a score.

There is no use crying over a bad decision.

A soft night turns away combination.

DENISON IS NOT ON

T. C. S. Faculty Refused Permission —Coughlin at Cover in To-night's Game

The Peterborough Intermediate O. H. A team will be without the services of Fred Denison in to-night's game at Trenton. The faculty of Trinity College School, Port Hope, which he is attending, refuse to allow him permission to play, at least to-night. Jerry Coughlin, the speedy rover of the Grillers, who has been practised at cover-point, in order to be ready in case of emergency, will jump into the game to-night. The line up at Trenton should just about fit Coughlin. The team will line up as follows:—

Point—Bond.
Cover Point—Coughlin.
Rover—Ray (Captain).

WHITEHEAD REFEREE

MANY FANS ARE GOING

To Lindsay With the Grillers on Tuesday Night—Special Train Will Leave at 7:15 O'clock

GAME IS NEEDED

Going to Lindsay with the Grillers on Tuesday night?"

Better get in line with the rest of the crowd as from all accounts a big bunch of fans will travel to Midgetville to see the return battle with Cap. Simpson's Cubs. Cobourg's victory this week in Lindsay puts it up to the Grillers to repeat the exploit, and the blue and white team will go up to Lindsay with the firm determination of making good. The youngsters are turning out splendidly to every practice and are in grand shape at the present time. Trainer Breen spends a lot of time with the Grillers as he is very confident of their ability to go some distance. The special G. T. R. train will leave Peterborough at 7.15 o'clock and return immediately after the game.

The fare will be $1.05 for adults and 55 cents for children.

THE FEET IN PRISON
Tightly imprisoned in the modern shoe the feet perspire and the skin is chafed and irritated until it is in anything but a healthy condition. Corns and bunions are formed and walking becomes torture. Possibly you never thought of Dr. Chase's Ointment in this connection but it brings wonderful relief and comfort almost instantly. Its soothing, healing effects are magical.

ORIENTAL TO HAVE RETURNS

The Oriental hotel has made arrangements to have complete returns of to-night's intermediate O. H. A. game at Trenton, and fans who are interested in the result can keep in touch with the game by calling at the hotel.

SOME HOCKEY HAPPENINGS

The Railroaders challenge the Pill-Pounders to a game of hockey, to be played as soon as possible at Brock Street Rink.

The Peterborough Junior O. H. A. team will practise to-night in preparation for the game next Tuesday night in Lindsay. Every player is asked to be out to-night at seven o'clock.

The local intermediate O. H. A. season will open next Thursday night, when the speedy Belleville team will clash with the Petes at Brock street rink. Belleville trimmed Cobourg 10 to 4 and held the crack Trenton seven to a 7 to 6 score.

"PIMPLES"
Broke Out All Over Her Face.
Pimples are caused, almost entirely, by bad blood, and there is only one way to get rid of them, and that is to get at the seat of the trouble by using a good reliable blood purifying medicine.
Burdock Blood Bitters has been on the market for 35 years, and is one of the very best blood medicines procurable. After using it you will find that the pimples have disappeared, and you will have a beautiful clear complexion.
Mrs. Robert McNab, Badjeros, Ont., writes:—"I am greatly pleased to report the benefit I have derived from the use of Burdock Blood Bitters. About a year ago I became so weak and run down I could scarcely walk, and pimples broke out all over my face. I tried one thing after another, but nothing seemed to do me any good. I was advised by a lady friend to try B.B.B., and before I had used one bottle I felt it was doing me good so I used three bottles, and I am now well and strong, and the pimples have all disappeared."

PETERBOROUGH ICE RACES TO HAVE MANY STARTERS

Secretary Hall is Being Besieged by Inquiries---Track is in Splendid Condition and Records May Go by the Boards if the Weather is Favourable.

The ice races under the auspices of the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition management on Monday and Tuesday of next week promise to be the classiest and best contested harness horse events ever seen on the local track. The racing at Lindsay this week was away above the average and all the horses which took part there, as well as a swarm of other speed merchants, are probable local entries. "Secretary Hall says that he is being besieged by enquiries from horsemen and that there will undoubtedly be big fields in every event. The track has been put in splendid condition and will be very fast if the weatherman does his part next week. Under the probable conditions it would not cause much surprise if the local track record over ice was broken on Monday or Tuesday. There will be a big crowd of spectators, as many are coming in from outside points, the special rates on the railways proving a big inducement.

Splendid Racing At Lindsay Ice Meet---Percy H. Was Unlucky

LINDSAY, ONT., JAN. 12.—The winter harness meeting of the Lindsay Racing Association concluded here today under most favourable conditions. The weather was clear and frosty, and the track in excellent condition. The attendance showed considerable improvement over yesterday. Fully a baker's dozen of the fair sex braved the conditions, while only five took the chance yesterday. The card was made up of the 2.18 pace and the free-for-all. The latter included a very ordinary lot. Only four starters faced Starter Smith, of Buffalo in each of the events. Furioso so far outclassed his field in the 2.18 pace that he was held out in the betting. Well handled by Powell, Furioso shot to the front at the start, and made every post a winning one, winning the event in straight heats. Berlin Belle was a close second in the opening heat, and Nettie Ethan and Forest Pointer offered the contention in the second. Berlin Belle made a bad break in the first quarter in this heat, and ceased to try thereafter. Furioso "toe-roped" his field in the concluding heat, with Berlin Belle again in second position, a length in front of Nettie Ethan. Percy H., the favourite for the free-for-all, made a "jimmy" and threw a shoe just after the start of the first heat, and Hal Direct was returned an easy winner. The Oshawa-owned horse also repeated in the second, but only beat Harry Mack in a neck in a tight fit. McMahon, driver of Harry Mack, was called to the stand for "laying up" in the first heat. Summary

First Heat, 2.18 pace, purse $200—
Furioso, J. Powell, Orillia 1 1 1
Berlin Belle, J. Daley, Berlin 2 4 2
Forest Pointer, J. McPhee, Toronto 4 2 4
Nettie Ethan, R. J. McBride, Toronto 3 3 3

Percy H., M. Storey, Peterborough 4 3 3

The third and final heat of the free-for-all was a repetition of the second, Hal Direct beating Harry Mack home by half a length in a drive.

A PAINFUL INJURY

Brock Street Rink Employee Struck on Head by Wicked Wrist Shot

painful accident yesterday afternoon. He was working at the front of the building while a number of the intermediate O. H. A. team were having a final workout for to-night's game against Trenton. A bullet-like wrist shot from centre ice by Sorel tore through the wire netting at the end of the rink and the puck struck Vinetto on the head, inflicting a deep and painful gash which required medical attention.

TEACHER'S NERVES
Teachers often have the reputation of being cross when the trouble is with the nerves rather than the disposition. Mr. A. Sutherland, Principal South Bar School, Sydney, N.S., writes: "I was nervous and worried, had indigestion and headache and other ills. Doctors failed me. You can depend on me to recommend Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food for I believe it has entirely cured me." Tired brains and feeble nerves are soon restored by this celebrated food cure.

Fraternal Prescription For Nervous Wrecks

(From "Medical Reports.")

Thousands of men, nervous wrecks, have found the following "fraternal prescription" a blessing and a boon. Such men lack aggressiveness, they are timid, nervous, easily discouraged, lacking in self esteem and confidence. They suffer from cold extremities, thin watery blood, nervousness, sleeplessness, frightful dreams, trembling hands and limbs, unsteady gait and an absolute inability to perform the ordinary natural and rational acts or duties such as any healthy normal man can.

A vigorous man works, plays, eats and sleeps always with the keenest enjoyment. The greater his exertions are, the stronger become his appetite and slumbers.

The nervous man, seems always tired and worn out. Retiring brings no relief. Sleep brings no refreshment, all because of an abnormal condition of the nervous system, brought about by—well, no matter what — the desire is for relief and freedom with rich, red blood, surging through the body supplying the sensitive nerves with all the power of sensation, so that sleep is refreshing, food is delicious work is play and play is pleasure.

This treatment is thorough, simple and correct. The ingredients are used in filling various prescriptions and can be obtained of any well stocked druggists and mixed at home without embarrassment or questions.

Obtain three ounces of syrup sarsaparilla compound in a six ounce bottle. To this, add one ounce of compound fluid balmwort and let stand two hours, Then add one ounce of tincture cadomene compound (not cardamom), and one ounce of compound essence cardiol. Mix, shake well and take a teaspoonful after each meal and one when retiring until a vigorous, bounding new-health takes hold of the tired, exhausted nerves. Only a few weeks treatment will astonish, and rejuvenate, because the treatment is the right thing at the right time, and contains no deceptive opiates.

To Form Club

BELEVILLE, JAN. 12.—A large and representative meeting was held in this city this afternoon of yeomen of Prince Edward, Hastings, Peterborough and Northumberland counties who are breeders of Holstein cattle. It was decided to form a club, and the name selected was the Belleville District Holstein Breeders' Club. The officers selected were: Hon. President, B. Mallory, Belleville; President, A D. Foster, Bloomfield; Vice President G. A. Brethen, Norwood; Secretary Treasurer, F. R. Mallory, Frankford Directors—J. A. Caskey, G. A. Anderson, E. Terrill, W. Woot and B. R Leavens. Over thirty of those present signified their intention of becoming members by the payment of an annual fee, which was agreed upon. In the near future the club will hold its first annual banquet in this city, a which prominent speakers will be secured. The club starts out under favourable auspices, and promises to be effective in its organization.

Clipping From Newspaper Is Used As Money

A remarkable story hailing from Stratford was received yesterday by Mr. J. R. Cartwright, Deputy Attorney-General.

The story came in a letter, and enclosed was what looked something like a Traders' Bank $5 bill. Examination revealed the fact that it was merely two newspaper reproductions of a Traders' Bank bill pasted together.

This crude bill was actually passed at Stratford, and by a boy at that!

The reproductions were printed in a newspaper some time ago, shortly after the recovery of a number of unsigned bank bills stolen from the Traders' Bank. A Stratford lad saw the reproduction, and seized with an idea, got another paper and, clipping out the two pictures, pasted them together.

The lad passed the bill, but how soon the error was discovered was not explained. The Stratford authorities sent the "bill" to Mr. Cartwright.

It is not likely that any action will be taken against the boy "bank-note" manufacturer.

Will Now Hear Other Side.

Ottawa, Jan. 13.—Twenty members of the Canadian Manufacturers Association are here arranging for the presentation of the memorials on the question of the tariff.

A preliminary meeting was held yesterday afternoon and another last night after the arrival of the Montreal delegation. The finishing touches are then put upon the memorial.

The manufacturers will be received to-day by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Sir Richard Cartwright and other Ministers.

The Panama Canal.

Washington, Jan. 13—President Taft yesterday sent to Congres a special message urging the fortification of the Panama Canal and recommending that an appropriation of $5,000,000 for the initiation of the work on the proposed defences be made at the present session of Congress. He forwarded with the message the report of the special army and navy board, recommending fortification of the canal.

Special AT THE Royal
FOR ONLY
3-Days Next Week-3

Big as have been some of the extra attractions at the Royal Theatre in the past, the bill arranged for the first three days of next week will undoubtedly prove the best offering ever given at the popular local theatre. A big feature of the bill will be the wonderful performance by Prof. Wm. Rand's musical, dramatic, mental and acrobatic dogs, a splendid troupe of magnificently trained canines with a varied repertoire of interesting and surprising tricks. Especially prominent is Col. Curney, the only dumb beast in the world, spelling any word and bowing to the audience at the concluding letter. In addition to Prof. Rand's dogs the programme includes Mlle Reno, the Queen of Magic, who performs a number of mystifying tricks that seem to border on the supernatural, and Nebur and Cauna in a dramatic, musical playlet entitled, "The Last Dollar." This is without exception the biggest vaudeville program ever offered to Peterborough people at anything like these prices. The usual admission charges will not be changed even in view of the very special nature of the programme.

WRECKS COURT IN 90 MINUTE BATTLE

Examiner Special.

NEW YORK, JAN. 14.—For one and a half hours Thomas Sullivan, of no address, kept the Night Court in an uproar early yesterday by hurdling benches, throwing tiles picked from the floor and smashing a window in the pen with a bench. Finally an ambulance took him to Bellevue on the supposition that he might be laboring under a mental strain.

Sullivan had been taken into the courtroom charged with drunkenness. The clerk saw nothing strange in the prisoner's demeanor. "He was an averaged sized man of docile bearing. "Why did you get drunk?" asked the clerk. He jumped when he heard the reply.

The official, after he returned to earth, looked and turned pale.

"Don't shoot!" yelled Sullivan, shielding his face with his arm.

"You'd better take him to the pen," the clerk suggested to the policeman.

Sullivan thereupon broke loose. He dashed toward the rear of the room, hurdling the benches as he went. Court attendants and policemen pursued. They were out of training and several fell. Sullivan picked up a bench and started for the "red devil." A policeman tripped him, and six men piled on his prostrate form. He was finally lodged in the pen and recess was declared.

Then the real entertainment began. Sullivan shouldered the heavy bench in the pen and used it as a battering ram against the door. The door withstood the ramming. Then Sullivan kicked loose tiles on the floor and bombarded court attendants. They fled. He shoved the settee through the window opening into the shaft. It was then decided he was not safe in the pen. All went in prepared to battle to the death. There was no battle. Sullivan let himself be led docilely to the other pen, which is windowless.

But when locked in he decided he needed a bath, so he turned on the water and the room was soon flooded. A call to Bellevue brought an ambulance. Sullivan refused to leave the pen. Then followed a battle of the bath. Sullivan was put in a straightjacket. "Crazy as a loon!" exclaimed the surgeon as he drove off in the ambulance.

HOME FAT REDUCER

For the benefit of those who wish to reduce their flesh quickly and safely, we will give the receipt and directions in full for a simple household remedy that can be obtained at trifling cost from any good drug store; 1-2 ounce Marmola, 3-4 ounce Fluid Extract Cascara Aromatic and 4 3-4 ounces Peppermint Water. All three are cheap and wholesome, but you should take care to get an unbroken package so that you get Marmola and not a substitute. When you get home mix the three together by shaking them together in a large bottle and take one teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime.

Follow these directions and you will have the best fat reducer that money can buy. It will take off the flesh at the rate of at least two pounds a week without disarranging the stomach or causing wrinkles, while best of all, no exercising or dieting is required to help it out. You can get results and at the same time take things easy and eat what you like as much as you like—and whenever you like.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

AN' I'LL have tomatoes and cucumbers and lettuce in the bed behind the barn and some beans in the other one, and Bennie Martin is going to help me weed on shares, 'cause the storeman bought Billy Loomis' father's vegetables last summer and said he wished he had more—an'—an'—I'm going to save the dollar grandma gave me Christmas for seeds and all the money I get doing errands, and mama, please, please can't I have this spring rag money?"

With this final breathless query Philip, who had been teetering frantically back and forth from one foot to another in front of his mother, flung himself into a chair beside her and gazed up at her with an eagerness that it seemed to me must draw consent from a heart of stone.

Evidently there is some substance harder than stone for this was what Phillip got for an answer:

"No, you can't, Phillip, not for any such nonsense. I know just what it would mean. You'd have a whole lot of dirty boys around here tracking in dirt and losing all our garden tools, and then you'd get tired of it you'd forget all about weeding and it wouldn't come to anything at all. You help your father with the flower beds and I guess that's all the gardening you'll want. And now you go right out and wipe your feet. You've tracked in a lot of snow."

Were you ever all at once conscious of a cloud passing over the sun on a beautiful bright day by the sudden wiping out of the sunlight in the room or the landscape?

Well, that's just the way the beautiful light of enthusiasm that had been shining in Phillip's eager little face went out—just as if it had been suddenly blotted out.

I should think Phillip's mother would have wanted to cry when she saw it.

But she didn't show the slightest sign of any such desire. Instead she turned to me and remarked impatiently:

"I never saw such a boy for crazy schemes. Half a dozen times a day I have to nip some such foolishness in the bud."

Think of it. Half a dozen times in a day that wonderful, eager enthusiasm that made Phillip's snub nosed freckled little face almost beautiful, was roughly blotted out.

And yet there's nothing on earth Phillip's mother cares so much for as her children.

Queer way to show it, isn't it?

And yet a pretty common way? On the whole I guess there's more wet blanket mothers than the otherkind.

It's so painfully easy when you've left the land of wonderful possibilities and crossed the bourne into the commonplace city of grown-up-ness, to forget how you felt when you lived in that other land.

It is so very much easier to discourage impracticable plans that may mean much bother to you than to encourage and direct them.

But is the easiest way usually sure to be the best,

Does the road to success in mother hood or in life usually follow the line of least resistance?

Oh, yes, I know just what you poor overworked mothers are saying, that it's easy enough to talk but that anyone who has as much to do as you have and knows as much about children's crazy schemes and how much work they make and how they pester you for feeling that way. But isn't it a feeling worth overcoming?

The most blessed birthright of youth is this same, sweet, impracticable enthusiasm, this same blissful incapability of seeing obstacles, this same golden belief in its own capabilities.

You know how soon the boy will tire of this new delight. It is one of the sad grey lessons that you learned in the city of grown-up-ness.

But wouldn't you, if you could, unlearn that lesson, have again the impractical and sweet enthusiasm, sweet impractical enthusiasms, sweet im practical enthusiasms of youth?

"Know again the goal is glorious
Be again but frank and twenty."

And will you by being a wet blanket, force that les on on your children one moment before they have to learn it?

* * * * * * * * * * *

IN a book of essays that I was reading the other day this sentence smote me into thoughtfulness:

"How many, many homes there are from which gaiety has been banished not by sorrow but by grievances and complaints."

If I were a minister I think I should preach on that thought just about once a year.

I was talking with a young girl the other day who had just lost her sister.

It was the first death in a family of six.

"Do you know what one of the saddest thoughts is to me?" she said. "It's the thought that while we had each other before that terrible thing happened we weren't half so happy as we should have been. We let the most foolish little quarrels and grievances and troubles make us unhappy. Just think of it! When we had each other and ought to have been perfectly happy. It makes me fairly wild to think of it."

I wonder if there is anyone who after a loss does not think something like that. "Why wasn't I happier when I had so much to make me happy? Why did I let things keep me from being happy?"

You people who have all your dear ones with you, who have one of those hearths where there is no "vacant chair" are you making the most of that great blessing?

Are you being as happy as you ought to be?

Or are you letting "grievances and complaints" and other little troubles and annoyances mar that precious happiness?

Did this Christmas which has just passed you have a bitter, sweet memory of how "big brother used to bring his presents down Christmas eve for mother to help him wrap them up," or "how little sister did scream last year when she found it was actually a 'real live gold ring,'" to sadden your day?

But are you as absolutely entirely happy as you should have been? Or did you let some little misunderstanding, some foolish dissatisfaction taint that happiness?

Some day when there IS a vacant chair will you have to say, "Oh, if I had only been happier when I could have!"

And then you people who HAVE one or two vacant chairs, who can't be as cloudlessly happy as you used to be, are you being as happy as you can be with what you have left? You look back on "the day before" with longing. Do you realize that you may sometime look back on these present days with equal longing? Are you making the most of them?

You don't like to be reminded of such dismal possibilities, you say.

Forgive me. I know it is time to feel sorrow when it comes.

But don't you think my suggestion is a wise one?

CONVICT FINDS NOTE IN BOTTLE

Special to The Examiner.

SAN FRANCISCO, JAN. 13.—Through the instrumentality of a bottled message that drifted in from the sea, William Owens, a life convict at San Quentin Prison, has made a friend who is trying to induce Gov Gillett to issue a pardon.

On the Fourth of July outing in 1908, William J. Ahern, editor of the Coast Shoe Reporter, wrote on his card "Good luck to the finder," and placed the card in a bottle, which he tossed into the ocean. A short time ago this bottle, after over two years among the waves, was washed onto the prison beach where Owens was working. He opened it and wrote to Ahern.

Impressed by the circumstances Ahern is now trying to obtain a pardon for Owens who was sentenced frm Mendocino County for complicity in a murder. He says the jury disagreed on his first trial and he then accepted a suggestion to plead guilty and take a light sentence. Instead of a light sentence he was given a life term.

THERE IS A DIFFERENCE

Between Promises and Actual Results

Promises won't overcome hair trouble. The manufacturers of Newbro's Herpicide promise nothing which is not justified by an intelligent use of this preparation. The desired end ultimately becomes an accomplished fact. This is the reason that Herpicide has thousands of satisfied friends all over the world.

By keeping the scalp clean and healthy and destroying the dandruff germ, Newbro's Herpicide makes beautiful hair. Herpicide prevents the hair from falling and allows it to grow unhindered and naturally except in case of chronic baldness which is incurable.

HER $80 AND HOPE OF A HUSBAND FLOWN

Examiner Special.

NEW YORK, JAN 14.—The practises of Joseph G. Robin, indicted President of the Northern Bank, have broken the bank account and the heart of Teeney Feeboflaur. For Teeney has lost eighty whole dollars, and for a time the hope of a husband.

Teeney is eighten years old and works for Mrs. Gus Bodenheimer of the Mount Morris Apartments. She came from Pressburg, Hungary, two years ago to win $900—it costs that much for a husband in Pressburg, says Teeney—and had saved $80. She put it in a branch of the Northern in Second Avenue.

As Teeney snuggled down into the pillows last night and wept she told all about it.

"I guess it's all gone," she moaned, "and my husband is further away than ever. Yesterday four girls and myself went down just to look at the building where my $80 had been and—I couldn't help it—I just cried and cried. It wasn't for the money, but I was afraid I was going to be an old maid. In two years I'll be twenty, and that's the longest any girl in Pressburg waits. If she waits longer everybody says 'Old maid,' and it's a disgrace!

"But I'm going to work hard again. Maybe I'll get some of my money back, and I'm going to save again, because I haven't much time. I'm eighteen now."

R'y Offices, Room 401, Union Station. We have since that no less than 14 calls from different officials in the Union Station building for our stenographers. Is 30-day stenography a dream? Is it a poor cheap substitute as some may tell you? If we cannot prove the above to be absolutely true we pay you $500.00 in cash. Moon College, 282-286 Yonge street, Toronto. AFTER DOCTORS FAILED

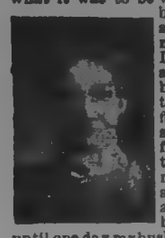
Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Cured Her.

Toronto, Canada.—"I shall endeavor to describe to you how I felt before I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I scarcely knew what it was to be well. I had awful bearing-down pains and usually before my monthly periods I suffered terribly and had to go to bed. I was not able to walk across the floor the pain was so bad. I doctored for a long time, but the doctor's treatment did not do me any good. I gave up all hopes of ever being well again until one day my husband saw the Compound advertised in the paper. He decided to get me a bottle, and I am thankful he did. I had not taken one bottle before I began to feel better, and I kept on taking it until now I am a different woman. It also helped me during maternity and childbirth. I can thoroughly recommend your Vegetable Compound to any woman who is afflicted with female troubles."—Mrs. J. M. TWEEDALE, 138 Nassau St., Toronto, Canada.



The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is unparalleled. It may be used with perfect confidence by women who suffer from displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration

MILLBROOK NOTES

Examiner Special:

MILLBROOK, JAN. 11.—A grand ball was given by the Bachelors and Benedicts of Millbrook in the Town Hall on Wednesday evening, which proved to be a huge success. The music was furnished by Glionna's Orchestra of Toronto—an Italian aggregation of musicians of well-known repute. Quite a number of prominent people from outside points were present these, along with the townspeople who took part in the affair, formed a large and jovial crowd which was augmented by a contingent of people who came in on the 9.20 train from Peterborough. The scene in the ball-room was one of animation, enhanced by the many brilliant colours of the costumes worn by a number of Millbrook's fair daughters. About 12 o'clock a dainty supper was served, after which the dancers tripped the light fantastic until the wee sma' hours of the morning.

CAVAN, JAN. 11.—A school meeting was held at Beech-wood school house, No. 4, last Wednesday, in which the Trustees were the principal participants. It is a good thing that the law of the country calls for a trustee board in connection with the supervision of the Public Schools in each individual section, as it insures the attendance of at least three men at the school meetings, which are held annually. The ratepayers of this section manifested their usual interest in the above meeting by their absence, which was rather annoying in view of the fact that the most important issue at stake was to decide as to whether it would be advisable to build a new school or repair the old one. It will be remembered that the old school-house was condemned by Inspector Odell, of Public Schools, but the Government Inspector, who was recently consulted, thought that the school could be repaired if a suffisient sum of money was forthcomnig to cover the cost of the work. At the meeting on Wednesday it was decided to accept the latter verdict. The sum of $300 was voted for the work, which, in all probability will be let by contract, and completed during the summer holidays.

Cured Awful Ringworm

"Well over four years ago my two little girls were taken with a dreadful scalp trouble that the doctors called ringworm. They attended the ——— Hospital as out-patients for a year. I had to apply their ointment with a brush, giving the children frightful pain. I also had to have their heads shaved every two weeks, but they got no better under the treatment. They used to cry with the tormenting itching, and their heads were covered with a thick scurf and dandruff.

"About a year ago I determined to try the Cuticura Remedies. I used plenty of Cuticura Soap and applied the Cuticura Ointment. I used only about three cakes of Cuticura Soap and three boxes of Cuticura Ointment and they were cured. Their hair is growing long and nice again. They had become so ill after their three years of suffering that I had to send one away to a convalescents' home as soon as she was cured, but now she is home, well and strong. My younger girl was away from school nine months with the disease. I am very grateful to Cuticura and for their children's sake I hope other mothers will try it. The Cuticura Soap I will always use for it makes the hair so lovely."

NAPTHA EXPLODES SET TWO MEN AFIRE

Examiner Special.

NEW YORK, JAN. 14.—Walter Larsen, thirty-one, and Bernard Johnson, twenty-nine, whose homes are in Atlantic City, are dying in the Norwegian Hospital, Brooklyn, of burns received late yesterday afternoon from a naphtha explosion on the fishing smack Pittsburg, of which George Kiffrind is the captain.

The Pittsburg put into the Tebo Basin, at the foot of Twenty-third Street, Brooklyn, a week ago for repairs. The repairs were completed yesterday and the smack left the dry dock intending to sail last night for the fishing banks off Rockaway.

About 5 o'clock Larsen and Johnson were at work in the cabin when a five-gallon can of naphtha exploded, covering the two men with the fluid and setting their clothes on fire. An alarm was turned in, but before the firemen arrived Wesley Wilkinson, superintendent of the docks, rushed on board and at great danger to himself, carried the two men ashore. Both were unconscious when taken to the hospital by Ambulance Surgeon Cook. Because they have not regained consciousness no details of the accident can be obtained, they having been alone in the cabin at the time.

One side of the boat's cabin was completely destroyed.

AWAKES TO FIND HE IS INSIDE OF A MULE

Examiner Special.

YOUNG HARRIS, GA., JAN 13—Bart Brown of Gum Log, this county, has had the unusual experience of being sewed up six hours in a mule's carcase.

Brown and several companions were wending their way homeward down the country road. The "going" was too heavy for Brown, and he fell sound asleep by the roadside near the carcase of "Old Humpback," who has been carrying the mail to and from Brasstown for many years, but who died several hours before Brown and his companions came along.

The practical jokers, seeing Brown asleep, hastily stowed him away, stitching up the hide with strings. The sheepman finally awoke and began yelling. Two men, hearing the shrieks, cut the stitches and let Brown out, cold and badly frightened.

A Mother's Sacrifice

Made in Kindness is Often an Injustice to Herself and to Her Family.

It is a common thing for mothers to sacrifice comfort, strength and sometimes themself, for her family. So common, indeed, that little notice is taken of it.

If anyone else is tired or weak or sick, mother waits on them. But there's no time for mother to be sick or to get the much-needed rest. So she neglects her ailments until she gets beyond the reach of human aid.

This is an injustice to herself and to her family. Health must be preserved. It is a mother's duty to herself and to those about her.

HELPLESS CRIPPLE FROM RHEUMATISM

4 HOME PLACE, TORONTO, DEC. 15th, 1909.

"I was a terrible sufferer from Rheumatism for nearly a year, and my right arm was swollen and the pain was fearful. All down the right side, the pain was dreadful, and I could hardly move for the agony. I was treated by two physicians but their medicine did me no good, and I tried numerous other remedies but received no benefit. I was simply a helpless cripple and suffered from Rheumatism all during last winter.

I saw "Fruit-a-tives" advertised in "The Telegram" and decided to try this remedy. After I had taken one box, I was much better and the pain less, and I continued the treatment with good hopes. When I had taken three boxes, I was so well that I could use my arm again and the pain was practically gone. After I had taken five boxes, I was entirely well again—no pain—no suffering—and now I am as WELL as I ever was.

The cure of my case by "Fruit-a-tives" was indeed splendid because all the doctors failed to even relieve me of my sufferings.

For the sake of others who may suffer from this terrible disease, Rheumatism, I give you permission to publish this statement."

MRS. LIZZIE BAXTER.

"Fruit-a-tives" is the only remedy that actually cures Rheumatism, and Sciatica because "Fruit-a-tives" is the only medicine that actually prevents Uric Acid being formed in any quantity in the body. If there is no excess of uric acid in the blood, there can be no Rheumatism.

"Fruit-a-tives" keeps the stomach clean—the liver active—the bowels regular—the kidney strong and the skin healthy. These are the organs that rid the body of all waste. When "Fruit-a-tives" so regulates the system that all waste is eliminated, then there can be no waste or "urea" to be changed into uric acid. Thus, there can be no uric acid in the blood, to inflame nerves and cause the pain which we know by the names of Rheumatism, Sciatica, Lumbago, Neuralgia, "Fruit-a-tives" will cure every trace of Rheumatism, Pain In The Back, Swollen Hands and Feet, and other troubles due to the blood being poisoned by uric acid.

If you are subject to Rheumatism, cure yourself now with "Fruit-a-tives" and be free of pain this winter.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size 25c. At all dealers, or sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa, Ont.

THE CANADIAN BANK OF COMMERCE

TUESDAY, 10th JANUARY, 1911

The forty-fourth Annual Meeting of the Shareholders of The Canadian Bank of Commerce was held in the banking house on Tuesday, 10th January, 1911, at 12 o'clock.

The President, Sir Edmund Walker, having taken the chair, Mr. A. St. L. Trigge was appointed to act as Secretary, and Messrs. A. J. Glazebrook and W. E. Rundle were appointed scrutineers.

The President called upon the Secretary to read the Annual Report of the Directors, as follows:

Report.

The Directors beg to present to the Shareholders the forty-fourth Annual Report, covering the year ending 30th November, 1910, together with the usual Statement of Assets and Liabilities.

The balance at credit of Profit and Loss Account, brought forward from last year, was		$ 722,129 62
The net profits for the year ending 30th November, after providing for all bad and doubtful debts, amounted to		1,838,085 04
		$2,560,204 66
This has been appropriated as follows:
Dividends Nos. 92, 93, 94, and 95, at nine per cent. per annum		$ 900,000 00
Written off Bank Premises		300,000 00
Transferred to Pension Fund (annual contribution)		50,000 00
Transferred to Rest Account		1,000,000 00
Balance carried forward		310,204 06
		$2,560,204 06

The assets of the Bank have all been carefully revalued in accordance with our usual practice, and all bad and doubtful debts have been amply provided for.

It is with deep regret that your Directors have to announce the death during the past year of Mr. James Crathern, of Montreal, who had been a member of the Board for twenty-seven years, and who at the time of his death was our oldest Director. To fill the vacancy your Directors have elected Mr. George F. Galt, of Winnipeg.

During the year the actuarial work connected with the establishment of a fund to provide pensions for the widows and orphans of deceased officers of the Bank, as authorized by the Shareholders at the last Annual Meeting, has been completed. It was thought advisable that the new requirements should be met by enlarging the scope of the existing Pension Fund and this has been found practicable on a very satisfactory basis. The new provisions came into effect in November.

The following branches have been opened during the year: In Manitoba—Transcona; in Saskatchewan—Bounty, Kerr Robert, Kindersley, Marcelin, Morse, Swift Current; in Alberta—Bassano, Champion, Kitscoty, Lougheed, Milk River, New Dayton, in British Columbia—Cumberland, South Hill, Stewart, Mount Pleasant (Vancouver), North Victoria, and in the City of Mexico. The branches at Elk Lake, Ontario, and Skagway, Alaska, have been closed. Since the close of the year branches have been opened at the following places: Porcupine and Bloor and Dufferin (Toronto), Ontario; The Pas, N.W.T.; Brooking, Lamerton, and Nutana, Saskatchewan; Chilliwack and Salmon Arm, British Columbia.

As is usual, the branches and agencies of the Bank in Canada, the United States, and Great Britain, and the various departments of the Head Office have been thoroughly inspected during the year.

Your Directors desire again to record their appreciation of the efficiency and zeal with which the officers of the Bank continue to perform their respective duties.

B. E. WALKER.

Toronto, 10th January, 1911.

President

In moving the adoption of the Report the President called on the General Manager to address the shareholders.

General Manager's Address.

The General Manager then said:

We have pleasure in presenting you with a statement which is in many respects a culminating record in the Bank's history. The past year was remarkable for a large volume of business and general prosperity, which justified our predictions when last we had the honour of appearing before you. At no time during the year was there any apprehension lest we should fall short of our estimates. The trend of business, uniformly satisfactory profits, and comparative freedom from losses make it possible to lay before you the results of our operations with great confidence and a full assurance that they will meet with your very cordial approval.

The profits for the past year were $1,838,085.04, an increase of $327,370 as compared with those of the previous year—being 18.38 per cent. on the paid-up capital. This result was obtained after making a careful revaluation of our assets, and ample provision for all bad and doubtful debts.

In accordance with our recommendation, your Directors increased the dividend to nine per cent. per annum, which called for a payment of $900,000. We are gratified that our present and prospective prosperity justifies the expectation of a larger return on your capital, and it will be our pleasure to suggest the payment of ten per cent. for the coming year.

You were good enough to pass a resolution at the last annual meeting authorizing the grant of $20,000 as a nucleus for a Widows' and Orphans' Fund, and this sum, with the regular payment of $30,000 towards the Pension Fund, accounts for the $50,000 charged against profits for this year. After very careful investigation and actuarial examination, we are pleased to say we have been able to adopt a comprehensive scheme to embrace in one fund a benefit for the staff. We cannot express too strongly our gratification at this consummation of our desire for the welfare of the service. This growing act will do much to foster the best interests of the Bank, so zealously guarded since its establishment.

The extraordinary development of Canada, the manifest need for the extension of our system to meet the requirements of a rapidly growing business, and the protection of our business at points where we are already established, make it imperative that we should do our duty in opening branches, often anticipating the necessities of the case. We are not unmindful of the criticism activity of this kind engenders, but are conscious of the fact that we are expected to do our full share in the upbuilding of the country which gives us privileges with the understanding that our service will be commensurate with our opportunities. We realize our accountability to the shareholders of this Bank, who have entrusted us with a large investment, and we believe you will be satisfied with the assurance that we exercise a prudent caution as we continue to open branches in new fields.

The occupation of an extended territory with a network of branch banks gives us serious thought when we come to the question of suitable and efficient management. This is always a difficult problem, but we have been fortunate in selecting an active, intelligent, and loyal staff who have shown a devotion to duty in circumstances not always very agreeable, and in which the ordinary comforts of life often cannot be obtained. We take pleasure in acknowledging our indebtedness to your Directors for a willing acquiescence in every suggestion for a proper recognition of the faithful work of able assistants who are asked to assume exceptional burdens of administration.

We have closed a very satisfactory year, our accounts showing unusual profits and a healthy advance in material prosperity. There was a steady and persistent demand for money to care for the needs of merchants, manufacturers, and our farming community, with rates fairly well maintained. the fluctuations being unimportant, notwithstanding the uncertainty of financial affairs in other centres with which we are intimately connected. The outlook for easier conditions in Great Britain will probably result in the sale of Canadian securities abroad in large volume, and the prospect of cheaper money in the United States may have a reflex influence here; but with the great development in all parts of Canada there should be employment at remunerative rates for funds to carry on ordinary business, and all the indications are favorable to active trade along safe lines. We enter the coming year with a confidence begotten of past experience, and hope to share in the general prosperity, and to enjoy reasonable freedom from undue anxiety in the management of our institution.

President's Address.

The President then said:

Doubtless the feeling most strongly present at the moment regarding business conditions in Canada is that we are enjoying a prosperity as great as we have ever known. Whatever significance the check of 1907 had at the time or should still have, even the memory of it seems to have passed away, and with larger foreign and home trade, larger bank clearings, a larger amount of building in cities, a larger amount of railway construction, and larger immigration than in any previous year, it would be strange if we felt otherwise. Our Western crops were not to our liking this year, bankers know that a little more expansion may make money scarce, and the pace of real estate speculation has brought on the inevitable temporary exhaustion., but, important as these things are, they have little effect on the situation as a whole. Even the large reduction in the volume of business in the United States is regarded as mainly due to political unrest and as having no direct bearing on our position. That we are experiencing very great prosperity is a matter evident to all, but if we examine in detail the circumstances accompanying this prosperity, there is much that is not satisfactory. Great Britain is a country which can afford to import much more than it exports because the world owes it annually an enormous sum for interest and other things for which it must of course take payment mainly in merchandise. The United States is a country which should export annually about $500,000,000 more than it imports in order to pay for interest, and for the money drawn from the country by permanent absentees, tourists, emigrants to Canada, etc., and because it cannot afford to increase its debt to foreign countries, having already about 100,000,000 people and a scarcity in many raw materials. Canada is one of the new countries which is entitled to, and which must, during its period of rapid settlement import more than it exports. The difference is met, however, by debt obligations which must some day be paid. The question, then, as to how much we should go into debt is the same which confronts the individual in trade, but the considerations are so large and so complicated that it is hard to know when we are wise and when unwise. What is certain, however, is that when a man is in debt he should live sparingly, not extravagantly, and then if, with the money he has borrowed, he has put himself in the way of making a product with which he hopes to pay his debt, he should strain every nerve to make and sell as much of that product as he can, in order to reduce his indebtedness to the lowest point possible. Now, Canada is somewhat like a man who, having a rich inheritance in land, borrows to develop it, and, confident of its future value, spends freely for his present gratification while he does not make effort enough to create the needed present revenue from his property.

The total value of the field crops of Canada, at local market prices, as estimated by the Census Department, is $507,185,000, the product of 32,711,082 acres. The corresponding figures for 1908 are $532,982,000, from 30,065,556 acres, and for 1908, $432,534,000 from 27,505,663 acres. The loss in 1910 was in wheat, oats, and barley, in which the acreage was 20,982,900, with a value of only $248,738,000, against 18,917,900 acres in 1909, with a value of $289,144,000. So that, while the decrease in all field crops is $25,807,000, the loss in wheat, oats, and barley alone is $40,406,000, leaving a handsome increase in all other field crops.

Our clearing house returns again reflect the great growth in business. The total of the seventeen clearing houses for 1910, two being only a few months old, is $6,154,000,000, as compared with $5,204,000,000 for 1909, a gain of eighteen per cent. in the year. There is a gain in every clearing house in Canada, most notably in Edmonton, Calgary, Victoria, Vancouver, and Montreal.

The building permits in the four chief cities will illustrate forcibly the growth of Canada. Hundreds of towns and cities would show similar proportions growth could we but find space in which to give the figures:

Montreal	$10,713,000	$18,815,000
Toronto	18,139,000	21,127,000
Winnipeg	9,226,000	15,106,000
Vancouver	7,303,00	13,150,000

With the Montreal figures for 1908 are included municipalities which in 1910 had become a part of the city.

The most curious feature in Canada at the moment is the outbreak from time to time of agitation stirred up sometimes by guilds, sometimes by strikes, and often by city councils, but always by one set of interests against another. We have a more general prosperity than could readily be found elsewhere, now or in the history of the past. The only people with a just complaint are those whose labour and brains are paid by a more or less fixed recompense, which is not adjusted in accordance with the change in prices. These are the people who, as a rule, do not complain, perhaps because their fortune is the same in every country. In the case of the majority of our wage-earners there is some adjustment, whether sufficient or not. In any event, the overwhelming bulk of our people share in our prosperity, which, be it remembered, is the result of our combined activities. It is not due to the farmer alone, nor to the mechanic, nor to the railroad, the bank, the manufacturer, or the shopkeeper. It is the result of the fortuitous circumstances under which we are enabled by our combined effort to make profitable use of the natural resources of Canada. Is it not, therefore, most regrettable that, instead of each individual finding happiness and contentment in his own prosperity and in his share in building up this country, which is his guarantee of future well-being, we agitate merely that we may still further profit as individuals, even if other Canadian industries are made to lose or are destroyed thereby?

Ontario and Quebec.

A year ago, despite some fluctuations in conditions, the record of agriculture in Ontario and Quebec was most satisfactory. This year the record is still better and it is questionable if as regards yield or prices excepting in the case of fruit, potatoes, and one or two minor articles, a more generally successful result was ever obtained by our farmers. High prices in 1909 had caused a larger acreage of grain to be planted, farm work began early in the spring, fall wheat came through the winter well, harvest results were excellent, has gave a large yield, roots in most localities did well, cattle, horses, hogs, poultry, eggs, and all dairy products brought high prices, but the supply was unfortunately always insufficient. The value of the field crops of Ontario and Quebec for 1910 was $301,169,000, compared with $290,469,000 for 1909.

Although in the fruit districts where apple growing is carried on scientifically as fine apples were produced as could be desired, the crop as a whole was as great a failure in Ontario as in the Maritime Provinces. In neither district can accurate statistics be obtained, but the quantity shipped from Montreal is sufficient to show what a bad crop means. In 1910 the shipments were only 163,000 barrels, there being no recent year comparable with this except 1901, when shipments were only 122,000 barrels. The highest figure reached was in 1908, 731,000 barrels, and the average of eight ordinary years was about 515,000 barrels. Doubtless no care would have averted the main cause of a lessened crop, but with scientific methods the number and size of the apples would always be greatly increased and the quality greatly improved.

We used to be able to follow closely the growth of our dairying industry by using the figures of the shipments of cheese and butter from Montreal as examples, but new conditions have arisen, and these figures are now of little use. The consumption of butter in Canada and of cream in Canada and the United States has practically destroyed our foreign trade in butter, which one year reached 572,449 packages valued at $7,400,000. The same causes have kept our cheese exports almost stationary for three or four years. The figures for 1910 are 1,892,000 boxes, worth $17,503,000, as against the record of 2,395,932 boxes in 1903, valued at $21,560,000. One great departmental store collects direct from the farmers sufficient milk to keep several cheese factories busy.

Successful as the year has been with the farmers of the East, there is a growing conviction that this part of Canada is at the moment a land of neglected opportunity, largely owing to the easy success of those who have taken up the cheap lands and virgin soil of the West. While many think that more effort is necessary to success in the East, facts gathered from recent experience show that in no part of Canada can a larger return be obtained in proportion to the intelligence employed than here in Ontario. We have one of the best and most famous of Agricultural Colleges, and wherever one of its students is farming, the effect of his knowledge on his own farm and the influence of his example on those of others is most marked, but there are many parts where no such examples of improved methods exist, and the Government has now adopted the plan of taking the College to the farmer. The Farmers' Institute lectures and the Agricultural Fair prizes have done and are doing much good, but the new effort is of a much more effective and practical nature. It is sought by demonstration farming actually carried on by experts acting for the Government, and by visits paid to various parts of the Province by experts who are able and willing to give advice, gradually to break up that condition of contentment with the farming of our fathers which is so great an enemy to progress. If young men can be shown the results of a thorough knowledge of stock-raising as compared with not knowing, of caring for orchards instead of not caring for them, of systematic manuring and of proper drainage, of a knowledge, indeed, of the many things which bring about the enormous difference in results between old-fashioned and up-to-date farming, we may hope that more farmers' sons will stay on the land, and that many city men will settle there, and that increased wealth and happiness will be the result. But actual results are more powerful arguments than mere preaching. An orchard in Ontario which yielded prior to 1909, $100 worth of apples, annually, produced in 1909 in new hands fruit worth $1,437, the net profit on which was $974. In addition to apples not suitable for eating worth more than the whole crop before the orchard was properly cared for. In other cases 8 acres of orchard produced $2,489 gross and $1,890 net; 5½ acres produced $2,237 gross and $1,720 net; 1¾ acres produced $539 gross; and many cases of yields in money from $150 to $300 per acre could be shown, the result varying of course with the age of the trees, but mainly with the practical knowledge of the fruit-grower. In vegetables one man with 17 acres raised 127 tons of cauliflower, which he sold for $30 per ton, a return of about $225 per acre. We know that for years large profits have been made in Ontario growing fine roses and other flowers for New York and other United States markets, but we now hear of one experienced hybridizer, who is also a banker, who has made himself famous as well as prosperous as a producer of innumerable species of gladioli, which are in demand in all quarters of the world. It must be remembered that these results are not due merely to the proximity of a market, but that in almost any part of Western Ontario similar things can be done. Too much credit cannot be accorded to the Department of Agriculture of Ontario for the effort it is making, and we can but hope that the number of lecturers and demonstrators will be increased, and that they will be persistently kept at work as a permanent force working for agricultural improvement. In some parts already a new tone has been given to farm affairs, emigration to the West has nearly ceased, farm values are increasing, and intensive farming is a subject of general and keen interest.

That a more enterprising spirit is necessary may be readily gathered from the statistics of live stock in Ontario. From 1901 to 1907 the number of horses on hand grew from 820,000 to 725,000, but since that year there has been practically no increase. The number sold annually has, however, increased from 51,000 in 1901 to 88,000 in 1910, which is evidence enough of the difficulty of maintaining a stock on hand. The number of milch cows in 1901 was 984,000, in 1907 1,152,000, in 1910 only 1,052,000. The number of other cattle in 1901 was 1,523,000, in 1906 1,834,000, and in 1910 only 1,514,000. The number of stock slaughtered, however, rose steadily from 610,000 in 1901 to 817,000 in 1910. In sheep and lambs the story is one of steady decline from 1901 to 1910 in both the number of those on hand and of those slaughtered. In swine the number on hand rose from 1,491,000 in 1901 to 2,049,000 in 1907, and fell to 1,561,000 in 1910, while the number slaughtered rose from 1,976,000 in 1901 to 2,367,000 in 1906, and fell to 1,844,000 in 1910. In poultry of all classes there has been a satisfactory increase in the number on hand and in the number annually killed. It will be seen from these figures, which are mainly taken from reports of the Agricultural Department of the Province of Ontario, and do not agree very closely with those of the Census Department at Ottawa, that we are meeting a greatly increased demand by decreasing the stock on hand, and such a state of things cannot, of course, continue long. Many quite natural causes have led to this result, and others will tend to remedy it to some extent in the near future. Hay being scarce, high prices prevailing for coarse grains and the highest prices ever known for cattle, the farmer has in many cases sold both cattle and coarse grains, instead of feeding his stock as usual. But food crops are now more plentiful, and we may look for an increase in the stock of animals on hand.

In all manufacturing centres the story is one of a general enlargement of plants, an increase of wages, and a difficulty in filling orders, with prosperity to the local shop-keeper as one of the natural consequences. The output of pig iron, steel rails, ingots, etc., at the important plants at Sault Ste. Marie and Hamilton show large increases over 1909 in all articles.

Building operations are being carried on at a pace which clearly reflects our prosperity. The farmer is spending more than usual on tile draining and on outbuildings, in the construction of which cement is now largely used; in towns and cities extensive municipal improvements are general, while ordinary building operations for business and other purposes exceed all previous experience.

Flour milling, one of our most important industries, has done reasonably well, but much less so than in the previous season of abnormal profits. Increased competition in the business has reached a rather unhealthy stage, and it would be well if there were no more expansion in this business for a time. The conditions of the lumber market are not very different from 1909. There has been a ready sale for high grades both abroad and in North America, and a satisfactory market for intermediate grades, but the sale of low-grade lumber is still seriously interfered with by Southern pine, which has for the time being taken away our market in the United States and even invaded Canada. Just at the end of the year, however, there seems to be a better demand for low-grade lumber.

Although there has been no new development at Cobalt, and public attention has been drawn away from it to the new gold fields of the Porcupine district, the output of silver for 1910 will be about $14,500,000, against $12,461,000 for 1909. The larger result is due to an increase of about 3,000,000 ounces in the quantity mined and a better price for silver. Up to the present, out of a total product of $48,000,000 since the camp began, about $24,500,000 have been paid in dividends. The world's production of silver for 1909 was worth $107,000,000, and of this Cobalt's percentage was 11.6. The value of the total production of minerals in Canada for 1909 is estimated at $90,400,000—just about half metallic and half non-metallic. This amount is, of course, the largest in our history, and compares with $49,234,000 ten years ago and $14,013,000 twenty years ago.

While it is our habit to turn to cities in the prairie provinces or in British Columbia for evidence of unusual growth, it may be well to note that in a list of Canadian cities, recently compiled in order to exhibit growth of population, Fort William and Port Arthur exceed all others, showing an increase in ten years of 350 and 300 per cent. respectively.

Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta.

Considerable disappointment, as we all know, accompanies the record of what is nevertheless another year of progress in the prairie provinces. The wheat, oats, and flax reaped in the previous year were the highest in grade, and the whole crop was the largest and produced the largest sum in money ever known. Under such conditions the acreage for 1910 was naturally increased, not merely by old-settlers farmers, but by new settlers preparing their first crops. With an early spring everything promised well, but because of many adverse conditions a smaller and less highly graded crop was the result. Our estimates in August were:—

	Bushels
Wheat	86,000,000
Oats	90,000,000
Barley	17,000,000
Flax	4,000,000

Other estimates are as high as 104,000,000 bushels for wheat and 128,000,000 bushels for oats, but we do not expect either wheat or oats to reach 100,000,000 bushels. About 60 per cent of the wheat is fit for milling, and oats and barley grade badly. The flax crop was larger than in 1909 and the price during 1910 has been as high as $2.54 per bushel, and is still most unusually high, so that the crop is much more important than might be supposed. The money result from the crops of the three prairie provinces, as estimated by conservative Western opinion, will be about $20,000,000 less than for 1909. The estimate of the Census Department, which includes all field crops, is less favourable. The total field crops for the three provinces for 1910 are valued at $155,926,000, as compared with $192,539,000 for 1909, a less amount by about $37,000,000. Much of the shrinkage in value is due to decline in price.

The smaller yield of the crops of these provinces is due to unfavourable weather in three districts, Southern Alberta, Southern Manitoba, and South-Western Saskatchewan. In the northern districts and in some southern parts results were most excellent. In the districts where results were generally unfavourable, however, isolated cases stand out clearly, showing splendid results obtained, despite the weather, simply by scientific farming. Agricultural conditions at the moment in Southern Manitoba and parts of South-Western Saskatchewan are unsatisfactory because of lack of moisture, while in Southern Alberta, because of plentiful moisture during the last few months, the prospects are as good as could be desired. For some years the necessity of more advanced methods in such older parts as Southern Manitoba has been painfully evident. May we now hope that the Government of Manitoba as well as the farmers will forthwith do the quite obvious and not difficult things necessary to redeem and maintain the reputation of this part of Canada as a grain-producing country. Undoubtedly the crop is largely reduced every year by the prevalence of weeds, and it is clear that the Provincial Government cannot take too much trouble to remove this evil as far as possible. Enough has been done by individual cases of good farming to show how much larger the profits of agriculture in the West should be. The results of the present poor crop have been improved by the fact that mixed farming has been increasing. Indeed, that is one direction in which Southern Manitoba already working out the reform made necessary by the impoverishment of the land as a result of repeated grain crops.

There is no question of more importance to Western development than that of improving the breeding of live stock and of increasing their numbers. We are witnessing the gradual extinction of the rancher and the gradual establishment of a great grazing and feeding industry. It is naturally difficult by the increase due to the slower methods of the latter to make up for the losses consequent on the passing of the rancher, but the outlook as a whole is promising. The Live Stock Exhibition at Winnipeg in 1910 exceeded all records in the number of high-grade animals shown, and these were of such excellence that little further improvement can be looked for, some classes having been the finest ever shown in America. The progressive Western farmer is demonstrating to his fellows that if each of them will, as soon as he can afford it, raise a few head of high-grade stock, the disappearance of the rancher will redound to their gain, and the problem of maintaining a sufficient supply of animals will be solved. As matters now stand, stocks are not as large as they should be, nor are they increasing as fast as they should. Statistics do not go far enough back in Saskatchewan and Alberta to be of much service, but in Manitoba horses have increased in numbers only about 50 per cent. in ten years, cattle a trifle more than 50 per cent., sheep have lessened in number, swine have increased about 100 per cent., and poultry about 65 to 70 per cent. Such statistics as are available show that stocks on hand for the three Provinces are about 870,000 horses, 2,300,000 cattle, 345,000 sheep, and 603,000 swine. Figures for poultry seem unreliable, but apparently there are not yet half as many as in Ontario. One has only to look at the map and consider the small part of Ontario that is farmed, and to compare it with the West, in order to see how very much must be done before it can be made impossible for the Vice-President of the C. P. R. to reproach Manitoba with the importation of 12,000,000 eggs in one year over that railway alone, and to say further that the poultry and cream for their dining cars must be obtained partly in the United States.

The railways are again to be congratulated on the manner in which they handled the crop. It is estimated that by the close of navigation 60,000,000 bushels had reached the head of the lakes. Terminal facilities for handling the crop have still further improved, and through the Lake Shippers' Clearance Association vessels can be loaded and despatched with much greater rapidity than heretofore.

One of the most interesting things in the settlement of Canada is the work of the superintendent of the irrigation schemes of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The policy of providing "ready-made" farms is succeeding admirably, and the dryness of the past season has drawn attention to the value of irrigation in Southern Alberta. Sales of land in the irrigation area have been very large during the last three years, and have lately averaged a million dollars a month. The railway company naturally favour sales which result in immediate occupation. Their plans have succeeded so well that an appropriation of $8,000,000 is said to have been voted by the Railway Board in order to carry the irrigation system further east.

Despite lean crops in the south, farm lands have increased in price in almost all districts. In towns and cities the increase in assessments, in building operations, and in population is even more startling than in previous years, while in the already numerous manufacturing establishments of Winnipeg there is the same increase in plant and output as in the East, and with the advent of cheap power we are, doubtless, destined to see a great manufacturing centre rapidly created. There are said to be already in Winnipeg 336 manufacturing establishments, with an annual output of $36,500,000. In 1910 there were 65 industrial companies incorporated, with an authorized capital of $16,000,000, while 13 existing companies increased their capital by $3,000,000.

We regret that it is impossible to supply the details of the extraordinary growth of several of our Western cities, but we cannot refrain from recording that in 1910 Winnipeg was the largest actual wheat market on the North American continent.

Mexico.

As you will know, we are now interested in Mexico. Business conditions there have been a little slower in recovering from the contraction of 1907 than in other parts of North America, largely because the country depends for its development so much on the introduction of foreign capital. Speaking broadly, the supply of foreign capital has been drawn from the following sources:

1. British, including Canadian, about $700,000,000; about 60 per cent. being invested in railways, 15 per cent. in mining, and 25 per cent. in agricultural and other industrial enterprises.

2. United States, about $1,000,000,000; about 35 per cent. invested in railways, 46 per cent. in mining, and the balance in other industries.

3. French, German, Belgian, Dutch, and Spanish about $300,000,000 invested largely in bank stocks in manufactures, and in wholesale and retail trade.

The Germans control the hardware trade, the French the dry goods, and the Spanish the grocery trade. We find that the trade which might be done by Canada is almost entirely monopolized by the United States, the grain trade excepted. A business not always large but always valuable is carried on with the United States in lard, hams, bacon, canned meats, fish, butter, condensed milk, cheese, fresh, preserved, and dried fruits, vegetables, grain, flour, cereal foods, etc. In comparison with this, we figure only as sellers of grain, and doubtless until we can produce more we shall not do any of this trade except grain, but, nevertheless, it awaits us when we are energetic enough to seek it.

The motion for the adoption of the Report was then put and carried. A resolution relative to the Pension Fund was submitted to the shareholders and passed. The usual resolutions, expressing the thanks of the shareholders to the President, Vice-President, and Directors, and also to the General Manager, Superintendent of Branches, and other officers of the Bank were unanimously carried. Upon motion, the meeting proceeded to elect Directors for the coming year, and then adjourned.

The scrutineers subsequently reported the following gentlemen to be elected as Directors for the ensuing year: Sir Edmund Walker, C.V.O., LL.D., D.C.L.; Hon. George A. Cox, Robert Kilgour, John Hoskin, K.C., LL.D.; J. W. Flavelle, LL.D.; A. Kingman, Hon. L. Melvin-Jones, Hon. W. C. Edwards, Z. A. Lash, K.C., LL.D.; E. R. Wood, Hon. J. M. Gibson, K.C., LL.D.; William McMaster, Robert Stuart, George F. Galt.

At a meeting of the newly-elected Board of Directors, held subsequently, Sir Edmund Walker, C.V.O., LL.D., D.C.L., was elected President, and Mr. Z. A. Lash, K.C., LL.D., Vice-President.

NEWS AWAY FROM HOME ✵ AMERICAN WOMEN ✵ NEW PEERS

LONDON WRITER SCOLDS AMERICA

INCREASES LIVING COST

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

ONE must leave home to learn what is happening in America. It comes as a shock when one is informed by a special correspondent of the London Times that the United States conspicuously illustrates the truth of the statement that the possession of riches does not necessarily bring contentment, for he says, "in proportion as the American people grows richer it seems to grow more discontented, and it is impossible for one who knows the country well not to be struck by its extraordinary and feverish unrest."

This state of affairs, according to this "looker on in Washington," is manifested by political revelations and counter revelations which "led to the catastrophe (?) of the recent elections."

In reading this peculiarly interesting article I learn that there is general uneasiness in labor circles, that it is difficult to speak to labor without hearing of the tyranny of capital or to an employer without being told of the widening of the gulf between him and his employes. These symptoms, however, are more marked, according to the correspondent, in the West than in the East, and it is in the Western towns of the second class that the revolt against existing conditions is most evident and criticism most outspoken.

THE "GET RICH QUICK."

It seems this emotic condition, of which I had little previous knowledge, is "due to the fundamental fact that many people have grown rich too quickly." Formerly, according to the critic, the rich men of America, especially in the West, were the best men in each community. They might not be cultured, but they were men who had made their way under hard conditions and they had character and integrity. This, or course, he says, was not generally true, because there never was a time when in almost any Western town one would not hear complaints from the younger and more ambitious elements that "what this place needs is a few first class funerals," the meaning being that the older, richer men were too conservative and did not use their wealth to build up the community. Now, however, one learns that a new condition has arisen.

It appears that in the decade 1897 to 1907 many thousands of men got rich quickly as a result of bold speculation preceding the extraordinary rise in all values. These men who became suddenly wealthy were of a different type from the hard working successful men of a preceding generation. The Times critic says that "it seemed as if chance threw a certain number of thousands of names out of a hat once every six months for a period of five years and said, 'These men shall be millionaires next spring.'"

LAVISHLY SPENDING.

Admitting that some of these mushroom millionnaires might have achieved fortune through gifts of their own, the Times correspondent declares that "as a rule these 'newly rich' were conscious of no responsibilities and began spending and are spending to-day with a lavishness formerly undreamed of."

They, it seems, more than any other cause, are "responsible for the general increase in American extravagance and for the universal raising of the cost of living."

Then, after condemning them as intolerable and classifying them as among those disorderly folk who go down to English seaside resorts in costly automobiles, this special correspondent says that "whereas in Great Britain the unlovely rich are comparatively few, they are here constantly in evidence, and there is no doubt that the people resent them, their manners and their extravagances" as instensely as the South resented the carpet baggers who overran that section at the close of the civil war.

While every one will concede that there is a modicum of truth in these charges against the "get rich quick" American and that there is unrest—to a degree justifiable and in part fomented by editorial agitators and political demagogues—it was necessary to get the view that is presented to one who is three thousand miles from home in order to appreciate the fact that America is going to the "demition bow wows."

Moreover, I was deeply touched by the statement that there are few unlovely rich in Great Britain, as I had just returned from a call on a manufacturer whose name is almost a household word in England, and a few days before had met a great London clothing manufacturer, and if my memory were not faulty, I would be able to give you the price of every article of furniture and could tell you the cost and where each of the costly rugs in their mines came from. All this information was volunteered.

Of course, it would be manifestly unjust to say that these English millionaires were in any way typical of the wealthy classes in England, just as it is unjustifiable to judge the United States by the deeds and misdeeds of a new crop of Croesuses who, after all, have about as much effect upon the character and development of the United States as a prohibition city in a Milwaukee brewery (!)

A few Britishisms which were discovered by the Daily Mail correspondent on his recent visit to New York are recommended to the Times correspondent as a remedy for that depressed feeling.

Countess of Ancaster an American Girl; Duchess of Marlborough Aids the Poor

LADY WILLOUGHBY DE ERESBY — THE DUCHESS OF MARLBOROUGH — LORD WILLOUGHBY DE ERESBY

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

THE death of the Earl of Ancaster, who has been succeeded by his eldest son, Lord Willoughby de Eresby, is responsible for the first bye-election in the Horncastle division of Lincolnshire, for which the new Earl has been the conservative Member of Parliament since 1894, and for the introduction of another American girl into the list of peeresses.

This charming young woman before her marriage was Miss Eloise Breese, daughter of Mr. W. L. Breese, of New York. She is noted for her many accomplishments and her keen love of outdoor life and sports. This latter trait, which brought about her marriage to one of the keenest sportsmen in the kingdom, is doubtless due to the fact that most of her early life was spent in England.

Before her marriage the new Countess of Ancaster was an intimate friend of the daughters of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught and, always beautifully dressed, was one of the phalanx of girls who were asked to all the select functions. She was married to Lord Willoughby de Eresby in 1905, and there are three children, one son and two daughters. In addition to beauty, the new Countess has the vivacity and wit for which American girls are famed, and is much sought by hostesses noted for their brilliant house parties.

The Duchess of Marlborough devoted much time to Christmas cheer for the poor and suffering. The Duchess personally distributed the presents from a huge Christmas tree that was a feature of the Yuletide distribution in the out patients' departments of the West Ham and East London hospitals.

AMERICA ARMING AGAINST JAPAN, BELIEF IN TOKIO

CALLS FOR BIG FLEET TO RESIST AGGRESSION

(SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.)

Tokio, Dec. 25, 1910.—Although Japanese officials are somewhat more discreet in their public utterances than some in America, the fact that the vernacular press in this country has a good deal of a free hand in the expression of views palpably hostile to the United States favors the assumption that Japanese officialdom is not averse to a course which seeks to familiarise the public mind with the idea of America as a possible future enemy. The latest contribution to this class of literature appears in the columns of the Nippon under the title "America is feverishly pushing ahead her armaments. Who is her prospective enemy?" This anonymous article is ascribed to a vice admiral. It is substantially as follows:—

"Japan and America have at last cleared their decks and have begun to open fire at each other—so at least it is reported. America is continually engaged in perfecting her offensive and defensive forces. The Pacific coast States recently held a meeting of delegates and adopted a petition to Washington urging the increase of the Pacific squadron, and it is expected that this movement will soon bear fruit. A cable despatch last month reported that America had decided to build two battle ships armed with ten 14-inch guns.

Japan as Possible Enemy.

"Secret advices plainly tell us that the American government is straining every nerve to expand the army and navy on the assumption that Japan is a possible enemy. Extensive defences are being built at San Francisco, Seattle and Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, the fortifications at the last named place being the biggest ever undertaken by America.

"When the work is completed the harbor will afford a haven for a fleet of ten battle ships and ten cruisers. The coal depots will hold two hundred thousand tons. In the Philippines army manoeuvres are constantly conducted and are invariably based upon the supposed necessity of repelling a Japanese attempt to land troops.

"When the Panama Canal is finished it will be possible to send the Atlantic fleet to the Pacific side without much difficulty, and the new waterway will do away with the necessity of establishing a separate squadron permanently in these waters.

When hostilities open we shall have to meet an American fleet consisting of ten battle ships and ten cruisers. Each of the former will be armed with ten guns, ranging in calibre from thirteen inches upward, the total number of ordnance of this description being thus one hundred, while the cruisers will all be armed with guns of more than ten inches.

Sees Need for Big Navy.

"This fleet will make Pearl Harbor its base, and thence start out for the Philippines and the China Sea. Such will be the general tactics of the American navy when war starts. The plan will also call for the acquisition of another Pearl Harbor in the China Sea. In view of these circumstances is it not highly essential for Japan to expand her navy and make other important preparations from now on?"

The Jiji prints a strong article advocating the expansion of the navy. This paper recapitulates some figures regarding the effective strengths of the navies of the world in 1917, according to present programmes, and including in the list only battle ships and armored cruisers. These figures are: England, 71, the United States, 42, Germany, 40, France, 30, Japan 19. It is also shown that the United States, Germany and France could each place thirty war ships on the Pacific. Japan, it says, therefore ought to be able at least to rival any one of these three Powers.

AMERICAN OYSTER TASTELESS TO THE BRITISH PALATE

So Says One Critic, Who Is Roused to Defend the "Native" Bivalve.

SCOFFS AT THE PLAN FOR BIG SHIPMENTS

"White, Fat Oyster" from This Land More Like a Meal, Says Writer, Than a Delicacy.

(Special Dispatch.)
Paris, Saturday.

Oyster dealers and consumers here, as already cabled, are finding food for interesting talk, if nothing else, in the report that a big syndicate is being formed in New York to ship oysters in unlimited quantities to the English market.

The dealers, as a rule, scoff at this enterprise, say that oysters from America are no new thing in this country, that for more than forty years oysters have been consigned from America to Liverpool and other English ports, and that they have not displaced the "native" or the succulent Dutch bivalves.

If the report has done nothing more it certainly has aroused discussion in the newspapers of the size, shape and quality of the American oysters. In commenting on them one writer says:—

"There is a great variety among them in size and shape. So, it may be urged, there is in the British bivalve, but the latter differs only minutely as compared with the multitudinous forms of, say, the New York saddle rocks, the Mobjack Bay (off the Chesapeake), which are like our own natives, and the fat, plate-sized Mobile Bay oysters.

Some Cockney Ideas.

"Just as our connoisseurs differ as to whether Whitstable are preferrable to Colchester, or whether Dutch, Irish or Scotch are better than either, so in America they have their peculiar fancies for small or large or razor edged oysters. In North America, from Cape Cod to the Gulf of Mexico, oyster reefs are in prodigious numbers and of great extent. Off the coast of Delaware, Maryland and Virginia there are reefs hundreds of miles in length, and seemingly of inexhaustible supply.

"The consumption of oysters is much more general among the people of the United States than is the case in England, and this is true not merely of the seaboard population, but of inland dwellers as far as the Rocky Mountains.

"Two things are of moment in the introduction of oysters from abroad—first, that they should be pure and fresh when delivered, and, next, that their flavor should commend them to English palates. The oyster is a peculiar, if not a delicate, feeder, and requires the nicest care in transport. To pack it in his native ooze or mud does not always succeed, and a private consignment of 800 barrels shipped in this way the other day turned out a failure. Shiploads have also arrived in bad condition, even where fresh sea water was allowed to pass over them daily during the voyage. Again, oysters laid in barrels round side up have been landed in England in splendid condition.

"White, Fat, Insipid."

"We are a conservative people in this country, at least in matters of social habit and dietary, and, it may be asked, would the raw American bivalve suit our palate? The British oyster, treasonable as the remark may sound, is not preferred by all travellers above the oysters of America and other lands. To certain connoisseurs it gives an unpleasant, shelly sort of after taste. But the 'native' has this grand feature, he is always piquant and saline, whereas the white, fat, American can is tasteless to insipid, and an article of feeding rather than a toothsome delicacy. But it is just that quality, and its need of a pinch of salt, that commends the American oysters to its lovers. Perhaps, also, that may be why relatively few oysters in the States are eaten raw, upon the half shell, compared with the myriads converted into 'stews' or served up piping hot from the frying pan.

"In England such treatment of a glorious 'native' would be hailed as a barbarism, yet in seasonable weather an 'oyster stew,' or 'fry,' or 'bake' makes a dish to be grateful for. The writer would almost as soon have an excellent American oyster, even a Mobile Bay specimen, that quires cutting into sections like a chop, before being swallowed, as an ordinary native."

Atop of this cynical fling at the mutton chop oyster from Mobile Bay comes the slap at the glorious American Blue Points from the manager of Sir Charles Petrie's firm, who says they have been very common here for years and are mostly used for cooking.

"American oysters," he said, "can be bought for three shillings a hundred, while natives cost from two shillings to fifteen shillings. The English oyster," he added, "will always hold its own easily."

LONDON LETS SLIP A $70,000 PEARL

Flawless Gem Recently Exhibited Bond Street Has Been Sent to This Country.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday

ACCORDING to English newspapers London has missed the opportunity of acquiring one of the finest pearls in the world.

This specimen, which is said to be worth £14,000 ($70,000), and was recently on exhibition in the window of a well known Bond street jeweler, has been sent to America. The pearl is about the size of a pea, and is absolutely flawless. In commenting on this one of the members of the firm that sold it said:—

"The reason so many pearls have flaws is because when the oyster opens a little sand is apt to get into it, and this, coming in contact with the pearl which is forming inside the shell, is able to scratch it. Pearls generally are rising in price all the time, but this $70,000 specimen is the highest value of which I am aware."

ROYAL AUTOGRAPHS IN HIS COLLECTION

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

Major Henry Wright is a well known personage in London society who is the envy of all autograph hunters, for he possesses one of the most valuable collections of autographs in the world. He has now added to his collection the autograph of the new Chinese Ambassador.

The Major's albums contain the signatures of every member of the British royal family, all the sovereigns of Europe and of the Pope. Close upon three hundred members of royal families have given their autographs, as well as most men of light and leading on the Continent and in America. King Edward and King George each signed both as prince of Wales and as King.

CHILIAN BABE OF BRITISH NATIVITY

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

A CURIOUS legal anomaly is illustrated by the case of a baby born on board the Pacific line steamship Arcona, which reached Liverpool after a voyage of 24,000 miles, and whose place of birth has been registered as Stepney. Her parents are Chilian, but the English law holds that children born on board a British ship, wherever it may be, are legally in London, in the parish of Stepney.

"The fiction arose," said a London barrister in explaining the curious circumstance, "from the fact that Stepney was originally the place of disembarkation for ships entering the port of London. Naturally people would register in that parish any children born during the voyage, and it happened that the law, for its own purposes, held that all children so born belonged to Stepney. Persons on board a British man-of-war are also legally in London in the parish of Stepney.

"Years ago another fiction of the law, since become obsolete, was that the colonies and colonials were in the parish of Greenwich. This was because so many colonising expeditions were fitted out from that port."

11,000 QUEUES IN HONG KONG FALL

(Special Dispatch.)

HONG KONG, Saturday.—This city witnessed a remarkable queue cutting demonstration to-day, when six wealthy elders, the aggregate of whose ages is 440 years, set the example to their fellows on the platform of the Chinese Club, while the Indian Military Band played selections from Gilbert and Sullivan's operas. A hundred other men followed their lead.

The promoter of the movement effectively cited the case of an offer who was killed on Friday when his queue became entangled in some machinery.

The movement has become so widespread that in Hong Kong alone in the last three days eleven thousand men voluntarily have discarded their queues.

No change in the national costume is contemplated.

NUNCIO AT VIENNA MAY HAVE LOST HAT

(Special Dispatch.)

ROME, Saturday.—The event of the week in Rome was the publication of the Pope's letter to the Apostolic Delegates in the Orient. This is the second time that Pope Pius X. has solemnly refuted the utterances of a private individual.

Prince Max of Saxony passed all last week in Rome. His reception by Pope Pius was one of the most dramatic acts of the present Pontificate. The Prince on arriving applied for an audience, which was immediately granted.

When he appeared in the presence of Pope Pius he threw himself on his knees and announced his willingness to sign any declaration of orthodoxy that might be found necessary. He expressed sorrow for the pain his article had given to the Pope.

The Pontiff was most amiable and fatherly, but he asserted that the article "Roma e l'Oriente" was likely to have so much influence on the minds of Oriental dissidents that it was necessary to issue a solemn pronouncement on the subject.

Prince Max Signs Retraction.

A list of the errors contained in the article was submitted to Prince Max, who signed a statement repudiating them, and announcing his firm intention of adhering always to the doctrines of the Catholic Church.

This week brought a big surprise in the resignation by Mgr. Granito di Belmonte Pignatelli of the nunciature at Vienna and its acceptance by the Pope. This office is regarded now as the most important in the diplomatic service of the Holy See since France has ceased to be represented at the Vatican and the relations with Portugal and Spain have become embroiled.

It is practically the only cardinalitial post left vacant in the Church. In the usual order of things the head of the government would have asked the Emperor to apply to the Pope for the elevation to the purple of Mgr Granito di Belmonte Pignatelli and the Cardinal's hat would have been conferred on him by the Emperor himself.

May Have Lost Cardinal's Hat.

That is now impossible. It is even doubtful if the erstwhile Nuncio will be raised to the cardinalate at the next Consistory. It is generally assumed that this has been deferred for another year, as it has been decided that no great functions are to take place at the Vatican concurrent with the celebrations organized to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the proclamation of Rome as the Capital of united Italy.

After the American pilgrimage which is due here early on March no other will be received in audience by the Pope until the close of the year. DEAD KING'S DOG HAS ROYAL DUTY

Caesar a Sad and Sober Animal, Feeling That Queen Alexandra Is His Special Charge.

(Special Dispatch.)
London, Saturday.

MANY stories are told about the affection of Caesar, the late King Edward's terrier, for his royal master. Some have appeared in print. Ever since that day last May when Caesar walked, a pathetic, disconsolate figure, behind the gun carriage which carried the body of his master he has had a place in the hearts of the people. Those who know the dog say that he has become a very sad and sober dog, except for one daily dash at out the Sandringham lawns, because he now feels that Queen Alexandra is his special charge.

Caesar has been a means, too, of showing that the memory of King Edward is still held in affectionate regard by his people. In all the toy and fancy stores the model of the dog, with the medallion around his neck "I am Caesar, the King's dog," has been in immense demand for Christmas and New Year's gifts.

One who knows Caesar well and who met him on friendly terms in London, in Paris, in the south of France, Biarritz, even at Lourdes, in Naples, Pompeii and elsewhere, says:

"Caesar was always a reserved dog and carried the habit into private life. His master, indeed, is credited with saying that Caesar was one of the greatest obstacles to the entente cordiale. He certainly showed no liking for 'dogs who were not wholly English.' He made few friends and profoundly despised those who had been taught tricks.

"During his several visits to Biarritz those who were promenading on the plaza could always tell by the doings of Caesar when His Majesty was about to join the throng. Should the King motor, Caesar first inspected the car to see that all was in order.

"For Caesar no one existed except his royal master. When the King was ill at Biarritz never was being more miserable than Caesar. Wherever His Majesty might be, at home or abroad, Caesar shared his room. His Majesty kept indoors himself, but saw to it that his dog was not without exercise, and to meet Caesar on a leash in charge of a servant or those of his own was a painful experience. He did not bark, but bared a set of magnificent teeth in a silence that was deeply significant.

"Caesar has become impressed and takes his place in history with the dogs of Sir Walter Scott and of Rosa with [illegible] that Landseer loved to paint. Now [illegible] with Queen Alexandra [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

A WONDERFUL REMEDY

ORANGE LILY

Orange Lily is daily curing the most obstinate cases of Female Disorders. Falling of the Womb, Leucorrhoea, Painful and Suppressed Menstruation, etc., etc., are all of them relieved from the start by its use, and a few weeks' or months' treatment accomplishes a complete cure. This remedy is a positive, scientific preparation, and is based on the discoveries of Pasteur and Lister. It is an applied treatment; that is, it is not taken internally, but is applied direct to the suffering parts, and it, therefore, acts with all the certainty of the known laws of chemical action. As it comes in direct contact with the diseased tissue, its antiseptic and nerve-food properties cannot help have a beneficent influence. I receive from 10 to 50 letters daily, speaking of the benefits and cures it is performing, and so sure am I that it will do what is claimed for it that I will send, absolutely free, a 25c box to every suffering woman who will write for it. Price, $1 per box, which is sufficient for one months' treatment. Address, MRS. FRANCES E. CURRAH, WINDSOR, ONT. 3

"ASHTON-KIRK, INVESTIGATOR"

By John T. McIntyre. Copyrighted and All Rights Reserved

He sprang forward with the evident intention of wrenching the picture from the wall; but Ashton-Kirk restrained him.

"Don't," said he. "We'll leave that for our expected visitor."

"Surely," protested the excited Pendleton, "you don't propose to leave the thing there! Think of the risk! You might lose it in the end; for you know, one never foresees what is to turn up."

They spent the long hours of the day in smoking and talking; and at intervals they ate the sandwiches and other things which had been smuggled in in the guise of packages of furs. And finally the shadows gathered and thickened once again in Christie Place.

CHAPTTR XXIV.

THE SECOND NIGHT

The second night of the vigil in Hume's rooms wore on. Unlike the preceding one, the two young men were almost entirely silent; when they did speak, it was in tones so low as to be scarcely above a whisper.

There was a taut, indefinable something in the air that kept the desire for sleep from both; in the brooding darkness they were alert, watchful, expectant. The tobacco-loving Pendleton afterwards recalled with surprise that not once did he think of the weed. But when the queer, mysterious night sounds began to come—those creaking of loose planks, strainings of unseen timbers and untraceable snappings in the walls, that are common in old houses—he frequently thought of the automatic revolver; and the chill of the polished metal always felt comforting enough.

The clocks announced the ends of the hours according to their temperaments; coming in the midst of the total silence, the din seemed to Pendleton to be terrific; he pictured appalled criminals on their way through the dark halls, crouching in fear at the sounds. Eleven o'clock struck, and then twelve with its continued uproar. It seemed a long time before one and then two sounded. Pendleton's limbs were beginning to feel loggy and numb because of the chill and the continued inaction. He had ventured to stir them a little, and was wrapping the heavy blanket more closely about himself, when he felt Ashton-Kirk's hand upon his shoulder.

"Hush-h-h'" said the investigator in a whisper.

Instantly Pendleton was motionless; he listened intently, but the silence of the place seemed complete.

"What is it?" he finally ventured to breathe.

The hand upon his shoulder tightened warningly; but there came no other reply. Again Pendleton listened. The door of the showroom stood open; Ashton-Kirk had placed it so in order that they might catch any sound that came from the hall. All the other doors leading into the hall from Hume's apartments were securely locked; anyone who ventured into the suite must first pass through the showroom where the two waited and watched.

After a space Pendleton's attention was rewarded; a faint, far-off rustling came to him; somehow it gave him the impression of hesitation, non-assurance, timidity; he was speculating upon the queerness of this impression when there came a faint, momentary glow from the hall—mysterious, phosphorescent, unreal; and then it vanished. Both young men were huddled upon the sofa, which was placed facing the open door. A huge Spanish screen was drawn before them; but the black leather was cracked in places; and through these they had a clear view of the hall.

A moment later the glow appeared once more; but this time it was brighter.

"Someone is on the stairs," reasoned Pendleton, his hand going to his revolver. "It looks as though he were lighting matches to show the way."

Between the sputters of light were spaces of darkness; these were filled in by the faint guarded rustling But as the light upon each appearance grew brighter, so did the sound become more distinct; and at length a light resonance, unmistakably a footstep, came from the hall.

Then steadily, softly the sound came on through the darkness; nearer and nearer it drew until at length it became unmistakable. The rustling was that of a woman's skirts! Then, so it seemed, the darkness of the doorway grew denser; the soft, quick breathing of the newcomer became audible; her hands were heard moving over the door frame as she blindly searched for the door.

Then, apparently, she learned that the door was open; a deeper breath showed the relief she felt at this; now she carefully entered the room.

Even before Pendleton's brain realized who it must be, he began to feel a tightening at his heart; and now as he pictured her advancing with outstretched, groping hands into the darkened room—a room horrible with crime and secret dread—it was all that he could do to hold himself in check. He had almost an overmastering desire to spring up, to cry out to her, to tell her not to fear.

He was still struggling with this feeling when he became aware that she had paused; and, also, that Ashton-Kirk was once more gripping his shoulder with a warning hand. Becoming instantly alert, his senses perceived a stoppage of everything—the clocks seemed to tick more faintly, he could no longer hear the woman breathe. There was an instant that feared with silence; then came the soft, steady padding of feet descending the stair.

Then he heard the girl release her breath in a great, trembling exhalation; the rustle of skirts came quick and sharp in the darkness; he heard the door through which she had entered the room squeak upon its hinges and then close with a click that proclaimed it fast.

After this there was a long pause. Pendleton could hear the faint breathing of the girl, and thought it rather odd that she did not catch the sound of his own. He pictured her leaning against the locked door, her heart throbbing with fear as she listened to the descending footsteps; stronger and stronger grew his desire to leap up and assure her that friends were at hand. But at the same time the warning grip of his companion, who seemed to feel what was in his mind, also grew stronger and stronger.

With the closing of the door, the sounds from the stairs had ceased to reach them. There was a long pause; Pendleton, during this, grew sensible of a long, wavering mental antenna which he projected into the shadows; and its delicate sensitiveness told him of the silent approach of a fearful thing. A long, long time, it seemed to him, but in reality it was remarkably brief.

Then the steps were heard, shuffling and secret, in the hall and very near at hand A soft, uncertain touch fell upon the smooth glass of the door. A little space more, and a rending sound came to their ears, followed by the falling of some metallic objects upon the floor. Pendleton required no explanation of these sounds; it was plain that the second intruder had come prepared and had forced one of the doors.

All the communicating doors of the suite had been left open; through them came the pushing about of furniture and the drawing down of blinds; then another match flared, followed by a stronger and steadier light, which showed that the second visitor had lighted the gas. The light filtered palely through the various rooms into the one in which the two men and the woman were hidden; by means of this the former could make the latter out in a dim, uncertain sort of way. She seemed unusually tall as she moved noiselessly across the floor and peered cautiously through the communicating doorways.

What she saw must have startled her, for she drew quickly back, her hand pressed to her heart. Then softly she retraced her steps; they heard the door-catch slip quietly back and were conscious that the door was swung open; the woman then crept inch by inch, so it seemed, down the hall.

It was the bedroom door that had been forced; the two watchers noted the bar of light that slanted from it across the passage. Nearer and nearer the woman approached it. Pendleton had at first thought that she was making for the stairs; but this died away as she passed them, unheeding. The automatic revolver was in his hand instantly; leaning toward his friend, he breathed in his ear:

"She's going in there."

The blanket slipped from him as he arose to his feet; his legs were still cramped and stiffened; he felt clumsy and unsure. Ashton-Kirk evidently agreed that the time had come for action, for he whispered in reply:

"Through the rooms! I will take the hall!"

Pendleton stepped from behind the screen like a shadow. Through the door leading to the storeroom he had an uninterrupted view of a part of the bedroom, and across the floor he saw thrown the shadow of a man. Noiselessly he tip-toed into the kitchen, the revolver held ready; just outside the bedroom he paused and drawing to one side, waited. Then he noted the shadow move slightly and heard a deep rumbling voice—as in French.

"You were a devil! Even now to look at you, you laugh and glow. The shadow upon the floor here swung its arms threateningly. "But laugh away! I have won and it is not turn to laugh!"

Here the shadow slid along and up the wall, peering around the edge of the door. Pendleton saw a man with massive, stooped shoulders and a great square head, covered with thick, iron-gray hair; and instantly he recognized him as the man whom they had seen that night in the doorway of Locke's workshop. The stranger was standing just under the portrait of Hume; he gazed up at it, and his big shoulders shook with laughter.

"What a mistake to make," he said, still in French. "How was I to know that the old devil once called himself Wayne?"

He reached up and took the picture from its hook; with thick, powerful fingers he tore the backing away, and a flat, compact bundle of papers was disclosed. The picture was thrown upon the bed, and the man stood staring at the papers, a wide smile upon his face.

"So this is the secret, oh? Well, Locke will pay well for it, and it will be worth all the risks I've taken."

He was fumbling with a coat pocket as though to stow them away when there came a swift, light rush the packet was torn from his hands, and Edyth Vale was darting toward the hall door and the stairway beyond.

But despite his bulk, the man with the stooped shoulders proved himself singularly swift. In two leaps he had overtaken her; dragging her back to the centre of the room, he snatched the packet from her in turn. Regarding her with calm, pitiless eyes, he said in English:

"I am sorry, mees, that you have come, eh? Eet makes eet mooch harder for me. And I am of the kind that would rather be off quietly, is it not? and say no words to no one."

Edyth Vale, pale of face, but with steady eye, returned his look.

"What are you going to do?" she asked.

"I am sorry to do anything," spoke the stranger. "I do not know you, and you will onderstan', will you not that I can't leave you behind—to talk?"

As he spoke a flashing something appeared from the girl's pocket; he lifted one huge paw to beat her down; but a clenched hand, protected by a corded buckskin glove, thudded against his jaw; his knees weakened, and he sprawled upo nthe floor

"Jimmie!" gasped Edyth Vale. "Jimmie Pendleton!"

"Oh, Edyth—Edyth!" was all the man could say. He slipped his arm around her, for she was tottering; and as he helped her to a chair, Ashton-Kirk quietly entered at the hall door.

"Miss Vale," said he, "good-evening."

Without waiting to note if she even gave him a look, he bent over the fallen man and snapped a pair of handcuffs upon his wrists.

"A very pretty blow, Pen," said he admiringly, "I must be timed, and your judgment of distance was excellent."

Then he stepped swiftly through the hall; a moment later they heard him throw up one of the windows overlooking the street, and a whistle shrilled through the night.

"Paulson is on duty," said the investigator, returning. "He'll be here in a jiffy."

Sure enough, they soon heard heavy steps upon the stairs; and then Paulson and a fellow patrolman appeared in the doorway. Astonished, the policeman gazed at Ashton-Kirk who nodded to them smilingly, then they turned their gaze upon Pendleton, who was peaking soothing words to the white-faced girl, who, now that the danger was over, clung to him tremblingly. But when their eyes centered upon the manacled stranger who was then dazedly struggling to a sitting position, Paulson asked:

"Who is this?"

"This," answered Ashton-Kirk, "is M Sagon, a fellow lodger of Antonio Spatola, formerly a very close friend of the late Mr. Hume, and once a resident of Bayonne, in France."

CHAPTER XXV.

APPROACHING THE FINISH

Pendleton spent the night at Ashton-Kirk's, and after breakfast he wandered into the library, a newspaper in his hand and an inquiring look on his face.

The investigator was seated in his usual big chair, buried to the knees in newspapers, and making vigorous inroads upon the Greek tobacco. Fuller was just leaving the room as Pendleton entered, and nodding toward the disappearing form, Ashton-Kirk said:

"There is some rather interesting news. I have had Locke, as you perhaps know, under observation for some time. Last night he took the train at Cordova, and Burgess followed him. When he reached the city, he went directly to Christie Place and was seen lurking about in the shadows."

"Humph," said Pendleton, "what time was this?"

"Perhaps about eleven o'clock Burgess, so Fuller tells me, never lost sight of him. He acted in a queerly hesitating sort of way; finally, however, he seemed to form a resolution and went to the door of the Marx house. He was about to pull the bell, then paused and tried the door instead. It was evidently not locked. He seemed both surprised and pleased at this; he lost no time, however, but went in at once."

Pendleton sat down

"What do you suppose all this meant?" he asked.

"Well, we can't be too sure," replied Ashton-Kirk, "but I think it probable that he, also, saw the news of the settlement of the points in the papers. Perhaps he came to Christie Place with the intention of informing Sagon of the opportunity that was presented, and on finding that he had hopes of some over-reaching his companion."

He looking about as if seeking to point rather in that direction."

Pendleton.

"And his preferring to enter the lodging house without ringing also indicates some such idea. As I see it, he hoped to gain the roof unobserved. He knew the house and the habits of the people quite well. No doubt he had a plan, and a good one. He's a thinker, is Mr. Locke."

"If he was noticed, he could indicate that he had called to see M. Sagon."

"Exactly. But I very much doubt his gaining the roof. Perhaps, after all, he was detected; for a few minutes later Burgess saw him leave the house."

"Humph!" said Pendleton. Then after some moments spent in the examination of his paper, he threw it down. "It's full of all sorts of allusions to monoplanes and such like," grumbled he. "As I had to take Edyth home last night, and you went bravely away with the police and Sagon, I had myself, as usual, trailing some distance in the rear."

"I gave them the heads of the case very plainly," said he, "but it was almost the hour for going to press. I suppose they did not get the finer points of my meaning. Some of them have made a sad mess of it. However, the evening papers will have a coherent account, I suppose."

"If you think I am going to wait until the evening papers are issued to get to the bottom of this thing, you're much mistaken," declared Pendleton. "I demand a full and detailed explanation immediately."

Here a tap came upon the door; Stumph entered and handed Ashton-Kirk a card.

"Let him come up," said the latter and, as the man went out, he continued to Pendleton. "We will both probably be much enlightened now. It is Allan Morris."

The investigator laughed.

"A small feat of reasoning, nothing more," said he. "However, an enthusiast might find some of the elements of second sight in our conversation in this room about a week ago."

Pendleton looked at him questioningly.

Suffered Greatly From Heart Trouble.

NERVES WERE VERY WEAK.

Mrs. John Farrell, Rose Hill, P.E.I., writes:—"It is with the greatest of pleasure I write you stating the benefit I have received by using Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

"About five years ago I suffered greatly from heart trouble, and my nerves were very weak. After seeing several doctors and using their medicine, I got no relief until a friend told me of your Heart and Nerve Pills. I took two boxes and they effected a complete cure. I can recommend them highly to all nervous and run down women.

"I have advised many others to try them and they have all been cured of the same trouble."

The proper action of the nerves, so important to the well-being of the heart, depends entirely upon the general condition of the nervous system. If there be nerve derangement of any kind, it is bound to produce heart derangement.

In Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills is combined a treatment that will cure all forms of nervous disorders, as well as act on the heart itself, and in this is the secret of their success in curing so many cases of heart and nerve trouble.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c per box, or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

The matter in this Department is supplied by the Peterborough Branch of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, which has arranged for its publication.

THE FOUNDER OF THE "FLORENCE CRITTENTON MISSIONS"

It is called a "unique philanthropy unequalled by that of any other American of his time" that stands to the credit of the late Charles N. Crittenton. Some seventy-five rescue homes for fallen women are scattered up and down the world as the result of his benevolence. Mr. Crittenton early in life followed the wholesale drug business and made a fortune in that career, but the loss of his five-year-old daughter, Florence, in 1882, turned him toward active charitable work as a means of assuaging his grief. It is told in The Christian Herald (New York December 1st) that his philanthropy took its particular form from the answer he received one night "when pleading with an abandoned woman to forsake her degraded life and sin no more." The woman "asked the natural question how she was to live if she turned away from evil, all avenues to her return to decent living being closed to her." The writer continues:

"In trying to find a practical answer to her question Mr. Crittenton discovered how difficult it was for such women to return to virtuous life. The gulf seemed impassable and, while it remained so, it was a mockery to urge them to repent. He satisfied himself with a compassionate heart and a liberal expenditure an opportunity for reclamation might be afforded that many would embrace. He resolved to make the experiment. He hired a large house in a suitable quarter in New York, had it cleansed and furnished and caused it to be known that any woman of vicious life desiring to reform would be cordially welcomed there, and would be helped to cut loose from evil associations and be assisted in her efforts to recover her lost position in society. It was a pleasure to him to identify this effort with his lost daughter. He gave the house her name, and the first Florence Mission was established.

"It succeeded beyond his hopes. Some of the rescued girls were restored to their homes, some were enabled to secure employment and some married. Mr. Crittenton's success in New York encouraged him to establish similar institutions in other cities, and there are now many of them in various parts of the country, shining like beacons to those who have made moral ship-wreck of life. In some instances the missions have been placed under the care of women who have themselves been rescued from lives of shame; and it has been found that none are more successful than they in the work of rescuing others. So the name of the lost child has been immortalized and her memory is perpetuated in the hearts of many who through these memorials of her have been saved from ruin."

After founding the Florence Night Mission at No. 21 Bleecker Street, New York, Mr. Crittenton gave up all other business and decided to devote his whole life to this particular work. His determination was carried out until the time of his death, which occurred in San Francisco, Nov. 16th. Of his life the writer gives these further facts.

"He controlled a large income, which he expended wholly upon the mission work he had carefully planned. Consecrating his entire energies to this task, he took upon himself the labors of a missionary and evangelist, and went from city to city, establishing new homes at points where social conditions were the worst. More than seventy-four Florence Crittenton Homes were thus founded, and thousands of young women were rescued from lives of sin and shame. Not only was each of these homes a refuge and an open door for the poor social outcasts, but it held out to them the hope and solace of the gospel. Many found peace and blessing in believing and date their new life from the time they entered the Florence Crittenton Homes.

"Mr. Crittenton, in the course of his evangelistic work, travelled in other lands, with the result that, observing social conditions in many foreign cities, he founded homes in these also wherever the opportunity was afforded and the need seemed to demand it. Shanghai, Tokyo, City of Mexico, Marseilles and populous cities in other foreign lands have similar homes founded in memory of the little American girl who with her dying breath pleaded with her father to 'help other girls.' That loving, last request was surely a rich legacy in its world-wide results. Thousands of rescued and redeemed women today live to bless the memory of this gentle child, and to sorrow for the loss of the kind, tender, noble man who had been the best friend they had ever known on earth.

"Mr. Crittenton was born at Henderson, Jefferson County, N.Y., Feb. 20th, 1833. He was an ardent advocate of temperance, and was at one time Prohibition candidate for mayor of New York." — The Literary Digest.

THE CONNECTION OF THE FLORENCE CRITTENTON MISSIONS WITH THE W.C.T.U.

Mrs. Charlton Edholm explained: "In June, 1895, on the recommendation of our dear friend, the second round-the-world missionary, Miss Jessie Ackermann, I was appointed by Miss Frances E. Willard and Lady Somerset and the Executive Board of the World's W.C.T.U., as superintendent of the newly-created department of the Florence Crittenton Missions, founded by our W.C.T.U. brother-in-law, Evangelist Charles N. Crittenton. So deeply was he impressed that the World's Christian Temperance Union might be a grand ally in his rescue work, that at the Denver Convention he gave Miss Willard $5,000 to found five Florence Crittenton Missions under the auspices of the W.C.T.U. His sympathy with our temperance work is so great that he became the first life member of the World's W.C.T.U. and the book, "The Traffic in Girls and Florence Crittenton Missions," was published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association. Miss Willard said Mr. Crittenton is one of the best patrons of our work, he has spent about $10,000 in W.C.T.U. channels."

Tone Is Always First

Tone is the most important feature of a piano—because, on the quality and permanency of tone, depends the value of the piano.

The magnificent, singing tone of unapproachable in sweetness, mellowness and majesty—is possible because the New Scale Williams Piano not only is more heavily strung on its massive plate and scale, than other Pianos, but also because of the Harmonic Tone Prolonging Bridge which prevents the introduction of faulty and imperfect tones.

If your home needs a piano to complete its comforts, perhaps our plan of buying a New Scale Williams on easy payments will interest you. Write for full particulars and copies of our illustrated booklets.

A DAILY THOUGHT

NEWEST SHOE FASHIONS

With narrow skirts the shoes for every hour must be considered as important factors of a costume. No longer do the plain black shoes mean the dress parade.

Paris is very emphatic in the use of the cloth-topped shoe, and the uppers must match the colour of the walking suit or carriage gown. There are some extreme Louis XIV. shoes with silver buttons and a band of velvet to match the color of the elaborate costume above.

Tan shoes are in great demand. The waterproof leather is worn for business hours and are mannish in cut. Button and laces are about equally divided.

For evening the slippers are revelling in a luxury of colors and materials. Lace, satin, cloth of gold and silver, and many colors of suede and bronzed kid are shown. The quickies! Here, indeed, are the efforts of masters. Antique forms, gold, silver and jewelled disks and fluffy rosettes of tulle and satin are used to decorate the front. The evening shoe. Beads play an important part in the buckles.

Some shoes are sold with several sets of buckles attached by pins. The satin shades are included, and the idea is to wear the set that best harmonizes with a gown.

Have you noticed the velvet shoes? Just, they marched into prominence in black, but the other colors have joined the ranks, it is a question to be settled later, whether America will follow the lead of Paris.

FOR HOME DRESSMAKER

When using a paper pattern which is perforated for marking tucks, darts seams, etc., the usual method is to use chalk, and it is necessary to remove the pattern when making a mist, for instance, and turn the goods over in order to mark both sides alike. An easier way is to use a needle with a long basting thread and take one stitch in the cloth through the perforation, break off about six inches of thread and knot both ends together. When the pattern is removed the knot shows through the perforation and both sides of the goods are marked. All that is necessary now is to pull the two pieces of cloth apart and cut the double thread in the middle. It not only saves time, but does away with the marks, which are apt to show after the tucks are stitched. To hang a skirt easily and evenly first fit it properly to the hips and waist and finish the belt as it is worn. Put the skirt on and see that it hangs straight from the belt to the floor. Measure with a yard stick, and mark with pins on the skirt at the edge the desired length from the floor. Do the same with several pins then take off skirt and baste a line all around where the pins are. Place the skirt on the ironing board wrong side out, as if you were going to iron it, and if you want the skirt to clear the ground two inches, measure thirty-four inches from the basting to the bottom, and turn up and press the hem to position with a flatiron. Instead of pinning paper patterns to the cloth, set a couple of flatirons at opposite ends to hold it. It saves the pattern and keeps thin, loosely woven goods from pulling out of shape

NEEDLEWORK NOTES

To make buttonholes strong in children's clothes work over ordinary soft wrapping string. Hold it on the inside as near the edge as possible and it will not show when the buttonhole is finished.

There is an important point in regard to making scallops. That is, after the scallop is made and cut out, go all over it again with a tiny buttonhole stitch. This prevents fraying and gives body to the scallop.

A pin-cushion on the wrist is a convenience to the small dressmaker. It should be a small, soft cushion, attached to an elastic band just snug enough to wear on the left wrist. No stopping of work is then necessary to look for a pin.

Finish the skirt at the top and put it on just as you would wear it. Rub chalk on the edges of a table and, standing against it, turn around so the chalk mark will encircle the skirt. Take off the skirt and measure from the chalk mark an equal distance all around to the hem.

To keep drawstrings from pulling out of underwear always an annoying accident, which occurs just as you are in a hurry, sew to each end of the tape a brass embroidery ring slightly larger than the opening in the casing, sewing it on after the tape has been inserted. Buttonhole over the ring in the color of the tape. Use this method and your drawstring will never slip

USEFUL RECIPES
GERMAN ZIMMET KUCHEN

Boil one potato and mash it. Add to it enough of the water in which it was boiled to make a pint; put this over the fire and melt in it a tablespoonful of lard and one-eighth pound of butter. Take from the fire and stir in two cups of sugar, three beaten eggs and a yeast cake dissolved in a little lukewarm water. Add flour until too stiff to stir with a spoon. Be sure to have all the ingredients and the utensils lukewarm. Set to rise once, then spread in shallow pans and set to rise again. Just before baking spread melted butter over the top and sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon.

HICKORY NUT CAKE

One and a half cups of sugar, one-half cup of butter, three-quarters of a cup of sweet milk, two cups of flour, sifted with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, the whites of four well-beaten eggs, or two whole eggs well beaten; one cup of chopped hickory-nut meats, well dredged with flour and added last of all. Bake in a loaf tin or in small pans.

CHERRY PUDDING

One egg, one tablespoonful of butter, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, one and one-half cups of flour, one-half cup of milk, one and one-half teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Mix well. Put into the bottom of each custard cup two tablespoonfuls of pitted cherries, fill cups with batter and milk, one-half cup of sugar, one cup of molasses, four squares of chocolate, steam for one-half hour.

HOME-MADE CANDIES

Chocolate Caramels.—Two tablespoonfuls of butter, one-half cup of one cup of walnut meats broken in fine pieces. Put butter in a porcelain saucepan and when melted add milk, sugar and molasses. When these are at the boiling point add chocolate, finely grated, and cook until brittle, when tried in cold water. Stir often to prevent mixture from sticking to pan. Remove from the fire, beat four times, and then put in the nuts and two teaspoonfuls of vanilla and turn into a buttered pan. When cold cut in squares and wrap each in paraffin paper.

Peanut Nougat.—One pound of sugar and one quart of shelled peanuts. Chop the nuts fine, and sprinkle them with a little table salt. Put the sugar in a smooth granite saucepan, and when it is on the fire stir constantly until melted to a syrup, taking care to keep the sugar from hardening on the sides of the pan. Add the nuts, stirring them well through the sugar, and pour at once into a warm, buttered tin and mark the squares. The sugar must be taken from the fire the moment it is melted or the candy will not be a success.

Cocoanut Creams.—Two cups of sugar, two-thirds cup of milk, two teaspoonfuls of butter, one-half cup of shredded cocoanut, one-half teaspoonful of vanilla. Put butter in a granite saucepan; when melted add sugar and milk. Heat to boiling point and stir until sugar is dissolved and then boil gently twelve minutes; remove from fire, add cocoanut and vanilla and beat until creamy and mixture begins to sugar slightly around the edges of the saucepan. Pour then into a buttered pan, cool slightly, and mark off in diamonds.

Pralines.—One and seven-eighths cups of powdered sugar, one cup of maple syrup, one-half cup of cream, two cups of hickory nuts or pecan meats, cut in pieces. Boil first three things until, when tried in cold water, a soft ball forms. Remove at once from fire and beat until creamy; add nuts and drop from tip of spoon in small blobs on buttered paper.

Sweet Popcorn.—Two cups of newly popped corn, two tablespoonfuls of butter, two cups of brown sugar, one-half cup of water. Put butter in saucepan and when melted add sugar and water. Bring to boiling point and then boil sixteen minutes. Pour over corn until every kernel is well coated, and then pack them together in balls before the syrup is too cold to make them adhere together.

Old-fashioned Molasses Candy.—Two cups of Porto Rico molasses, two-thirds cup of sugar, three tablespoonfuls of butter, one tablespoonful of cider vinegar. An iron or copper kettle with round bottom is best for making this. Put butter in, place over fire and when melted add molasses and sugar. Stir until sugar is dissolved—doing this well when the candy is nearly done lest it burn. Boil until the mixture becomes brittle in cold water. Add vinegar just before taking it from the fire, and then pour into a well buttered pan. When cool enough to handle, pull until light in color and porous in quality; do this with the tips of the fingers and thumb. Cut in small pieces with greased shears, and then arrange on slightly buttered platters to cool.

"Bronchitis"

The disease begins with a tightness across the chest, difficulty of breathing, hoarseness, and there is a dry, harsh, croupy cough.

After a few days mucous begins to be mixed. This is at first white, but later of a greenish or yellowish color and is occasionally streaked with blood.

Cure the first symptoms of Bronchitis by the use of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup and thus prevent it becoming chronic and perhaps turning to Consumption.

Mrs. D. J. McCormack, Cleveland, N.S., writes: "My little boy, two years old, caught a bad cold which developed into Bronchitis. He was so choked up he could hardly breathe. Reading about your wonderful medicine, Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, I decided to try a bottle, and with such good result I got another which completely cured him, without having a doctor. I cannot say too much in its praise and would not be without it in the house as I consider it a sure cure for Colds and Bronchitis.

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 25 cents.

BEAUTY'S MISTAKE

A Short Story.

When Peggy went to visit her Cousin Estelle, who lived in the city, she felt that she was going to have the most wonderful time of her life. Peggy had always lived in a village and it was really a great undertaking for her to go to the city alone. Estelle met her at the station and took her to the house where she lived—one of a long row of houses very close together and looking much alike . The first night Peggy hung out of her window for hours too excited to sleep. She watched the arc lights blink and listened to the noises of far-away traffic. In the morning the clatter of hoofs on the pavement awoke her early.

"Estelle," she said at breakfast, where Estelle appeared in a kimona and Bob seemed to be conscious of nothing save the stock reports in the morning paper, "there's a perfectly beautiful lady in the house next door. Who is she?"

"Why, I'm sure I don't know," Estelle answered, smiling. "I don't kno wany of my neighbors except Mrs. Bard, who lives round the corner. That's the difference between country and city life, you see. We live very close to strange people sometimes, only we don't know it."

"She doesn't look strange," persisted Peggy. "There she is now!"

Estelle did look. On the tiny lengt hof lawn between that house and the next a woman was slowly walking. Sh ewas tall and charmingly shaped and she held her blonde head regally.

Peggy was very much interested in the beautiful woman who wore party dresses all day long. She watched the house next door whenever she had the opportunity. Before the day was over she had seen the lady's husband. He was heavily built and dark, with a square, grim face. After the lights were lit and before the shades were drawn Peggy saw them going through the rooms together, he with his arm about her waist.

As the days went on Peggy saw that he was at home from morning till night with his wife, and that though he came to the windows sometimes and looked out he never seemed to go out of doors. They were lonely people, those two. Nobody but the delviery clerks ever went there, and their way led to the back door. One day an agent rang the front door bell, but she was not admitted.

Cousin Estelle made it very pleasant for Peggy. Besides the sightseeing Cousin Estelle was always having folks in to lunch or dine or play bridge, and when they were not entertaining they were being entertained at other houses. The October weathr had mellowed suddenly until it was as warm as June. Peggy had brought two or three of her summer frocks and she was glad to put them on. One afternoon Estelle left Peggy to rest at home while she went across the city on a matter of business. Peggy read until she was tired, and then she got up off the couch and began to walk about. Presently she walked out of doors and began to pace up and down the bit of lawn under Estelle's dining-room windows, all the time keeping watch for a sight of the beautiful woman about whom there seemed to be so much mystery. Suddenly a side window opened and there, leaning upon the sill was the woman herself. She had on a gown of black lace and a necklace of amethysts was clasped about her smooth, bare neck. She looked at Peggy and smiled.

"That's such a dear little frock you have on," she said, "and it suits you so well. I love pink cotton frocks. I wish I had one to wear."

Peggy gasped.

"But surely what you have on is far more beautiful," she replied. "You have such splendid gowns. I just envy you. Why, I never had a silk gown in my life!"

"Didn't you?" said the lady. "I don't happen to have any other kind. And it is very inconvenient, especially mornings when I'm trying to get breakfast. My husband got me two big kitchen aprons which cover me up pretty well. He's away to-day and I'm very lonely. Won't you come in? I'll show you all my things if you will."

The house had an oddly unhomelike look. There were no curtains, as Estelle had said, and only a little furniture and nothing but large rugs to cover the bare boards of the floor. It looked as if the occupants were just getting ready to move or had not had time to get settled, though Estella had told her that they had lived there for months. The lady, who sai dher name was Mrs. Wilson, took Peggy to the front parlor, which was emptier than any of the other rooms she had seen. But in it were some rare and beautiful things—a case of coins, some wonderful embroideries and books and costly bindings and a couple of little dark canvases with a famous name sketched in the corner of each. Mrs. Wilson showed them all to her. Her husband, she said, was fond of rare things like these. Presently she took Peggy up to her chamber, where she brought out some beautiful trocks and laces. She had a jewel case, too, but there was nothing in it save a bracelet of amethyst to match the necklace she wore. Mrs. Wilson sighed a little over the jewel case and fingered the clasp thoughtfully. She left Peggy to admire the things while she ran down stairs a moment. When she came back she had in her hands a tray laden with cups, cream, hot tea, and rich, black fruit cake.

"This is English fruit cake," she explained a sshe poured the tea. "I am English. Sometimes," she said, "I wish I was back in England again as I was before I—knew Cuthbert." She crumbled her cake, not eating it. "I've got to talk to somebody," she said, earnestly, "I'm going to talk to you. That's why I called you in this afternoon. I'm homesick until death." Her voice broke . She put her head down in her hands and though Peggy saw no tears she knew that she was crying. With a quick movement she knelt beside Mrs. Wilson and took her in her arms.

"Don't cry, dear," she said. "Don't cry."

"No," the woman said with an effort at regaining composure. "I mustn't. For, do you know, Cuthbert is always angry if he finds out I've been crying. But you will not wonder that I mus tweep when I tell you what I have done. I ran away with Cuthbert from England and my father. There! Go back and sit down, dear child, and I'll tell you how I came to do it.

"Cuthbert was the bailiff upon my father's estate," she went on, when Peggy, looking very much shocked, had obeyed her. "A bailiff in England is about the same as an overseer here. We knew nothing whatever about Cuthbert except that he appeared one morning in answer to an advertisement, and father turned over the management of affairs to him. The old bailiff had died and there wa sgreat need to get somebody at once. I remember so well the morning I first saw Cuthbert. He was ushered into the room where we were at breakfast—my father, my aunt, and I. I gave him one look and went on with my letters and my breakfast. I scarcely observed that father had engaged him. I did not see him again until one day when I was riding past the Cote farm. There I met Cuthbert. We spoke and passed. But after that I seemed always to be meeting him. And then one day he rode with me to see a piece of work that was being done. Something he said before we parted made me think that he loved me—and—and, I believed him. I was unhappy just then, and angry with my father because he wanted me to marry someone I didn't like very well. He said I must stop running around on hunters and get married. It was high time. I knew that he would make me marry the man I did not like, unless—well, there was Cuthbert. I did like Cuthbert, though he was only the bailiff, and I told him what my father was going to make me do. We planned to elope. And one night Cuthbert ran a motor right up under the gates and I went out, laden with some of my favorite gowns, and all my jewels, and got into it. The motor took us to Liverpool, and there the steamship was docked ready to sail next day. We sailed with her, but before that we were married——" She fell into a long silence, memory-full, which Peggy dare not intrude upon.

Peggy stayed until she was sure that Estelle would be coming home. Mrs. Wilson—Peggy felt now that her name was not Wilson—let her go very reluctantly. She clung to Peggy's hands a long time, and then she too kthe girl in her arms and kissed her.

"You have done me good," darling," she said. "You must come again. I can talk to you, and there is no one else—not another soul in America I can trust."

Peggy promised to go again and to bring Estelle. She told Estelle that she had been in to see Mrs Wilson, but sh edid not repeat what Mrs Wilson had told her. And Estelle, whose mind was very much taken up with a bridge party they had been asked to attend that evening did not scold her for her indiscretion. It was very late when they returned from the bridge party, and Peggy went to sleep immediately. She slept late. But the first thing she did upon rising was to look out at the house where Mrs. Wilson lived. The shades were down and all that day Peggy saw nothing of her new friend.

That night at dinner, Estelle's husband suddenly laid back his fork an dlooked across at his women folk "They say down-town," he said, "that our neighbors, the Wilsons, skipped out last night, bag and baggage. Must have been while we were at that bridge party. It seems there was a detective looking up Wilson as he calls himself. He's a blackleg and a pretty hard character, I should judge, from what I hear. But the woman's his wife all right and innocent of his doings. She's out a letter in England. Probably she'd go back to him if they caught Wilson. But I guess they won't catch him. He's a pretty slick rascal. Why, what's the matter with our Peggy here? Is she going to faint away?"

But Peggy did not faint, for all she had turned so white. She merely put her head down on the table and sobbed.

"Poor Madeline! Poor Madeline!" was all she could say.

WEDDING AGAIN PUT OFF

Special to the Examiner

BOSTON, JAN. 14.—The marriage of Miss Edith Deacon and George Lee Peabody, which was to have taken place to-day, has been postponed indefinitely.

"We were not married to-day and have arranged no new date for the ceremony," said Miss Deacon this evening. "Beyond that statement," she added, "I have nothing to say."

The wedding was originally set for September 17, but was postponed until to-day on account of Mr. Peabody's illness. He has been at a private hospital in this city and Miss Deacon has been watching his condition, visiting him daily. His condition ,it is reported, has changed but little.

AN OPEN LETTER

From a Baptist Clergyman Telling of Cures Wrought by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills

The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.:

Gentlemen,—It has been my intention to write to you for some time but being busy I have neglected to do so until now.

I am a Baptist minister. Was ordained June 14th, 1887, in Cramahe Baptist church, Northumberland Co. Ont. I want to tell you in as few words as possible what I know about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I was pastor of the Dalesville, Que., Baptist church in 1891 and again in 1894-5. While pastor in 1891, the Rev. John Kling, a former pastor, aged 74, was stricken with paralysis so that he could not help himself. He had to, or did, take a tablespoonful of rhubarb every day to keep his bowels regular. I thought of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. He began taking them and it was not long before he could walk again and his bowels were regular. The paralysis never returned and his bowels remained active. He died a few years ago practically from old age.

I went from Dalesville, Que. to Groton, Vermont, as pastor of the Baptist Church in that place. There lived a man about two and one-half miles from Groton by the name of Neil McCrea, a Canadian. I heard he was ill, and being a Canadian, I went to see him. I found him lying in bed. He said he had no pain, but was too weak to sit up. His lips were bloodless, in fact he was as white as chalk. I recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and gave him some. He began taking them and in a short time could see blood in the veins of his hands and in the course of a few weeks he was out watching men building a new barn for him, and shortly after that he came to Groton to church. Now, I ought to tell you that the doctor of Groton had given him up. The Ryegate doctor (a doctor in an adjoining village) could not help him and said so. The best doctor in the hospital at Burlington Vt., came and saw Mr. McCrea, but said he could not help him. He did not get any help till Dr. Williams' Pink Pills put him on his feet again.

Later I returned to Dalesville, Que. as pastor. A young lady who lived about six miles west of Dalesville at a place called Edina, sent for me to come to see her, as she had been a member of my congregation in my former pastorate. I went to see her and found a similar case to that of Mr McCrae, of Groton, Vt. This girl was so weak she could not sit up. She appeared to be bloodless. I said to her "It will cost you $6.00 to get a doctor to come out from Lachute to see you whereas you can get six boxes of Dr Williams' Pink Pills for $2.50." She followed my advice, took Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and when some time later I saw her in Lachute, she was as well as ever, and Dr. Williams' Pink Pills did it all.

I have given you the facts of these three cases which came to my personal notice and I think it is only just to other sufferers that these cures should be given the widest publicity. If you wish me to go before a magistrate and take oath to the truthfulness of the things mentioned above, I am prepared to do so. I am at present engaged in evangelistic work, and have therefore not at the present time a permanent address. I can, however, refer you to the editor of the Canadian Baptist.

AN AEROPLANE TO DELIVER PAPERS

Special to The Examiner

LOS ANGELES, JAN. 14.—For the first time a newspaper was delivered to its subscribers by aeroplane.

After a spectacular departure from Los Angeles, flying up San Gabriel Valley swiftly and steadily, Didier Masson, in his biplane Pegasus, carried 561 copies of the Times to Pomona and San Bernardino, 60 miles away on an air line. The aviator lost his way before making his first scheduled stop at Pomona and alighted near Rochester at 8.45, breaking an inner tube of a wheel as he came to earth.

B. C. Klotz of Cucamonga took the aviator on an automobile to Pomona. Engineering and mechanics were called and in short work the crippled aeroplane and Masson were again on his way in a little less than half an hour.

Masson also carried letters from the local Chamber of Commerce to officers of the Merchants' Association of Pomona and the Chamber of Commerce at San Barnardino.

Masson started at 7 a.m. and ascended to an altitude of more than 1,000 feet. At Pasadena he was more than 2,000 feet in the air.

This afternoon while giving an exhibition at San Barnardino, after having delivered his papers, Masson fell from an altitude of thirty feet and smashed his machine. He escaped injury.

A soft night turns away combination.

ELOPERS HIDING WITH BULLETS OR JAIL FACING THE MAN

Special to The Examiner

NEW YORK, JAN. 14.—Charles R. Drummond, the St. Louis millionaire who startled society in that city Thursday by eloping with Miss Agnes McClanahan, a stenographer, and who arrived with her in New York on the Pennsylvania Railroad's twenty-four hour flyer Friday night, spent yesterday keeping out of sight.

The runaways, who were accompanied by a mutual friend named Logan, got into a taxicab at the station and Drummond gave orders to drive to the Hotel Astor. The chauffeur afterward said he had driven to the Hotel Woodstock, No. 127 West Forty-third Street, but the manager, W. H. Valiquette, denied last night that any persons answering the description of Drummond and Miss McClanahan were registered there. Hotel attaches said they remembered a party of three driving in a taxicab Friday night, but the names und erwhich they registered could not be learned.

ESCAPED SIX MONTHS IN JAIL

Drummond, who is the son of a tobacco manufacturer, has had a sensational matrimonial career. Less than a week ago he was sentenced to six months' imprisonment and fined $500 for bigamy in St. Louis. But sentence was suspended and he was paroled on his promise never to touch liquor in St. Louis or to marry without being legally divorced. He had pleaded guilty to bigamy in having married Charlotte Vincent.

Miss Maude Ringer became Drummond's fifth twife and three children were born to the couple. She got a divorce January 28, 1909. His next matrimonial venture was with Miss Vincent of No. 6,625 Chamberlain Avenue. Without getting a divorce from her he married Charlotte Bente on January 8 of last year.

ELOPING IS HIS SPECIALTY

His turning of the marriage alter into a three-ring circus got him in trouble. At the bigamy hearings, testimony showed he exerted a strange hypnotic influence over the women he had married. This influence, however, was dispelled as soon as the knot was tied in the cases of wives Nos. 2 and 3. Each left him as soon as she had become Mrs. Drummond.

All three marriages were elopements. His first wife, who was the daughter of John Bingen, a stove manufacturer, was a mere schoolgirl when Drummond fled with her. He was only twenty years old. In her bill for divorce she charged that Drummond drank to excess, squandered his money in bucket shops, and neglected her and the children.

Prosecutor E. W. Mills of St. Louis County yesterday wired the New York police to arrest Drummond if he was found intoxicated or in company with the young woman with whom he eloped. Detectives were sent on his trail last night.

Meanwhile John McClanahan of Eureka Springs, Ark., father of Drummond's companion, is hurrying East with a two-fold purpose—that of finding his daughter and wreaking vengeance on the young millionaire. He arrived in St. Louis soon after Miss McClanahan started for New York with Drummond. The father may get here to-day.

MAY HAVE TO SERVE SENTENCE

Drummond, if arrested for having broken his parole, will have to serve his six months' sentence.

Miss McClanahan is twenty-two years old and was a stenographer for Louis Kastor, president of an advertising company. She lived at No. 4,057a Shenandoah Avenue. Mrs. Elliott, with whom she boarded, said Drummond had been very attentive to the girl for the last six months.

He called on her often, took her automobiling, gave her diamonds, and even offered her $5,000. Mrs. Elliott says, if she would go with him to Europe. It was believed the couple would sail as soon as they arrived here, but agents of the lines which had vessels sailing yesterday said no couple answering the description of the fugitives had engaged passage.

Mrs. Charlotte Drummond, the third wife, said yesterday in St. Louis that she had not seen her husband in four weks and didn't care if she never saw him again.

WHY SLEEP IS NECESSARY

During sleep Nature restores the cells and tissues wasted by the activities of life. Without sleep physical bankruptcy is quick and certain. Mrs. J Derocher, 485 Bethune street, Peterborough, Ont., writes: "I can say for a certainty that Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food is a splendid medicine, for besides steadying the nerves, it built up my sleep wonderfully and enabled me to sleep and eat well."

OLD MAN MURDERED WITH A HAMMER ROBBERY EVIDENTLY THE MOTIVE

Terrible Crime Near Berlin—Victim Found Tied to a Post a Few Feet From His Kitchen Door.

A TERRIBLE ENCOUNTER

Special to The Examiner:

BERLIN, ONT., JAN. 13.—A terrible murder was revealed this morning by the finding of the blood-covered body, frozen stiff, of an aged Pole named Franz Tobinski, tied ot a post a few feet from the kitchen door of his house, two miles west of Wellesley Village, near Berlin. Robbery was the motive of the crime, and it is known that the murderers got away with $130 in gold, which Tobinski had kept in a little tin box. This box was found lying out side in the snow. Fifty yards away from where the body lay was found a blood-stained hammer of medium size of a kind used by blacksmiths. There were tracks of two men in the snow and also of a team of horses, but the police have no clew as to the identity of the murderers.

It was apparent that the old man was roused from his sleep and induced to open the kitchen door. There a terrible encounter must have taken place, as the room presented an awful spectacle of bloodshed, and Tobinski, although seventy years old, was a strongly built man, capable of putting up a good fight for his life. Just outside the door was a frozen pool of blood and blood stains all about in the snow and over to a post where the body was found. One foot was tied to the post by a wire, and when found the body was lying on the snow, with the foot sticking up against the post. The body had evidently been there all night and probably since the previous night, as it was the loud bellowing of hungry cattle that attracted the attention of one Leyes from the road. Leyes was a neighbour of Tobinski, and his confidant, the latter entrusting him with many of his business transactions. Leyes knew that just a few days previously Tobinski had $130 in gold in the little tin box. Among the effects found in a search of the house by the authorities were a number of notes and receipts in a box. Tobinski was worth possibly $10,000. He had lived alone in the house since the death of his wife six years ago.

After making the ghastly discovery Leyes summoned other neighbours, and soon a large crowd gathered at the scene of the murder. Coroner Glaister of Wellesley, was notified, but he could not go ahead with the inquest, as he had not taken the oath since the accession of King George, and had to proceed to Berlin to be sworn by Crown Attorney Bowlby, returning to Wellesley in the evening. The inquest will open to-morrow afternoon.

It had been thought that the Provincial authorities would send officers up to-night to investigate the case, but it transpires that notification was sent by letter, so that the official news will not reach them until to-morrow morning.

The Rev. Paul Sobozak, a Pole priest of Berlin, visited Tobinski a few weeks ago, and at that time advised the old man to deposit his money in a bank, as it was becoming widely known that he kept gold in the house, but Tobinski absolutely declined to do so, stating that he could take care of the money as well as the bank

PRESENTATION TO REV. FATHER CASEY WHO IS LEAVING FOR CAMPBELLFORD

Remembered by the Officers and Executive of St. Peter's Ladies' Literary Society with a Handsome Volume of Longfellow---Addresses by Other Priests.

At a very pleasant evening spent at St. Peter's Presbytery last night, the officers and executive of the Ladies' Literary Society took occasion to bid Father Casey, who is leaving for Campbellford to-day, to be curate to Rev. Father Whibbs, good-bye, and presented him with a handsomely bound book of Longfellow and the following address:

Rev. R. J. Casey.

Reverend and Dear Father,—It is with feelings of deep regret that we are here to-night to bid farewell to you, as our Literary Director. Needless to say we will miss your kindly interest in our literary evenings, which you have attended so faithfully, and we feel that the success of this year is due, in a great measure, to your literary ability. Although you are leaving us we hope you will always have a feeling of interest in our advancement and will occasionally attend the meetings. In conclusion we ask you to accept this gift, as a slight token of our gratitude and esteem.

Signed on behalf of the Literary Society—President L. Hurley, Vice-President H. Kane, Secretary B. McNamara, Treasurer M. C. Kelly.

After the address Father Casey replied, speaking of the interest he had felt in the Literary Society, and of his regret in leaving it and his friends in Peterborough.

Speeches were made by Rev. W. J. McColl, Father P. McGuire, Downeyville, Frs. Toner, O'Brien and McCarthy. All spoke in high terms of Fr. Casey's great literary talent, and of how they would miss him.

At the conclusion a dainty luncheon was served

JUDGE ROBERTSON ON THE SHEARER CHARGES

Special to The Examiner.

WINNIPEG, JAN. 14.—Judge Robinson's much-talked-of report on the Shearer charges was given to the public to-day, and the findings are as follows:

1. That the charges of vice in Winnipeg, as appearing in headings of Toronto newspapers are not true.

2. That since the adoption of the segregation policy by the police in 1909 there has been no attempt to restrict the extension of the district, and the number of houses in the district increased from 29 to 50.

3. That there has been a lot of illicit liquor selling.

4. That the general conditions are a menace to the morals of Winnipeg.

5. That the above conditions are not brought about by any corruption of the police; that the habitues do not pay for police protection.

Officers Of Children's Aid Society Pay Another Visit To Havelock

High County Constable Cochrane, agent of the Children's Aid, and Rev. Mr. Miller, of Berlin, of the Provincial Association for the care of neglected children, under Mr. J. J. Kelso, were in Havelock yesterday investigating some cases that have been brought to the attention of the Society. The Ellis children, four in number, who were taken from their parents, at the time the latter were arrested on a charge of bigamy, were returned to their home in Belmont with their father and mother. The officers investigated other cases but took no action at the present time, but left some instructions along with some warnings, which if not carried out, steps will be taken to insure the better bringing up of certain children.

TAKEN ILL ON TRAIN

Railroad Conductor Probably Saved Young Lady's Life

A Toronto young lady, travelling by C. P. R. to Montreal the other day, was found in an almost collapsed condition near Manvers, by the conductor, who promptly did his best to revive the patient, there being no medical man on the train. The conductor thought at first that it was a case of poisoning, but he could find no evidence of this from the pupils of the eyes or from other signs. With the girl in a half-conscious state, he learned from her that she was subject to heart trouble. He made her as comfortable as he could, and at the next stopping place he telegraphed along the line to Havelock for a doctor to be in attendance. The doctor boarded the train at this point and went on with the patient to Tweed, by which time she had recovered sufficiently to proceed to Montreal. Here she was met by friends and driven in a conveyance to their home. Both the friends and the doctor agree that the girl owed much, and probably her life, to the first aid rendered by the conductor.

TAXING THE LAND AS OPPOSED TO TAXING BUILDINGS ADVOCATED

Mr. H. B. Cowan Strongly Points Out the Desirability of the Scheme---Has Been Operated Satisfactorily in Vancouver and Has Been One Important Cause in That City's Growth.

Editor of The Examiner:

The city of Peterborough is uniting with about 400 other municipalities in the presentation of a petition to the Ontario Legislature that will give corporations the power to tax improvements, such as buildings, at lower rates than land values. May I therefore be permitted to say a few words on the subject. The average man feels in his heart that there is something fundamentally wrong with a system of taxation which results in his taxes being increased following every effort he puts forth to improve his home, and thereby surrounding homes, such as by the painting of his house, the planting of a few trees or the erection of a new verandah. He realizes that every house or store or factory that is erected gives employment to labour and is a benefit to the community. For this reason, he regrets the apparent necessity that compels the municipality to impose taxes on such buildings.

It is with the object of escaping the results of this form of taxation that cities frequently agree, as Peterborough has asked to do several times of late, to forgo the payment of taxes or give a fixed assessment for a period of years, in their efforts to attract new industries.

Together with all this, the public is beginning to see, especially since Lloyd George has taken up the matter in Great Britain, that there is something that at least seems unfair in a system which permits a man to increase in wealth, through no effort on his part, by merely holding land in a city, while it is increasing in value, largely through the efforts of other men who are taxed for every improvement they make.

During the past year or more, much attention has been drawn through the press to the system of taxation that is proving so successful in the city of Vancouver. Finding that the tax on buildings was retarding building operations and that the speculation in land was leading much valuable land within the city limits to be held idle, the city council, having the power that we lack in Ontario, some 10 years ago, threw off 25 p.c. of the tax on buildings, and improvements and increased the tax on land values in proportion.

Finding that the experiment was proving a success, it a few years later, reduced the tax on buildings and improvements still another 25 p.c., and again added it to the tax on land values. This, also proving successful, led the city council last year to throw off all taxes on buildings, and improvements and place it all on land values.

The progress that has been made by Vancouver under this system of taxation has been remarkable. In 1902, the value of the building permits issued was $833,607. For the first seven months of last year, they were $7,525,410. In 1905, the population of Vancouver was estimated at 44,631. To-day it is placed at around 110,000. It has more than doubled within five years. Bonds issued by the city for $2,600,000 last June brought the highest figures in the history of the city.

The increased tax on land has made it more difficult for people to speculate in land by holding it idle, while the knowledge that they would not be taxed for so doing has encouraged them to put their land to more profitable use by erecting buildings thereon.

Adjoining cities in the States, such as Seattle, Tacoma and Spokane, have not been making the same progress. A committee that was appointed in one of them to ascertain the reason, reported that the building records for the four cities for the first seven months of 1909 and 1910 showed that in Spokane there had been a decrease during 1910 of 18 p.c. over the year before, in Tacoma a decrease of 24 p.c., in Seattle a decrease of 20 p.c., while in Vancouver there had been an increase of 86 p.c. The committee recommended the adoption of a system of taxation similar to that being followed in Vancouver.

The ratepayers of Vernon, B. C. last summer by a vote of two to one, pronounced in favour of adopting the same system. The city of Edmonton has a system of taxation much similar to that in force in Vancouver.

In New South Wales, some 374 municipalities tax land values almost exclusively. Mr. A. G. Huie, of Sydney, N.S.W., writes me that the people generally are heartly in favour of this system and that it is a huge success."

My object in calling attention to these matters is the fact that Mr. A. B. Farmer, B.A., of Toronto, the secretary of the Tax Reform League, is to give a public address on this subject to the men of St. Paul's church next Tuesday evening. Mr. Farmer has been addressing Boards of Trade, and other other public bodies throughout Ontario during the past year, with marked success. As this matter is of more than usual interest, members of the executive of the Brotherhood of St. Paul desire to extend a general invitation to all who care to do so, to attend. A special invitation is extended to members of the city council and the Board of Trade.

Yours very truly,
H. B. COWAN.

PETERBOROUGH BOY SCOUTS HAVE FIRST MEETING

Y. M. C. A. and Recruit Patrols Give Each Other Hearty Reception

The first meeting of the Peterborough Boy Scouts was held last night in the Armories. There were over 80 Scouts present, besides Scoutmasters Hodges, Neil, and Hughes.

When the "Y" boys entered the Scouts room they were given three hearty cheers by the (former) Peewits. They returned the compliment, and then the transaction of business began.

Mr Neil said he was ready to answer any questions and told the boys that the Committee would arrange the patrols as soon as possible, and in a manner that was sure to be best for the troop as a whole. Then he asked the Scouts whether they preferred to remain [illegible] with each Scoutmaster partly responsible for its welfare, or be divided into smaller troops, each troop under control of its own Scoutmaster.

In answer to questions Mr. Hodges said that the committee would arrange, as soon as possible, to [illegible] there tests for [illegible] and for merit [illegible].

Then he said [illegible] be held at the Armories at 7.30 on Saturday [illegible] paid in a Scouting expedition, and gave the boys useful hints for scouting.

Mr. Hodges was asked by the boys to tell a story from one of the three campaigns in which he saw active service. As he wished to have 20 minutes' drill after the business was over, he was obliged to decline, but promised to do so next meeting.

After this, the boys formed up in the drill-hall of the Armories, and, under the command of Scoutmasters Hodges and Hughes, they had their first drill together.

POSTAL NOTES

British Postal Orders Will be Cashed by Local Post Office

The Examiner the other day stated that the local postoffice had been given authority by the Postoffice Department to cash British money orders here. This was obviously an error, as the local office has always had the power of cashing money orders here. What was intended to say was that the local Postoffice had been given authority to cash British postal orders or postal notes, which have hitherto had to be taken to Toronto.

WHO IS TO BLAME

For So Many Sickly Children?

We hear of so many children who are thin, delicate, ailing and tired all the time, we are led to ask what is the cause, and who is to blame?

Don't blame the children — they have no strength. They play hard, work hard at school, and rapid growth takes all their strength.

It is the mothers of all such children who are to blame, for if they only realized what our delicious cod liver and iron tonic will do for their little ones, they wouldn't sleep at night until they had started them on Vinol.

Only a few days ago a case came to our attention.—Mrs. W. H. Gilmore of Durand, Mich., had a little daughtre nine years of age. She was weak, pale, ailing and nothing seemed to do her any good. She gave her Vinol and she began to thrive at once and gained rapidly in weight, colour and strength.

We positively know Vinol will build up your little ones and make them healthy, strong and robust. Try a bottle and if you are not satisfied we will return your money. We make this offer to show you our confidence and belief in Vinol. McDermid and Jury, druggists, corner George and Charlotte streets; also Payne's drug store, corner George and Simcoe streets.

WEDDING BELLS

SALE—SPOHN.

The marriage of Miss Editha Spohn, elder daughter of Dr. and Mrs. P. H. Spohn and Mr. Julian Sale, jun., son of Mr. and Mrs. Sale, of Toronto, took place in All Saints church, Penetanguishene, the rector, Rev. Fitzroy Bourne, officiating. The bride was given away by her father, looking very charming in her gown of white satin, and wearing the regulation veil of white tulle arranged with a coronet of orange blossoms, which had been worn by her mother. She carried a shower of lily of the valley and orchids. The two ushers, Mr. Alfred Thompson of Pentanguishene and Mr. Robert Gill, of Brockville, led the way. Then came the brideamaids, Miss Madge McGill of Chicago and Miss Gertrude Wood of Millbrook, wearing pretty gowns of white marquisette, with lavender flowers, and large black velvet hats, with willow plumes. They carried white hyacinths and wore pretty little pins of amethysts and pearls, gifts of the groom. The maid of honour, Miss Gretchen Spohn, sister of the bride, wore lavender crepe de chine, with black beaver hat trimmed with orchids. Mr. Charlie Grier of Montreal was best man. After the ceremony Dr. and Mrs. Spohn, with Mr. and Mrs. Sale, sen., greeted their guests at their residence. The bride and groom stood under a bell of smilax, and lily amethyst velvet. Mrs Spohn wore amethyst velvet with toque of ermine. Mrs Sale wore black satin, with jetted net tunic. Mr. and Mrs. Sale left or New York and Baltimore, the bride wearing navy blue, with mink hat and furs.—Globe.

GOOD ADMINISTRATION.

The Manufacturers' Association have visited Ottawa and issued their counterblast against the demands of the farmers' delegation, which included a very liberal measure of reciprocity. The Manufacturers sum up their position by pleading for a continuance of the fiscal policy under which the country has prospered greatly. This is not so bad; but it would be better of a slight amendment. It is a fact that the prosperity Canada has enjoyed under the tariff, has, very largely, if not entirely, in the sense of abounding prosperity, only been in evidence under the administration and improvement of the tariff by a Liberal Government, "What's best administered is best."

GOOD OUT OF EVIL.

The case of Mr. W. R. Travers, late general manager of the Farmers' Bank, is no longer sub judice, except that sentence has not been passed, in respect of the charges of making false Government returns, and the theft of $40,000, to which he pleaded guilty on Thursday. Whatever the sentence may be it is expected to be an exemplary one, an evidence of the desire and intention of justice to promote the interests of the public and protect them against the reckless and criminal administration of banks by general managers or others in authority. Summary and befitting punishment of such wrong doing is necessary as a deterrent, and also to retain the confidence of the public in our great banking institutions. Confidence is the foundation of all financial and commercial operation, the indispensable condition of success. This case, in its revelations and its outcome, will no doubt influence parliament in making the amendments to the Banking Act more drastic than otherwise might have been the case. It will certainly justify the demand for providing for strict and extended government inspection of banks, something that no well-conducted bank need, or will, fear. In the end good will come out of evil as associated with the Farmers' Bank matter. Though the loss and hardship inflicted upon the shareholders of the bank will still be a fact, there will be less danger that risk of such loss will hereafter be incurred.

PULPIT AND PRESS.

Rev. Manley Benson of St. Catharines, seems to have had a rather sharp attack of revolution of the liver. In a recent sermon he attacks the modern revivial of the type now in process of operation in Toronto, and, at the same time he jumps upon the press with both feet. As to the reverend gentleman's attitude towards the wholesale revival idea, he no doubt speaks with a knowledge of the subject, such as a professional might be expected to possess, and his assertions may be justified or otherwise. But when he assumes to lecture the press for its alleged devotion to miscellaneous news to the exclusion of news of a religious character, he gets slightly beyond his depth, at least as regards the press in Peterborough. It is a fact that the newspapers of this city devote a large part of their space to intelligence regarding religious matters, or more strictly speaking, with regard to church news. No complaints of neglect of the moral interests of the people will be against the local press. The contents of the daily newspaper is current history—the history of the microcosm, the locale, of publication from day to day. To make the record complete the newspapers must publish news of fires, fights, accidents, outrages, and all that sort of thing. To this must be added news of what is going on in the church and religious world. The secret of successful catering to the news appetite of the public is to give these several news interests their due proportion; but if there is more shade than light in the newspapers, it is the fault of the subject—the model, so to speak—and not of the newspaper artist. The newspaper is a secular enterprise—of the earth earthly, and cannot be expected to exist by devoting the larger part of its space and news-collection activities to religious propagandism; if it did so, its circulation would fall off as much as the attendance in the churches under the eloquence of the most eloquent preacher, if he confined his oratory to an everlasting same subject, great as it might be. The pulpit has its great place in the world's economy, but with all due respect, it does not seem to be its place to keep the press in its place.

TAXATION IMPROVEMENT.

In another column is to be found a very important and thought-suggesting letter from a correspondent in regard to a question of taxation that involves a practical injustice. It is bad enough to tax the results of enterprise, but it is worse to tax enterprise itself. The spirit of improvement needs encouragement rather than repression. It gets this repression from the practice of taxing improvements—in other words imposing fines on citizens for showing public spirit in the building up of the city and adding to its beauty and attractings, but the land itself is the only legitimate tax; buildings on land are only incidents; they may be removed or destroyed, but the land, the site, is everlasting, and in this regard is the only real value. It seems just as logical to call the button on a coat the coat itself as to regard removable structures on lands as real property. The title, real estate, may by custom be applied loosely to lands and buildings, but the land itself is the only real thing—what remains under every possible exercise of destructive force. To come down to first principles, the only justifiable form of taxation is the taxation of land values. If we had only begun our state existence, with a recognition in practice of this principle, it would be easily possible to make the land bear all taxation, and relieve improvements entirely. But the extent to which the unfair and penalizing principle of taxing improvements has become a part and parcel of our law and practice, would mean perhaps new injustice, in suddenly and radically reverting to the application of first principles.

It is, therefore, proposed to employ the thin edge of the wedge, as represented by the enactment of permissive legislation to empower municipalities to impose a lower tax rate on improvement values than on land values. This is a proposal that will provoke a great deal of discussion, though why it should do so is difficult to see—the justice of the principle which gives it force seems palpably self-evident.

But there will be discussion; and it is needed, if only to get ratepayers to think, to develop an interest in a subject that is very closely associated with their welfare. It is difficult to get the average elector interested in the vital matter of selecting and electing representatives, and it may take some exercise of argument and reasoning to induce ratepayers to take an intelligent interest in the serious question of taxation, and tax paying. It is, therefore, necessary to call the attention of our readers to the letter of Mr. Cowan, which appears in this issue. His arguments speak for themselves, but the reader is invited to note particularly that Mr. A. B. Farmer, B.A., of Toronto, secretary of the Tax Reform League, will deliver an address to the men of St. Paul's church on Tuesday evening next, to which an invitation includes all who take an interest in the subject. The air is full of discussion as to the best means of improving the conditions of civic government, and as improvement in taxation methods is the foundation stone, it is to be hoped that those concerned will take an interest by attending to hear Mr. Farmer's address.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

A third of the assessable property of Ottawa is exempt from municipal taxation. The taxable property totals $63,903,000 and the exemptions amount to $32,221,621.

Rev. Manley Benson, of St. Catharines, seems to be justified in declaring as "comercial" such religious revivals as that now on in Toronto. At least they have commercial manifestations. Reports come from Goderich of merchants receiving, in two instalments, a total of $2.50 in conscience money, sent from Toronto. The moral reform that prompted these returns of loot, must be genuine. One would not expect a Torontonian, in his normally unregenerate condition, to give up any thing he had got his hands on.

CIVIC GOVERNMENT COMMISSION.

A committee appointed by the City of Duluth to investigate the system of government by commission has reported in favour of the adoption of the system, along with the referendum, initiative and recall. The committee summarizes its reasons under the following heads:

1. Because it establishes the city on a business basis and under it the city is operated as any large commercial corporation would be, thus eliminating political interests of all kinds.

2. Because it centralizes responsibility so it cannot be evaded.

3. Because it centralizes responsibility and expedites the transaction of business and the making of public improvements.

4. Because it naturally follows that greater economy will result from a purely business administration.

5. Because it provides or should provide, that the commissioners shall give all their time to the city's business, and that they shall be paid salaries sufficient to attract the right kind of men.

6. Because the provisions of the referendum, initiative and recall give the citizens greater responsibilities, greater interest in public affairs and greater incentive to participate in them.

7. Because it abolishes the ward system by electing city officers from the whole city, makes them responsible to all parts of the city and compels them to take care of the needs of all parts of the city.

Civic Government by Commission is gaining increased attention, because it promises a remedy for the unsatisfactory results of the system which has been so long tried and so long and greatly been found wanting.

A PERMANENT TARIFF COMMISSION.

(Finance Chronicle)

The National Tariff Commission Association now in session at Washington, is urging the appointment by Congress of a Permanent Tariff Commission, which, in the words of Senator Beveridge, will have the same dignity and the same adequacy of powers as the Interstate Commerce Commission. It is remarkable how even in the most democratic countries the business men and the statesmen are tending towards Government by commission. There is a great deal to be said in favour of taking the tariff out of politics. It is almost impossible for a legislative body to deal with any tariff issue purely on its merits. Everywhere there is a demand for a scientific tariff. The first step towards a scientific tariff would seem to be a Permanent Tariff Commission. In every department of government in all the great countries the permanent commission idea is making rapid headway. One would imagine that the Dominion Government would be very glad to get the tariff out of politics. It would be nice to have a Royal Commission to which to refer all deputations asking for impossibilities.

THE REASON WHY.

(Brantford Expositor)

The Boston Herald deplores the fact that Canada has by her wise immigration policy secured the pick of the settlers from the old land. The Herald very strongly maintains that Canada is getting a much higher class of immigrants than the United States does. It attributes this chiefly to the fact that the United States has no commercial agencies in Great Britain, Germany, Holland, Sweden, Norway or Denmark, while Canada has agencies which flood those countries with literature, pictures and specimens of their agricultural and mineral products. An intending emigrant can call into an American railway office there seeking information, and is referred to a folder, and then the interest in him ceases. At a Canadian agency he is taken in hand, made welcome, and becomes an enthusiast before he leaves. Mr. Carson, an American writer, is quoted as saying that he rode on a hand waggon through certain parts of England, which waggon stopped at all the villages and distributed pamphlets headed: "Canada is God's country; come and live with us." He crossed on one of the Allan line steamers that carried 1,500 well-to-do immigrants from Scandinavia Germany and Great Britain, and on the arrival at the winter port of St John there were officials to look after them, see that they took the right trains and had good food with pure milk for the babies. And when they reached Winnipeg they found stretched across the railway a big banner with the inscription: "Why live in the desert of Montana when you can live in the midst of civilization and plenty in Canada?"—which inscription is, we may grant, in its implications, a little hard on Montana.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS INQUIRY INTO PRINTING BUREAU MATTERS

(Ottawa Free Press.)

The prediction of Conservative newspapers that there will be a "fuller enquiry" by the Public Accounts Committee of Parliament—or rather by Tory members of that committee—into affairs at the Government Printing Bureau, is funny. Equally humourous is the statement that the evidence recently taken by the Secretary of State and made public in blue book form, "will serve to indicate the lines upon which the further enquiry may profitably proceed." And to none will these bold assertions be more amusing than to the Secretary of State himself.

It is safe to say that no investigator ever went at a job with a stronger determination to put the probe in deep and arrive at facts no matter whose ox was gored than the Hon. Charles Murphy did in the case of the printing bureau. Rumours had been current for years that everything was not as it ought to be in the big print shop. The Public Accounts Committee had made frequent efforts to test these rumours, but its enquiries came to nought. When Mr. Murphy assumed office he made up his mind that he was going to be master of the situation that he was going to know all about this printing branch for which he had been made Ministerially responsible, and what he was going to see for himself what there was in the unfavourable rumours. The onerous commission of enquiry was issued by himself and the role of prosecuting attorney was created by himself for himself. If the result was to be a whitewash it was Hon. Charles Murphy who was to do the whitewashing; if, on the other hand, the wash was to be of a saffron colour the said saffron hue was to be mixed by and to come from the brush of Hon. Charles Murphy.

The evidence fully set forth in the blue book and reprinted in part by the Tory press indicates the nature of the enquiry, and proves the conscientious manner in which Mr. Murphy went at his task. It shows that there was never the slightest attempt to shield anybody, let them be political friends or enemies. One witness was given an opportunity to say that the late Mr. Gouldthrite had told him he was "taken by the throat" by a minister and compelled to buy certain stock. He was put through a cross-examination with the idea of obtaining further information upon this important point, and the questions and answers are set forth verbatim as they were uttered. A trick by which the tender system was evaded in the case of a certain job given out was exposed in all its nakedness. The fact that The Ottwa Free Press job printing department had at considerable reduction in price in a slack season completed a certain order which had been given to a firm that was not adequately equipped to handle it was brought out and spread upon the published notes.

Mr. Murphy's enquiry was spread over months. Dozens of bureau officials were put into a veritable "sweat box," and not only was every opportunity given to them to talk freely, but they were made to talk by one trained in the art of compelling witnesses to turn their minds inside out.

If there is any phase of the situation at the Bureau that needs further investigation, Mr. Murphy would like to know it more than any other man. If anybody has any suggestion to make as to how other facts can be obtained, Mr. Murphy is the man who will welcome it. He has shown that he cares neither for friend nor foe so long as he gets at the truth.

When, therefore, it is suggested that the Public Accounts Committee which for years accomplished nothing so far as the Bureau is concerned may now profitably continue their investigation so successfully completed by Mr. Murphy, it does strike us as laughable.

The truth is that the fact that once more a Liberal Minister has himself turned house cleaner and proved successful where they failed, sticks in the crop of these blatant Tory champions of purity. It would merely be in keeping with the past, if the Conservative members of the Public Accounts Committee should duplicate the enquiry of the Secretary of State and then take credit for the expose which has been made already by Mr. Murphy himself.

FARM LABOURERS AND DOMESTICS

Some Interesting Facts Concerning S. A. Immigration Work

Commissioner Coombs and Colonel Lamb, Director of the Army's Emigration Work, have just returned from an extended tour, making arrangements for the placing of the immigrants that will come to Canada under the auspices of The Salvation Army in the spring. These will principally consist of labourers for farms and domestics. During the past year The Army has arranged the immigration of about ten thousand persons to this country, and arrangements are being perfected for the bringing of a larger number during the next season. A number of Canadian Officers will shortly be visiting the Old Country for the purpose of selecting, advising, and conducting parties.

The immigrants that come to this country through The Army are of a highly desirable class, being specially selected by experienced agents, who are familiar with the class of workers that Canadian farming conditions call for.

The ten thousand immigrants of last year were selected from over 100,000 applicants. It will thus be seen how severe is the process of selection.

Farmers and others in Ontario who have to secure labour for next spring should at once get into touch with the Salvation Army, as we understand there is a great demand for The Army's immigrants. Write for information and application forms to Brother H. Morris, Immigration and Colonization Department, James and Albert streets, Toronto.

Dairymen Conclude Session.

Stratford, Jan. 14.—The Western Ontario Dairymen's Association concluded its best convention Thursday night.

Valentine Stock, M.P.P., Tavistock, warned the dairymen that if reciprocity materializes, they will face the unfair competition of adulterate, low-grade American dairy products.

The new officers are: President, Wm. Waddell, Kerwood; first vice-president, D. A. Dempsey, Stratford; second vice-president, S. B. Wallace, Burgessville; third vice-president, W. S. Stocks, Britton; secretary-treasurer, F. Herns, London; auditors, J. A. Nelles, London, and J. C. Hegler, Ingersoll. Representatives to Western Fair, I. W. Steinhoff, Stratford, and the secretary; representatives to Toronto Exhibition, R. Johnston, Woodstock, and the secretary; directors, the officers and J. N. Paget, Canboro; J. J. Parsons, Jarvis; J. B. Smith, Alton; S. E. Facey, Harrietsville; J. B. Morr, Ingersoll.

A Legal Mix-Up.

Montreal, Jan. 14.—Two eminent King's Counsel and a young lawyer engaged in a brief fisticuff battle in the police court before Judge Lanceton Thursday. The participants in the scuffle were James Crankshaw, K.C., Horace Hutchins, K.C., and Jimmy Crankshaw. The Crankshaws were prosecuting a girl on a charge of perjury, and Mr. Hutchins was defending her. He offered to make an affidavit himself, and ironically remarked that his learned friend could then go after him for perjury. Mr. Crankshaw replied to the effect that this was not advisable as the Montreal jail was already overflowing.

Mr. Hutchins responded with a righthand swing to Mr. Crankshaw's jaw. He sidestepped. Jimmy Crankshaw then landed a left jolt flush on Hutchins' chin. Subsequently several apologies were tendered the judge by the belligerent lawyers.

Victim of Street Car.

Montreal, Jan. 14.—Jean Labbe, a well-known citizen, 22 years old, a member of the firm of Labbe, Freres, plumbers, was the first victim of the deadly street car here this year. He was struck by an electric street car at the crossing of St. Denis and Blenville streets, at six o'clock Thursday evening, and died a few hours later in the General Hospital. When struck he fell into the fender and was carried along for ten or fifteen feet.

Hit by Falling Limb.

Markdale, Jan. 14.—While felling trees in the bush near here James Gould was struck on the head by a falling limb and dangerously cut. J. Neeley, a companion, hurried away for help. The injured man may not recover, having lost a large amount of blood.

Pretty Hard Luck.

Kingston, Jan. 14.—With both hands frozen, feet almost frozen and suffering from hunger, Lawrence Perrin, a former batteryman, arrived in the city yesterday, having walked most of the way to Toronto with a car of horses, and says that when he got to Toronto the man who hired him skipped out without paying him, and left him penniless. He then started out to tramp home.

American Perfidy.

London, Jan. 14.—The Daily Graphic, in an editorial, assuming with regard to the fortification of the Panama Canal that President Taft "proposes to ignore other nations' treaty rights," indignantly asks whether Sir Edward Grey, the British Foreign Secretary, has been dumb in the face of this "scandalous proposal to trample on solemn treaties."

THE GROWTH OF TRAFFIC ON THE TRENT CANAL AS SHOWN BY STATISTICS

Superintendent J. H. McClellan Issues Annual Statement, Embodying the Reports of the Lockmasters Along the Waterway.

INTERESTING FIGURES

The annual report of the traffic at the various locks on the Trent Canal for the season 1910 has been issued by the Superintendent of the Canal, J. H. McClellan. Traffic at nearly every lock shows an increase over the preceding year, and altogether the business on the Canal was the largest in its history. Young's Point continues to be the busiest point on the entire system, there being a total of 2,634 lockages there during the season. The reports of the individual lockmasters are as follow:

GAMEBRIDGE

D. H. Gilchrist, Lockmaster.

The lock at Gamebridge is sometimes known as Lock No. 5, of the Lake Simcoe-Balsam Lake Division of the Trent Canal. The lock is a short distance from the entrance of the Canal to Lake Simcoe. This is the second year that any records have been supplied showing the volume of traffic through this lock. Of course, owing to the fact that the Canal is as yet in an uncompleted state, there is nothing to direct much traffic over that division on which this lock is located. The detailed statement as to the volume of traffic is as follows:

	Steamers	Small boats	Scows
April	1	—	1
May	4	1	—
June	6	10	3
July	13	16	2
August	20	38	—
September	18	11	2
October	3	—	—
November	1	—	—

Total number of steamboats, 66.
Total number of smallboats, 76.
Total number of scows, 8.
Total lockages, 150.
Total number of passengers, 2,357.
Total number feet lumber, 100 M.

The difference in depth of water this season on Lake Simcoe was one foot ten inches. Last year it was one foot five inches.

FROM GAMEBRIDGE TO KIRKFIELD

There are four locks between this point and the Kirkfield Hydraulic Lift Lock but a record of the lockages at Gamebridge, together with the lockages at the Kirkfield Hydraulic Lift Lock, is a fair criterion of the extent of the traffic all along this division.

KIRKFIELD HYDRAULIC LIFT LOCK

Wm. John, Lockmaster

This is the fourth year that the Kirkfield Hydraulic Lift Lock has been operated, and notwithstanding the fact that there is no through route from Georgian Bay as yet, and nothing to demand very much traffic over the Lake Simcoe-Balsam Lake Division of the Canal, there was a total of 217 lockages at Kirkfield during the past season, as the following will show:

April	5	—	4

ROSEDALE

A. E. Minthorne, Lockmaster.

A substantial new lock at Rosedale was placed in commission at the beginning of the season. A new concrete dam, it is expected, will be finished some time during next summer. Balsam Lake just above Rosedale lock constitutes the summit water of the Trent Canal. From Balsam Lake the waters of the Trent Canal flow eastward to Lake Ontario, while the artificial stretch from Balsam Lake to Lake Simcoe carried a very light portion of the water from Balsam Lake to Georgian Bay. A record of the lockages at Rosedale during the past year is as follows:

LINDSAY LOCK

John Makins, Lockmaster.

As is well known, the Lindsay Lock is not on the main line of the Trent Canal, being on the Scugog River, and affording a means of navigation to and from Port Perry on Scugog Lake, to the main line of the Trent Canal. A new lock has been built at this point, and navigation was suspended until the month of July, when the new lock was available for use. The following will show the amount of traffic through the Lindsay Lock during the past season:

Notwithstanding the Grand Trunk Railway strike, which tied up the excursion trade during the greater portion of the summer season, 34,390 passengers passed through the Young's Point Lock. LAKEFIELD LOCK

J. H. McWilliams, Lockmaster

This lock is known as Lock No. 1, of the Peterborough-Lakefield section of the Trent Canal. The number of lockages at this point show a considerable increase over the lockages of last year. This was due no doubt to the fact that an extra passenger boat plied between Peterborough and Stony Lake. The returns of the lockmaster are as follows:—

PETERBOROUGH LOCK

Wm. Collins, Lockmaster

The traffic through the Peterborough Lock does not now indicate the volume of traffic down the Otonabee River to Rice Lake, as it did some years ago, before the Street Railway Company extended its line to a point on the Otonabee River below the locks. A great deal of traffic on the Otonabee River arises at the street Railway terminus. However, the report of the lockmaster shows a total of 1,412 lockages. A record of the lockages at the Peterborough Lock is as follows:

HASTINGS LOCK

John Tracy, Lockmaster

Owing to the fact that a substantial new lock is in course of construction at this point, on the site of the old lock, there was no navigation between Hastings and Healey Falls during the past season. The new lock is about completed, and traffic will be opened again through Hastings Lock next season.

RECEPTION TENDERED TO REV. AND MRS. ROLLINS

Interesting Event at St. Andrew's Church Last Night ---Local Clergymen Unite in Extending a Hearty Welcome to the New Pastor of the Church.

St. Andrews Sunday school room was, last night the scene of a most enjoyable and memorable occasion when a reception was held by the congregation to Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Rollins. A splendid programme was given, all the items being of a very high order. The chair was occupied by Mr. F. E. Kerr, who filled the position acceptably.

The numbers on the programme were as follows:

Piano solo—Mrs. F. E. Kerr and Miss King.

Solo—Mrs. (Dr.) Middleton.

(Intermission.)

Piano duet—Mrs. Cruickshanks and Mrs. McClelland.

Recitation—Mr. Johns

(Intermission.)

Quartette—Miss Olive Mower, Mrs. Dormer, Mr. Wright and Mr. Gerard.

Piano duet—Mrs. Kerr and Miss King.

The foregoing numbers were very warmly received and encores were called for. The quartette probably drew forth the greatest applause, it being of a comic nature and splendidly sung.

Rev. Mr. Henderson pastor of the Charlotte street Methodist church, was called on to address the audience. He said that he was there, as a humble representative of the Methodist churches of the city, to do his part at welcoming the new pastor, and he prayed that God's richest blessing would rest upon him and the congregation.

Rev. H. R. Trumpour, of All Saints' said a few words of welcome. He was once a Presbyterian, he said, and still felt a remarkable love for the Presbyterians and he hoped church union would soon take place. He had the heartiest feelings toward the congregation and hoped that God would bless the man who was going to administer to them.

Rev. Mr. Fee, of Bethany Tabernacle, spoke a few words. It gave him great pleasure to be present. He said that there was one thing in which the Presbyterian church was a little better than any other church, and that was that they gave the children a little more of the scriptural lessons, than any other church did, and he felt it was a good thing. He said that as they welcomed their pastor he hoped that God would help both pastor and people to minister together. He hoped that God would bless both pastor and people so that they might be firm in keeping up the good work.

Rev. Mr. Pogue next spoke. He thanked them for the hearty welcome they had extended to him, and thanked them for the opportunity of welcoming Mr. Rollins. He said he was delighted when he heard that Mr. Rollins was a candidate, but when he heard that Mr. Rollins was coming he was happier still. He was also happy that he was able to welcome him.

Rev Mr Keith, of Knox church said he was glad that Mr. Rollins had the good sense to come to Peterborough, as it was so much better than London. He told Mr. Rollins that he had come to a very warm hearted people and assured him that he would have a successful and happy pastorage.

Rev. J. B. Webb of the Murray street Baptist church, said that last night was the anniversary of his coming to Peterborough, just four years ago. He said that only two ministers were there that were in the city when he came. He said that he was happy that another strong man had come.

Rev. Mr. Rollins addressed the audience at the close of the evening, saying only a few words. He wished to thank them for the great consideration they had accorded him and for the many kindnesses they had shown and he trusted that he would be a fighter with them in all that was good. He hoped that he would be able to stay in Peterborough; that they would have lots of work to do, and that they would do all they could. He drew the attention to the fact that their forefathers had carried on a great work under great difficulties and that they should do well under their splendid advantages.

In addition to these speeches and the splendid programme before given, coffee, sandwiches and cake were served and the social side was indulged in. The occasion was a most enjoyable one, and the attendance was large, which brightened up everything. The programme was a splendid one and great credit is due to those who took part, for the brilliant success it attained. Mr. John's recitation was a feature in the comic part, and drew forth lengthy applause.

The chairman, Mr. Kerr voiced the regret of all at the absence of Rev. I. Couch and Rev. Dr. Langfeldt, who were unable to be present.

BABY'S SPLENDID HEALTH

Mrs. R. Yates, Montreal, Que., writes:—"Baby's splendid health was obtained through the use of Baby's Own Tablets. They are a grand medicine for constipation, as their action is easy and does not give baby pain. I would recommend them to all mothers; no one should be without them who have young children in the house." This testimony is similar to thousands of others sent us by grateful mothers. Every mother who has ever used the Tablets for her little ones will tell you they are the very best medicine in the world. They not only cure the ills of the little ones, but they make them grow happy and strong. The Tablets can be given to even the youngest babe with absolute safety as they are sold under the guarantee of a government analyst to contain no opiate or harmful drug. They cannot possibly do harm — they always do good. Baby's Own Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The Story Of A Trip Abroad

By Miss E. M. Shea, of Douro

The Examiner is indebted to Miss E. M. Shea, of Douro, for a very interesting article upon her impressions of a trip abroad. It will be published in instalments in the Saturday issues of the Examiner until completed:

Sailing from New York early in July, on a hot, sultry morning, there were many friends to wish God-speed to the voyagers as the noble ship left the pier. And the writer wondered what kind of a passage the future had in store, and what sort of passengers there might be amongst the many bound for Europe. All looked happy and glad to escape the heat of the city for the cool of the sea. The usual allotment of seats at tables, deck chairs, and other placings were soon made, and in this floating palace it was curious to note how humanity began to assort itself. They were a number of people all friendly and sociable, ready to enjoy the holidays and give and take in doing all they could for the comfort of others, and perhaps it was this element that struck the keynote of the success of the voyage. Each did his part in the little cosmos and did it well. Nature, too, was kind. We were gradually cooled off, not too rapidly nor too much. The winds were tempered to our needs, and the sea forgot to remind us of its rougher side. Thus the good ship sped on. The discipline on board was like that of a ship of war, where the officials and crew were concerned, but the passengers might have believed they were on heir own private yatcht. An Italian captain consider his passengers as one large family and treats them as such. Full advantage of these excellent conditions was taken for the amusement and entertainment of the good-natured crowd. There was much talent on board, and music, speeches, lectures and religious services, also a gathering of pleasant characters that was quite delightful. And the last night out, the captain's dinner was a grand affair. As a passenger, one would like to refer to courtesy and attention of all the officials, from the captain downward; each helped to the utmost to add to the comfort and enjoyment of the trip, and it was with feelings akin to sadness that all on board realized that the voyage, otherwise a long one, was all too short. On this trip, from New York to Naples, the first land you see is the Azores Islands, clear, stately, and picturesque. After all there is something about the sight of land, after one has been a week without it, which supplies a want that nothing else can fill. A day and a half later we sighted the shores of Portugal. The view we got of it from the steamer was apparently a high red hill, with a round white tower on top of it, flying signal flags. We passed close to the island of St. Helena.

On the following morning we were in plain view of the shores of Africa, and the great black outline against the sky—Gibraltar; and with the sunrise the form of the crouching lion that faces all Europe comes into relief. You remember it is the lock to the Mediterranean, of which Britain keeps the key. You see the battlements and months of cannons and the great ships at its base—Spain to the right, all green and amethyst and gay with white houses and red roofs, and Gibraltar's grim show of battlements and war. You can see the little that lies open to you; of the real defensive works of the place, you are not even allowed to have a guess. The rock is undermined and tunnelled throughout. What looks like a solid face of rock is a hanging curtain that masks a battery, the blue waters of the bay are treacherous with torpedoes, telephones and telegraphs, signal stations for flagging, searchlight, and other such inventions have been planted on every point. We go ashore and feel solid earth under our feet again for a few hours. Gibraltar has one main street running up and clinging to the side of the hill, from the principal quay to the most southern point of the rock. On this street are bazaars of the Moors, English shops and Spanish cafes, the cathedral, hotels, governor's house, Moorish doorways, mysterious twisting stairways in the solid rock, but the color and tone of the street are military. There are soldiers everywhere. At midday here you see a conflux of nations. Europe, Asia, and Africa meet and jostle in this singular highway. Moors, Turks, Negroids, Greeks, Jews, Spaniards—and mixed with these the pride and glory of the British Army and Navy. Gibraltar is proud of its promenade, and good reason to be so, if the peace and beauty of a hillside garden with the charm of sub-tropical vegetation in abundance near at hand, and a noble view of coast and sea from the point of view of nature, and art, the Almeda, is an equal success. We passed the British lines and drove to the Spanish city, La Linea de la Concepcion. What a contrast to what we had just left—this little old Spanish city, with narrow, sleepy streets and low white houses with red roofs. Here we visited the arena; it didn't greatly interest me. We drove back to Gibraltar and returned to our steamer, and passed into the Mediterranean Sea, quite close to the shores of Africa, on our way to Naples. The Mediterranean is almost always blue, and the Bay of Naples is glorious. The city as it rises above the bay, tier after tier, seems a city of palaces. There are hazy blue mountains behind it, and south of it is the great brown volcano of Vesuvius, with its steaming cone standing out against the blue sky. But Naples in itself, apart from its surroundings, is not of surpassing beauty. When the fictitious charm which distance gives is lost on landing the city is little more than a huge bustling, commonplace, commercial port, and not to be compared for a moment with Florence or Venice. This lack is compensated for by the unrivalled natural beauties of its position and its charming environs.

Many of the streets of Naples are singularly lacking in architectural interest, and in places are so narrow the walls shut out the sun, and are not over clean. The curious characteristic habits and customs of the people may be best studied in the poor quarters. These people are simple and natural folks, pleased through all their lives of conventionality with little things and easy and unconscious as children. Many of the streets of Naples are only meant for foot passengers, and a carriage never enters them. The gaudily painted stalls of the ice water and lemonade dealers gives warmth of color to the street. But we must leave the fascinating occupation and turn to some of the regular sights of Naples. The beautiful old cathedral which contains the gorgeous Chapel of St. Janurius, the patron saint of Naples. In a silver shrine under the richly decorated altar is the famous sacred phial containing the coagulated blood of the saint. There are many other handsome neapolitan churches well worth a visit. The Royal Palace, the gorgeous and stately Castle of St. Elmo, the unique National Museum. Here we found the lost treasures from the buried towns of Cumae, Herculaneum, and Pompeii. The history of nearly a thousand years may be read in this vast necropolis of ancient art. The Aquarium is not merely a show place, but an international biological station, and the most important institution of its kind in Europe. At four o'clock in the afternoon we go for a drive around the bay. Between Toledo and the sea is a strip of Paradise, a garden grove with feathery palms, Greek temples, musical fountains, groups of beautiful girls and gorgeous dandies. The sun is setting on the bay, and you cannot tell whether this sunset is cooled by the water or the water is warmed by the golden light upon it and upon the city and upon all the soft mountain heights around.

We make excursions to Vesuvius, Pompeii, Capri, Sorrento. Vesuvius, the mountain, is perfectly bare; there is not a bit of grass to be seen anywhere. It is all lava, ashes and volcanic sand. The road going up winds in and out, until at last it becomes so steep that you must mount donkeys. About two thousand feet above the sea you reach the observatory, where instruments are kept to register the movements of the volcano. Here, by the instruments, we can see just what motion is going on away down in the heart of the mountain. The director of the observatory informs you that Vesuvius is always more or less active, and tells you that centuries ago the volcano was covered with farms. There were vineyards all over the land, and hot springs at the edge of the mountains, where the rich Romans came for health and sport. Beautiful towns on the Ipains nearby, and among others the two fashionable resorts Herculaneum and Pompeii, and a large part of Pompeii is uncovered, and we walk through the streets, walled with curious buildings, which were blotted out by Vesuvius over eighteen hundred years ago. The earth and ashes so preserved the buildings that they look to-day almost as they did at the time of the eruption. The streets are paved with stone, and in some of them we can see the ruts made by the wheels of chariots. We walk through the amphitheatre where they had their shows and sit down on the marble seats of the bath houses, where the boys of Pompeii sat when they finished their bath, centuries ago. We wander through the houses and people them with their old Roman owners. Many buildings are of brick and many of stone. They are near all one of two storeys, and some are [illegible] Many of the houses have walls covered with paintings, and in some beautiful statues of bronze and marble, and all sorts of beautiful things in metals and carvings. The floors were formed of different colored stones fitted together in Mosaic pictures and Latin word "Salve" or "Welcome," was carved over their doors; while in one entrance floor there was a Mosaic picture of a fierce dog gnashing his teeth and tugging at a rope as though he wished to get at you, while at his feet were the words "Cave Canem," or "Beware of the Dog." I was much interested in parts where there are streets of shops with marble counters, where the merchants were selling their goods when the mighty volcanic flood came. We peered into a public bake oven, in which loaves of burned bread were found, when the mud and ashes were first dug away; casts of men, women and children and even dogs were made by pouring plaster of paris into the holes which their bodies formed in the ashes. There is a great wall about the city made of ashes and stones, which has been already dug out, and we find many men and boys digging and carrying the stuff out in baskets on their backs and their heads.

Next day we went to Capri. The nearer we got to the island the more beautiful it appeared. From the quay to the town of Capri the road swept round to the left, ascending loop after loop, to a saddle of the island lying between two cliffs, crowned with the most picturesque ruins I ever saw. Everywhere you looked was a new picture. And oh, the delicious color of the sky, and the sea and the dove grey of the cliffs; and there in the hotel garden we had our midday meal served on tables set under lemon trees, with everything characteristically Italian, even the sunlight, which is void, that it is like a great pool of light. And the blue grotto, so strange and beautiful in itself. Ancapris is far, far above Capri proper, on a horn of the mountain. We reached it by cable car. There you feel as though you were on top of the clouds, the umbrella pines and cypress trees and the museum filled with beautiful treasures which have been found under the sea, spoils of Tiberius, buried palaces, and a red sphinx crouches on the marble wall, gazing over the cliffs and the sea. And far beneath us row boats on their way to the blue grotto look like water beetles. The water appeared smoth as an endless sapphire floor polished to dance on, and the sunset, with Vesuvius set like a great conical amethyst in a blaze of ruby topaz glory.

The coast road from Naples to Sorrento offers a delightful alternation and continuation of this softest idyllic scenery, with the wildest and most magnificent mountain and crag land scape, winding along the steep shore of the sea, and under the brow of the wooded hills that rise high above us. We looked upon the terraced orange groves on the one side and down on the lemon orchards on the other. Sorrento has been called the village of flowers, and the flower of villages, and indeed its gardens, next to its picturesque situation, constitutes the great charm of Sorrento, beautiful and smiling with blending of sterner elements of picturesque with pastoral idyllic. Its sea-front consists of a precipice descending sheer to the water's edge. Here we see the beautiful villa of the late F. Marion Crawford, he auhor of "Mr. Isaacs' Fair Margaret," "The White Sister," and many other delightful works so well known to most of us.

SHE CURED HER HEART DISEASE

When She Cured Her Kidneys With Dodd's Kidney Pills

Mrs. Henry J. Jacques found a speedy relief for all her troubles, and now enjoys the best of health.

St. Rose du Lac, Man., Jan. 13.—(Special.)—That Heart Disease is one of the results of disordered Kidneys, and is consequently easily cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills, is the experience of Mrs. Henry J. Jacques of this place.

"My heart troubled me all the time," said Mrs. Jacques in an interview, "And I knew what terrible results might follow. The fact that my limbs would swell and my back ached me to believe that I also suffered from Kidney Disease, so I determined to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. I bought four boxes, and before I had finished the third box the swelling was gone, my back was well, and my heart no longer troubled me. I am now in the best of health, and I owe it all to Dodd's Kidney Pills."

Heart Disease is one of the troubles that come from unhealthy Kidneys. They fail to strain the impurities out of the blood, and those impurities are bound to affect the heart, which is the engine that propels the blood through the body. To cure Heart Disease cure the Kidneys with Dodd's Kidney Pills, to prevent Heart Disease keep the Kidneys toned up and healthy by using Dodd's Kidney Pills.

With mirth and laughter let old wrinkles come.

—Merchant of Venice, Act. I., Sc. I

In the famous passage in "As You Like It" on the seven ages of man, the melancholy Jaques closes with the words:

"Last scene of all,
That ends this strange eventful history.
Is second childishness and mere oblivion,

A somewhat doleful point of view with regard to life! If that is what man must come to, life is scarcely worth the living. But this is not Shakespeare's attitude; that greatest of philosophers on existence held a very different view. The words of a weeping cynic of his creation are not his words. Such may be the deplorable condition of a man at the end of life, but it is not necessary. A joyful, buoyant spirit generally keeps the faculties bright and keen till the end of life. Tennyson crossed the bar with a smile on his face. Let any man look about him, and he will see many old men with young hearts, old men whose spirits have refused to age with their bodies. Their faculties are still bright. They are sinking suns it is true, but the sinking sun may be gloriously beautiful.

Gratiano, in the "Merchant of Venice," was a somewhat coarse philosopher, a man given to babbling, but there was much wisdom in his advice to let old age come on with mirth and laughter. Healthy mirth is the sunshine of life, laughter is the music of existence. Old wrinkles and grey hairs are bound to come to those who live the allotted three score and ten years or over, but they are suggestive of the grave only when accompanied by a gloomy spirit. When a number of weeping philosophers are together pessimistically moralizing, to enter their society is like entering a damp building or tomb. A buoyant spirit comes among them with mirth and laughter. What a change! The pessimists become optimists; the very room in which they are seems to grow warmer. There are men who are able by their smiles and the spirit of mirth that twinkles in their eyes to warm large audiences.

So much is buoyancy of spirit valued by mankind that a light heart may be said to cover a multitude of sins. Why is it that the learned and unlearned, the righteous and unrighteous, have all shown a fondness for that immoral old reprobate, Sir John Falstaff? He was the "prince of humourists" as Professor R. G. Moulton calls him; therein lies the secret. He has for three hundred years made them laugh. His mirth is contagious, there was never any unmannerly sadness about "old Jack."

Shakespeare frequently refers to the tonic influence of mirth. "A light heart lives long" are excellent words to have in mind. A gloomy spirit congeals the blood; a happy disposition warms the heart, and moreover warms every other heart with which it comes into contact. Plants deprived of the sunlight grow pale and wilt; men who know no mirth have a living death. A buoyant spirit strengthens legs and shortens miles. There was much philosophy in the song of Autolycus in the "Winter's Tale":

"A merry heart goes all the day,
Your sad tires in a mile-a."

Sailors pulling on ropes sing merrily. Why? Labour is lightened by song. The reaper in the field forgets the slow-footed hours when song shortens his work-day, and as when Wordsworth heard the Highland girl sing at her work, the passer-by may have his life permanently brightened and be able to say with the poet,

"The music in my heart I bore,
Long after it was heard no more."

A happy song gives courage and lays ghosts; buoyant music has won many battles. Mirth and sadness, joy and anger have a powerful physical effect on humanity. How forcibly is this expressed in the line.

"Unquiet meals make ill digestion."

Wrangling and gloomy looks take away the appetite: "Better is a dinner of herbs where love is, than a stalled ox and hatred therewith." The inspired Shakespeare and the inspired writer of the Book of Proverbs have stated the same truth in different terms. Unless the mind and heart are at ease the most sumptuous repast will be disappointing, whereas the happy heart will be content with a crust. The weeping philosopher who "hears men's tales and smiles not," how he is shunned!

There is no reason why any man with life should "sit like his grandsire cut in alabaster," or allow his face to take on "a tartness" that would "sour ripe grapes." When trouble comes, smile! It will banish tears. When visited with loss of fortune, smile! It will enable you to face the battle of life once more. When the mind is fagged and depressed, smile! the nerves are on edge and the body languid, smile! it is a splendid tonic. It is not necessary to go through existence babbling and boisterously laughing, but the ideal life is one in which the wisdom of years is combined with a boyish lightness of heart.

Golden Text—Be ye strong therefore, and let not your hands be weak: for your work shall be rewarded. 2 Chron. xv. 7.

(1) Verses 1-2—What do you understand by the Spirit of God coming upon Azariah, and do men have similar experiences to-day?

(2) Whose son was Asa and what was the character of his father?

(3) What victorious experience had Asa just had?

(4) What does it avail a man if he was converted and lived a noble life for many years if he is now living in sin?

(5) What is hte unyielding condition if we would perpetuate the material or spiritual success of the past or the present? (This question must be answered in writing by members of the club.)

(6) In view of the natural constitution of things, why is it impossible for God to give any man material or spiritual success who is living out of harmony with God and the conditions which bring success?

(7) Verse 3.—What was the effect upon Israel when they did not worship the true God?

(8) What is the effect of true religion and education upon a nation?

(9) Verse 4—Is there any evidence that Israel, when living without God, were ever prosperous, or when living true to God, in adverse circumstances?

(10) How often may a nation or an individual turn back to God after having forsaken him?

(11) If the sole motive in turning to God is to be saved from our trouble, how will God receive us?

(12) Verses 5-6—What are always the results of living out of harmony with God?

(13) What are the conditions to be observed, if we would have inward and outward peace?

(14) Do physical, or mental troubles give us most "vexations," and what would you say is the greatest agony a man can endure?

(15) Why is it right to say when a nation or an individual suffers as a result of wrong doing, that "God did vex them with adversity?"

(16) What is the reason that those who are wrong themselves generally delight in accusing others and trying to hurt or destroy them?

(17) Is it possible for a nation to be permanently prosperous which is untrue to God, i.e., to the moral laws that are found in the warp and woof of human nature?

(18) Verse 7—Is it possible for right doing to go unrewarded and how, and when, do the rewards generally come?

(19) Is right doing actually under our own control?

(20) Verses 8-10—Which is the greater incentive to right doing the nobility, or the profit, of it?

(21) What are the rewards of doing right?

(22) Verses 11-12—What is the sacrifice that God most delights in from us?

(23) Verses 13-15 — Should the State compel people to be outwardly religious?

(24) Would you commend or condemn the sentiment in verses 13-15?

The White Sale Continues

It's A Brilliant Success

Any store can conduct a sale of cheap goods at cheap prices—that's simple enough if a merchant be willing to "mark off" inferior merchandise on his customers.

But its a distinct achievement to be able to offer at prices under regular goods in high demand, without sacrificing one whit of quality.

That's why we are poud of this White Sale. We've lowered prices considerably, but in no single instance has the cost been lessened at the expense of quality.

LIBRARY WILL NOT OPEN FOR SOME TIME

The library will not be opened to the public for some little time, as much has yet to be completed, and it is the wish of the board to have everything in complete working order before the public gains access to the shelves. Due notice will be given to the press when the building will be open to the public. In view of the fact that many residents still have books in their possession the librarian is authorized to state that everyone whose name is down in the ledger of the old library as having a book in his or her possession, will be required to library before another value can be obtained from the new building. Many persons have already returned book in answer to the request published in the papers. There are still many, however, who have not done so, and to these the request is once more earnestly made, to make an effort to return such volumes as they still retain. If they do not do so, they are simply placing the librarian and his assistant in the unpleasant position of having to refuse them the benefit of the shelves. The rules will be rigidly enforced, as the library is not for the special benefit of any one section of the community, but for all, and it is the intention of the Board that the rights of all shall be fully safeguarded. It may be as well to bring once more to public notice, two or three of the more salient points embodied in the Public Library by-law. These are as follows:

Upon signing an agreement to obey the rules and regulations now or hereafter to be adopted by the Board residents who are not ratepayers may, upon furnishing a recommendation and guarantee from a city ratepayer, borrow books from the library. Failing a guarantee, a deposit of $2 may be made with the librarian, as security for damage or loss of books which sum will be returned to the depositor, less deduction for any damage, or loss on return of borrower's card.

Guarantors are held strictly liable for any damage or loss incurred by those whom they guarantee.

Non-residents, can, on paying the annual sum of $2 and furnishing a recommendation or guarantee obtain the same privileges as those accorded to the city ratepayers.

Ratepayers may introduce transient visitors and ask that the privileges of the library and reading room be extended to them for the space of four open days and non-residents may borrow a book for a term not exceeding seven days, on payment of ten cents for each book borrowed. In the case of residents, members of a family of whom the head is a ratepayer, the furnishing of a separate guarantee by him for each member of his family will entitle them, individually, to the enjoyment of the ordinary privileges of the library. Ratepayers are entitled to the full privileges of the library or signing the agreement to abide by the rules laid down by the Board.

For the mutilation of books, when the culprit is discovered, the penalty will be provided in the police court as also for any pilfering of magazines or newspapers from the racks.

The transfer of the Ontario Steel plant at Welland to the Montreal Car & Foundry Co. has been completed.

Trade negotiations between Canada and the United States are progressing satisfactorily, according to Secretary of State Knox.

Five hundred graduates of Queen's University have already voted on the question of separation from the Presbyterian Church; 2,400 ballots have been issued.

The masters and pilots of the steamers Montcalm and Kron Priz Olaf were censured by the court in connection with the recent collision. One pilot was fined.

The Peoples Railway Co., incorporated by the Legislature of Ontario, is applying for a Federal charter. It is understood that the bill will involve [illegible] in Parliament.

[illegible] Calgary on the [illegible] when the store [illegible] and other valuables, [illegible] $3,000, stolen.

A Brutal Assault.

St. John, N.B., Jan. 14.—Mrs. Mary Normanzell was brutally assaulted yesterday morning by a thief, who awakened her with a terrible blow on the head. He also choked her and demanded her money. She escaped in her night clothes and bare feet, and rushed across the street for help. The robber did not find any money.

NO DYSPEPSIA OR UNDIGESTED FOOD

Heartburn, Gas, Headache and All Stomach Distress Vanishes

There would not be a case of indigestion here if readers who are subject to Stomach trouble knew the tremendous anti-ferment and digestive virtue contained in Dispepsin. This harmless preparation will digest a heavy meal without the slightest fuss or discomfort, and relieve the sourest, acid stomach in five minutes, besides overcoming all foul, Nauseous odours from the breath.

Ask your pharmacist to show you the formula, plainly printed on each 50-cent case of Pape's Dispepsin, then you will readily understand why this promptly cures Indigestion and removes such symptoms as Heartburn, a feeling like a lump of lead in the stomach, Belching of Gas and Eructations of undigested food, water brash, Nausea, Headache, Biliousness and many other bad symptoms; and, to keep your stomach liver and intestines clean and fresh, you will not need laxatives to time clean and fresh.

If your Stomach is sour and full of gas, or your food doesn't digest, and your meals don't seem to fit, why not get a 50-cent case from your druggist and make life worth living? Absolute relief from Stomach misery and perfect digestion of anything you eat is sure to follow five minutes after, and, besides, one case is sufficient to cure a whole family of such trouble.

Surely, a harmless, inexpensive preparation like Dispepsin which will always, either at daytime or during night, relieve your stomach misery and digest your meals, is about as handy and valuable a thing as you could have in the house.

"Night Watch" Is Damaged.

Amsterdam, Jan. 14.—Rembrandt's most famous picture, "The Night Watch," was badly damaged yesterday by a discharge naval cook named Sigrist, who entered the Rijks Museum, and with a knife deliberately slashed the masterpiece.

Sigrist, who was arrested, declared that his vandalism was an act of vengeance against the state, because of his discharge from service in the navy.

The cuts traverse the principal figures of Captain Frans Banning Cocqs' Company of Arquebusiers, but experts, who later viewed the work, expressed the opinion that the damage was not beyond repair.

Lost Season's Crops.

Markdale, Jan. 14.—The large barn belonging to F. Johnston was burned to the ground, with all the season's crops, three horses and a number of cattle and pigs, besides all his implements and rigs. There was no insurance, and the loss is probably $4,000. The cause of the fire is unknown.

DUKE OF CONNAUGHT GOVERNOR-GENERAL

Late King Edward's Brother Has Formally Accepted and Will Arrive About the End of September, According to the Official Acceptance Received in British Mails Yesterday.

Ottawa, Jan. 14.—Advices received here yesterday are that the coming to Canada of the Duke of Connaught this year as Governor-General is now beyond all doubt. The English mail, which arrived yesterday, brought the formal notice of his acceptance of the office, and the announcement of some appointments to his staff.

The Duke of Connaught, who is a brother of the late King Edward, will arrived in Canada towards the end of September or the beginning of October.

The duke's military secretary will be Major Henry Cecil Lowther, C.V.O., D.S.O., of the Scots Guards. He was for some time military attache at Paris. He also accompanied His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught to South Africa, when he went there recently to open the first Parliament of United South Africa, the latest dominion within the British Empire. He is a son of Hon. Gerald Lowther, Speaker of the Imperial Parliament.

The Duke of Connaught has also appointed his private secretary. He will be Arthur F. Sladen, who is at present private secretary to Earl Grey, the present Governor-General.

PLEADS GUILTY

W. R. Travers, Former Manager of the Farmers' Bank, Is Now in Jail Awaiting His Sentence

COURT WAS CROWDED

Toronto, Jan. 14.—W. R. Travers, former vice-president and general manager of the collapsed Farmers' Bank and director of the Keeley Mines, Ltd., pleaded guilty to charges of forgery, theft and making false returns to the Dominion Government when arraigned in the police court yesterday morning. Even with the rumor of a plea of guilty current in the streets, the denouement came as something of a shock to the courtroom full of spectators of a weight and prominence not often seen within its dingy walls.

The staging was dramatic, and so arranged that the collapse of the defence at the last moment came as a bolt from the blue. At the close of the regular calendar, detectives and others marched into the courtroom bearing great shoulder-loads of impressive ledgers. The scene was set for an extensive probing, when Magistrate Denison looked up from his own book to remark:

"Now, is Mr. Corley ready to go on in that Travers' case?"

"Yes, your worship," was the reply.

"Which case will you take up first?"

"We will take the general charge, that of making false returns to the Government."

Here H. H. Dewart, K.C., counsel for the defence, interrupted to remark that Travers had not yet pleaded to the second charge, that of theft of $10,000. Crown Attorney Corley added that Inspector of Detectives Duncan had a further charge of forgery of minutes of a directors meeting to add, and this was put upon the calendar.

The charge of theft was then read and Travers was asked to plead.

In answer to the magistrate's question Mr. Dewart remarked quietly "Upon the advice of counsel, he pleads guilty."

There was a stir in the courtroom, a quick catching of many breaths, and even the magistrate looked up with something of surprise.

"But what does he say himself?" he asked, "perhaps he knows better than his counsel."

"Guilty, sir," said Travers, who stood behind his counsel and directly in front of the magistrate. The white man was eloquent of weariness. It spoke in the heavy shoulders, bowed as he leaned upon the back of a chair, and from the tired eyes over the heavy dark pouches of his cheeks.

The magistrate then read the charge newly laid by Inspector Duncan.

"That W. R. Travers did unlawfully make a false statement in words and figures. That on [illegible] he reported the following [illegible] of $5000 and upwards had been granted since last [illegible] meeting, viz.: [illegible] Washart and Keeley [illegible] $50,000."

The general manager explained the [illegible] and interest on the Keeley Mine, which was satisfactory to the board and further advances were authorized if necessary,' with intent to defraud contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided."

Mr. Corley later explained that the final figures in the first and the words of the last paragraph of the quoted minute of a meeting of the bank directors had been altered by a clerk upon the order and at the dictation of Travers.

Travers elected to be tried summarily, and pleaded guilty in the same quiet but husky voice.

Then Mr. Dewart announced that his client desired to withdraw both plea and election on the charge of making false returns, and in this case a plea of guilty was also entered.

Mr. Corley plunged into the reading of a document which he had announced was a statement of the case prepared by the liquidator. The magistrate interrupted.

"Before I can sentence this man," he said, "I must know some of the circumstances surrounding the case."

"No, and you couldn't hear the evidence without understanding these features of the case. I was about to give you the facts," replied the crown attorney.

"No," said the magistrate, and Mr. Corley once more began to read the statement, elaborating its points from time to time.

"At the outset," said Mr. Dewart, "I would like to say that rumors that the delays and adjournments in this case were intended to hush up proceedings are absolutely without foundation. Nor is the plea entered by my client intended to stop investigation. Since the adjournment my client and I have had an opportunity of seeing the data in the hands of the crown, and in that way the time of the court was saved. I trust that the statement I am about to make may throw some further light on the unfortunate affairs of the bank."

Mr. Dewart then went on to say that he did not think his client should be made a "scapegoat" for others.

Mr. Dewart wanted the court to remember that already Mr. Travers had offered $500,000 for the Keeley mine, and that if this asset of the bank were not sacrificed, its ultimate sale would go a long way toward preventing any of those connected with the failure from feeling the pinch of distress, if it did not actually provide sufficient to meet all liabilities.

Counsel closed with a plea for mercy. He said:

"He stands here to-day a penniless, broken man, 57 years of age. Seven years is the utmost that you can say, but I think that I can ask for a lesser sentence than that, in view of the circumstances.

"Three years would be more to him than would twenty to a younger man. "Temper justice with mercy. He suffers more from the humiliation and degradation of this day than he could suffer from any penalty which your worship could impose.

"He has made full acknowledgement of any guilt, and has showed in every way an earnest desire to repair the fortunes of the bank in any transactions into which he may have entered.

Chief Accountant J. G. Fitzgibbon was then called and identified the false entries in the books.

A Richibucto School Teacher

Once a Dyspeptic—Now Well, Thanks to Father Morrissy's No. 11.

Richibucto, N. B., Nov. 17th 1909.

Father Morrissy Med. Co., Ltd.,

I have been teaching school for upwards of thirty years, during the last twenty-five of which I have suffered seriously with stomach trouble, indigestion and dyspepsia.

I have tried many remedies, and while I would get temporary relief from some of them, yet the old trouble would return, and with it the sufferings only known to the chronic dyspeptic.

Last year I had made up my mind to abandon my profession, feeling that in my condition I could neither do justice to myself or to the many pupils under my charge. A friend suggested to me that I try Father Morrissy's No. 11 Stomach Tablets; I did so, and have continued to use them with the result that my stomach trouble is cured—my indigestion and dyspepsia gone and I feel as well as I ever did.

I have, thanks to the Tablets, been able to continue in my profession, and feel that I am once more enjoying my work and am able to give justice to the fifty-four pupils under my care.

Yours Gratefully,

(Signed) MARY CHRYSTAL.

If you are you cannot do better than she did—take Father Morrissy's No. 11 Tablets.

Each No. 11 Tablet, when dissolved in the stomach, will digest 1½ pounds of food—a good, hearty meal—so that no matter how weak your stomach may be No. 11 Tablets will enable you to get the nourishment out of your food and build up your strength, while the stomach, thus relieved, recovers its vigor.

Taft Endorses Commission.

Washington, Jan. 14—Significant progress was made yesterday in the movement for the creation of a permanent tariff commission. Not only did President Taft in an address at the banquet of the National Tariff Commission Association openly endorse the Longworth bill, characterizing it as "a conciliatory measure embodying all the important features that are necessary to make the commission effective," but early yesterday he summoned the Republican members of the ways and means committee to the White House, and urged them to harmonize their differences.

Chairman of Interstate Commission.

Washington, Jan. 14—Judson C. Clements of Georgia was elected chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to succeed Judge Martin A. Knapp of New York, at a special conference of the commission held yesterday. Mr. Clements is the senior member of the commission, and is a Democrat.

MRS. FENTON GIVES HER EVIDENCE

Hamilton, Jan. 14.—The Finton trial is attracting larger crowds every day. At the sessions yesterday morning, afternoon and evening the court room was jammed to suffocation. In the morning the crown concluded its case and the defence had put in several of its witnesses before the adjournment last evening.

Dr. Raspbery of Dundas, a veterinary surgeon, said he saw the pigtrough at the Finton farm, and thought it had not been repaired. There was only one half bright nail in it.

Dr. Thompson, recalled, said he did not notice a scar or a scab on prisoner's index finger. He would not swear there was not a scar.

Governor Ogilvie at the jail said the prisoner had $1,366 when searched. This concluded the case for the crown.

Miss Theresa Dena testified that she worked for the Fintons. On the morning of the tragedy she met Tom driving to Hamilton about 8.30 to 9. Later she saw someone open the door and cough. She identified the cough as that of Elijah Finton.

Mrs. Thomas Finton was then called. She noticed on the Sunday before the death of Mr. Finton that her husband had a rag wrapped around one of his fingers.

Dealing with the reason for her leaving the Finton farm, the witness said that she objected to Mrs. St. Johns being there. She had no quarrel with her father-in-law and never saw anything but the best of feeling exhibited by either Tom or his father towards one another. To Mr. Blackstock she said that she knew that by suddenly leaving the house she was inconveniencing her husband and her father-in-law, who would be left without a housekeeper.

"Now, Mrs. Finton, according to your reasoning, there cannot be any reason why your husband should say that his father treated him like a dog."

The witness hedged for a while and then said "No."

Spotless Town.

Guelph, Jan. 14.—Guelph is going to be made one of the healthiest cities in Canada this year. A new health bylaw provides for an inspector, who under the Board of Health will look after the sources of milk supply, bakeshops, lavatories, inspect yards and supervise the collection of garbage.

The annual report of Medical Health Officer Dr. H. O. Howitt, presented to the Board of Health yesterday, urges the need of an isolation hospital and an infectious ambulance.

C.M.A. PRESENTS CASE.

Reciprocity Need Not Hurt Industries Says Premier.

Ottawa, Jan. 14.—The negative in the debate between the agriculturists and the manufacturers on the resolutions proposed by the organized farmers' deputation anent lower tariff, reciprocity with the United States, and a general tearing down of the protectionist ramparts was presented to the Government yesterday morning by a deputation of fifty manufacturers, representing the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and industries generally throughout Canada that would be affected by any trade agreement with the United States involving decreased protection to Canadian manufacturing and industrial interests.

The case for the manufacturers was presented by Mr. T. A. Russell of Toronto, chairman of the tariff committee of the association, succinctly reviewing all the arguments in favor of a steadfast adherence to the policy of adequate protection, pointing out the dangers of opening the Canadian market to competition from the United States under unequal economic conditions, and urging that the Government would be well advised to let well enough alone in the matter of tariff relations with Washington.

"In accepting the proposal to negotiate with the U.S., we were not oblivious to the disparities which existed" said Sir Wilfrid in the course of his reply. "We were aware that the Americans had been longer in business, had a larger population to cater to, and that conditions in the two countries were not identical. I can assure you that Mr. Fielding and Mr. Paterson, our commissioners in the negotiations, have the fact constantly before them that there is not a parity between the two countries. At the same time I cannot, for my part, see that it is impossible to reach some trade arrangement which will not in any way interfere with the manufacturing community of Canada."

As a result of a snap verdict the Government's majority was reduced yesterday to nine votes, which is said to be the smallest since 1896. The question arose over a motion to reduce an appraprintion of $17,000 for a postoffice at Marieville, Que., which the members of the Opposition denounced as granting large public buildings to small places in the Quebec Province in the hope of affecting votes, while larger and more important places throughout the Dominion were suffering from the need of increasing facilities for postoffice and customs purposes. The amount expended so far is $32,000, and the $17,000 additional is asked from the House. Marieville has only 800 inhabitants. The vote in question stood 43 to 34.

It is interesting to note that while appropriations of $15,000 for a postoffice in Arthabaska was under discussion, Arthur Gilbert, the Nationalist-member, remained silent.

Hon. Frank Oliver introdured a bill providing for the creation of a new schedule of forest reserves. Included in it is the reserve on the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains, the eastern boundary of which will be from the Yellow Head Pass north. Powers are provided for the expropriation of property which may be held by private individuals. Any rights which exist as, for instance, timber limits or leases, will not be interfered with, but patents may be expropriated.

E. N. Lewis (East Huron) introduced two bills, one to make it possible to deport immigrants within four years of their landing in Canada, if found guilty of carrying offensive weapons. The other is to make the acceptance of secret commissions a criminal offence.

W. D. Northrup (East Hastings), drew the attention of the Prime Minister to the fact that the Minister of External Affairs, Hon. Chas. Murphy, had not been sent to Washington to conduct, as such, the negotiations with the U. S. Government. It was proof, he said, that the new Department was not required.

Preparing for Coronation.

London, Jan. 14.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The aggregate representation of colonial contingents attending the coronation will number 2,000, five per cent. of which will be officers. The contingents will be camped at Alexandra Park. The coronation festivitives begin on June 19 and continue until the 30th.

London hotels have already raised rates. A Canadian, a regular visitor to London, endeavored to engage a room in a hotel on the route of the procession, but was informed prices were ten guineas, where they were ordinarily a guinea.

Toronto People Hurt.

Batavia, N.Y., Jan. 14.—Four persons were killed and twenty-six injured in a head-on collision on the New York Central Railroad here yesterday.

Coals from the overturned locomotive set fire to the wreckage, adding to the horror. Two of the dead were found pinned under the upset engine.

Two Toronto people are among the injured. They are: Mrs. John Shaw, severe scalp wound; John Shaw, carpenter, cut and otherwise slightly injured.

Killed Her Husband.

White Plains, N.Y., Jan. 14.—Rose Picohione, the 17-year-old girl convicted of manslaughter for killing her husband, was yesterday sentenced by Supreme Court Justice Tompkins to prison for not less than seven years and six months and not more than eleven years and six months.

PETERBOROUGH INTERMEDIATES BADLY BEATEN BY THE FAST TRENTON SEVEN

Speedy Easterners Had No Difficulty in Trimming Peterborough's Badly Crippled Outfit and Won Out by a Score of 18 to 4 —Leading at Half Time by 11 to 1.

WERE ALWAYS AHEAD

Special Staff Correspondence.

TRENTON, JAN. 13. — Peterborough's badly crippled Intermediate O. H. A. team was given a sound drubbing by the Trenton Intermediates here to-night. Trenton led from the first tap of the bell, and when it was all over had rattled in no less than eighteen goals, while Peterborough had caused the red light behind the Trenton nets to flash only four times. Sounds like a massacre, doesn't it? The Petes, with Denison unable to play, Bond crippled with a broken thumb, Kelly tied up with a badly slashed knee, and Ray with a gash in his foot, were in no shape to play a team of Trenton's calibre playing as the team at the outlet of the Trent Canal played to-night. They worked hard, but had none of the speed and none of the luck, and the game was never in doubt. The Petes were in the hole from the start, Trenton scoring three goals within the first two minutes. This unexpected opening and the big rink combined to give the Petes a bad attack of rattles, and they failed to show their real form, only in snatches. When they did get going in their usual fashion, they had just as much of the play as had Trenton, but even then they had no luck with their shots, often getting right in until a goal seemed unavoidable, only to have a foozle or a fine stop by Law. Trenton's substitute goal-minder. McGiffin, the regular net-guardian was hurt in practise, and was unable to play, but if McGiffin has anything on the man who took his place to-night he must be the real goal-fringed article, for Law weeded them out in sensational fashion.

This Trenton team has a world of speed from point right through to centre, are beautiful stick-handlers, and good scorers, but they have no license to beat Peterborough by anything like the score they piled up to-night. Even on the play they were not entitled to such a decisive margin, and if the Trenton people imagine that Peterborough were playing up to anything like their real form there is a rude awakening for them when the return engagement is pulled off on Jack Thirnbeck's ice-box. This is not written with any idea of belittling Trenton's clever victory but it is a plain statement of fact that the Petes were off-colour and so badly crippled that they never had a chance with the speed merchants on the Trenton line-up. The winners are lightning fast, and carry the puck wonderfully well, but from the side it looked as if a few stiff body checks might have slowed them up some. The Petes, however, played the puck invariably, and as a result the light, speedy Trenton forwards were a good deal more aggressive than they would have been under different conditions. All four forwars are tricky and shifty to an extreme, their back passing and long passes from one wing to the other being very pretty, and effective as well. Often when the teams were pretty well bunched in the corner near Peterborough's nets a Trenton man would pass clean across the wide rink to a forward there, and there would be a lightning shot before the Peterborough's defence, expecting the puck to be centred, could wheel to meet the new point of attack. It was a play that was worked effectively several times. They are wonderfully quick in taking advantage of an opening, Fletcher being especially proficient. This little player (he weighs only 120 pounds) is like a streak of light, and he shoots from any angle, his specialty being a "scoop" shot that threatens to bear the net from its moorings. He never lets up, either, and it was worth the trip to Trenton to watch him work when in close. The other forwards are nearly as fast. Art Armstrong, the speedy left wing, has, perhaps, a shade on the others. The defence was sure and reliable. McCaw, the big cover-point, who played against Peterborough with Goderich in 1909, checked well, and his rushes always relieved the pressure. Croft, the point player, is a wizard stick-handler, with a heap of speed, and his snake-like jaunts down the ice were a puzzle that Peterborough seemed unable to solve, the speedy point man getting several goals unassisted.

For Peterborough Carl Ray, at rover, despite his injured foot and two weeks without practise, was undoubtedly the star, and played a remarkable game, considering the handicap he was working under. He was always at it, rushing magnificently and checking back desperately, in spite of the fact that he had his tip badly cut shortly after the game started by an accidental hook. Kelly worked like a fiend, but his swollen knee slowed him up a lot, and he could not break away like he would have otherwise. Dobson and Sorel never let up trying, but they had two speedy men to look after, and had their hands full. The defence naturally were worked overtime but try as they might, could not keep Trenton out, when they broke away in line. Jerry Coughlin played his first Intermediate game and also his first game on the defence, and did remarkably well under the circumstances, getting away with a lot of nice stickhandling.

The game was very fast despite the one-sided score, and was decidedly clean, the penalty list being small.

A big crowd saw the game.

The Trenton rink is twenty feet longer and twenty wider than Brock Street rink, and looked like a lake to the Peterborough sheet of ice.

The teams were as follows:

	TRENTON
	Law
	Croft
	McGaw
	Cumming
Powers	Fletcher	Armstrong
Kelly	Dobson	Sorel
	Ray
	Coughlin
	Bond
	Derocher

PETERBOROUGH

Trenton started off with a rush that swept the Petes off their feet. A nice combination rush carried the rubber to the Peterborough nets and, although the pressure was relieved momentarily, back came the gypsum; Cummings rushed nicely along the wing and centred to Fletcher, who beat Derocher with a shot from close in. Trenton, 1; Peterborough, 0.

The puck had not been nearer than centre ice to the Trenton nets. Right from the face-off the Trenton team swept down on the Peterborough defence and Fletcher banged another through in thirty seconds. Trenton, 2; Peterborough, 0.

Half a minute later, although Powers was on the fence, Fletcher came down alone with a nice rush and scored. Trenton, 3; Peterborough 0.

Peterborough braced up at this stage, and for fifteen minutes more than held their own. Their combination was carrying them in on the nets, while the defence was meeting with better success in holding out the Trenton attack. The Peterborough supporters began to take notice, as for a short period it looked as if the Petes were going to pull down the three-goal lead. However, no matter how they tried they could not score. Sometimes the shot was wide; at others Law picked the drive. Ray had his lip badly cut and there was a short delay, but he went on playing. Kelly, Dobson and Sorel each had beautiful opportunities to score, but there was nothing doing. Finally, after fifteen minutes' hard playing Powers scored for Trenton on a shot from well out, and a few seconds after Fletcher beat Derocher again, leaving the score, Trenton 5, Peterborough 0. Bond tripped the little centre, but his shot rolled in just the same. Bond was penalized.

McGaw was sent off for tripping Ray and the Peterborough Captain followed soon after for the same offence. Armstrong made it 6 to 0 for Trenton, on a nice shot. Peterborough broke into the scoring column in the last, Kelly tearing down the wing and scoring on a beautiful shot which Law partially stopped. Trenton 6, Peterborough 1.

Powers and Armstrong were both penalized, but even playing five men to seven, Trenton succeeded in holding the Petes out. McGaw boosted their score by a nice rush and shot. Trenton 7, Peterborough 1.

The speedy point man got the next one all by himself, carrying the puck the length of the rink on a winding rush that carried him clean through for a counter. Trenton, 9; Peterborough, 1.

Fletcher got the next one on a neat pass and Armstrong followed with a goal, on a pass from Powers, leaving the half-time score 11-1.

Peterborough was first to score after the breathing spell. Ray took a pass at centre, and, skating around McGaw and Croft, tipped the rubber past Law. Trenton 11, Peterborough 2.

Powers was ruled off again, but Trenton kept coming down like doomsday, Croft dancing in another after a combination rush.

Cummings was responsible for the next, scoring from a pass the width of the rink. Croft came down alone and scored on a shot from well out, making it Trenton 15, Peterborough 2.

Dobson was penalized for tripping and while he was off, Fletcher tipped in another past Derocher.

Bond tore off a pretty rush and passed to Ray, who carried the rubber in and scored. Trenton 16, Peterborough 3.

Fletcher cut this one back for Trenton in short order, driving one in from the corner. Trenton 17, Peterborough 3.

Sorel, on a pass from Dobson, added for Peterborough, and Croft rounded out the scoring on a long rush for a solo effort. Final score.

CANUCK'S CHANCES WITH ATTELL LOOK BRIGHT

What will Billy Allen's chances be with Abe Attell, who, for seven years, has held the featherweight championship? Will the Canadian lad, who has met the best boys of his weight in the United States, be outclassed, or has he a chance with the wily Abe, who used as good judgment in making his matches as he does in the ring.

Attell's last three bouts of any importance were with Jack White at Winnipeg, Frankie Conley at New Orleans, and with Pal Moore in New York. White fought him a draw, and Attell had to try every moment for Jack would have landed him. Conley in New Orleans, fought the champion off his feet, and while it is fashionable to say that Abe was not trying in this case he worked hard enough. That he does not like Conley's game is proven by the fact that with a guarantee of $3,500 and the privilege of 3 5per cent. of a holiday house which could have run to $20,000 Abe did not accept terms for a return engagement.

Now, his great showing was with Pal Moore-Moore, who, by having tons of weight on bantams and feather-weights, had been winning right along—but who took precious care to pass up Allen, even after he was matched to box him in Philadelphia. Jimmy Walsh beat Pal twice within a year and Allen made Walsh look like a novice in their battle in Woonsocket, according to the Boston papers. It has been impossible to get Walsh into the ring with Allen since that time, despite the fact that Allen offered to make 122 at six o'clock, the same weight made at their previous meetings.

Allen has had 18 fights in 1910, five in places where decisions could be given, of the five winning two by knockouts, getting one decision and two draws. He lost one fight by a knockout, and his 12 other battles were usually given him by the newspapers. He fought Jimmy Walsh twice, Tommy O'Toole twice, Knock-Out Brown twice, Robbie Tickle, champion of Rhode Island, Teddy Broad, picked in England to beat Attell, and Young Nixon of Boston, and Billy Ryan, both lightweights, and has been willing to shy his castor into the ring with any boy any where near his weight.

Allan, while not in love with training and inclined to take it easy, can work when he has need, and for this bout with Attell, the little fellow is working as he never worked before. He has just been joined by Collie Allen, his brother, who will work with him, and if he is not in perfect condition for the bout will make for excuses for it is the one fight he has been looking forward to for a year.

Some of the best judges of boxers in the United States say that Allen is the fastest boy in the world to-day, and that if he had the punch no one could stand before him. But Allen has proven at times at least that when he slows up he has the punch which lands championships, even in no decision bouts. If he lands one on the night of Jan. 23, he has little need to worry as to his future success.

SOME HOCKEY HAPPENINGS

How could it be helped. It was Friday the thirteenth.

Trenton did not earn a victory by anything like the margin they scored. The Petes therw away chances aplenty

That Trenton colloseum is some rink for the players. The crowd however is not nearly so well looked after as in the Brock Street arena. In fact the heaters reckon a turnbike in appearance quite equitable of the local rink.

They have a novel way for the goal umpire to announce a score in Trenton. A button connected with a red light over the umpire's box is at the officials elbow and when the puck is neted the light is flashed on. If the system works on metre there must have been a considerable light bill incurred last night for the light was surely working over time.

Bud Kelly must have been tipped off to the Trenton team as a dangerous man as they delegated two of their forwards to take care of him. "Kel" crawled out of bed to play the game but despite his badly damaged knee he never let up.

The Peterborough players ran across our old college friend Bobby Mercer in Trenton last night. The erstwhile Peterborough goal keeper is playing with the Port Hope pros., which team was defeated in Picton last night.

Mr. Thos McGeachie, the manager of the Peterborough Junior O.H.A. team, who although now residing in Peterborough has not yet moved his family from Trenton entertained the members and officers of the Peterborough Intemediates at his home in Trenton after last night's game. A sumptuous repast was served that utterly wiped out from the minds of the players all memory of the earlier events of the evening, and was done ample justice to. Afterwards a very pleasant social hour was spent with music and other amusements. The hospitality of Mr. and Mrs. McGeachie was heartily appreciated by the visitors.

THE FENTON CASE

There was stir in court when Lawyer Lynch Staunton asked the prisoner, Tom Fenton, to step into the witness box. Staunton questioned him about an insinuation that he had tried to poison his father at one time. Fenton said he and his father were on the best terms. The hundred dollars he had on the day of the murder was given to him by his father. He told his story in a quiet, cool manner, and smiled occasionally.

The prisoner witness stated that he left his father alive and well at 8 o'clock, having been given one dollar by him to buy a bag of feed. When he was in Hampton at noon he received a message that his father was dead.

POLICE COURT

A couple of vags and a drunk constituted the lot in the Police Court this morning. Fred Barlow, one of the heroes of yesterday morning's court, again appeared. He was fined $2 in yesterday's court and a like fine was imposed this morning. He did not have the money but he sent out for it.

The two vagrants were Patrick Harvey and John McIntyre. They said that they were umbrella repairers and that they had homes in Montreal so the Magistrate told them, if they would vacate the city to-day they could go. They went. Both men were drunk and last night and began fighting in the cells. The chief and an officer went to separate them and they called the chief all sorts of obnoxious names. The Chief is determined to rid the city of vags and any person coming around there on lodging will get a warm reception.

Mr. W. F. Nelson leaves today for Chicago where he will spend a few days at the plant of the Oliver Typewriting Company, watching the manufacture of the machines. The factory is situated at Woodstock, Ill. near Chicago.

It is noted by the Woburn Hat News of January 9th that that journal has passed into the control of a newly organized publishing company, "The Medicine Hat News, Limited." Mr. J. N. Cahill, of Perth, who for seven years has been connected with the News, assumes the management under the new ownership. Mr. Terrell is well known in Peterborough and local interest will be great in the success which we trust will attend his efforts in the "Gas City."

THE REALM OF THE PULPIT

Rev. G. E. Hughes in The Christian Witness.

"Preach the word."—2 Tim. 4: 2.

There is no work so sacred in its character, so far-reaching in its influence for time and eternity, and upon the faithful performance of which hinges so many interests for the present and the future, as the preaching of the glorious Gospel of Christ. This is a work for which God selects and definitely calls those whom He would have perform the same. The ministry is not a profession, but a divine calling, and no one should, for a moment, think of entering the work of the ministry without the distinct call from God, for only such can truthfully obey the command of Paul. "Preach the word."

In these words of the Apostle Paul we have given us the true realm of the pulpit.

God not only calls His ministers, and equips them for this sacred calling, but He specifically tells them what they are to preach.

Thank God, we, His ministers, do not have to go through the dusty archives of this old world in order to find something to preach to the people over whom God has made us under-shepherds. God has told us what to preach. It is proper that He should. The work is His. He calls those whom He would have preach His Gospel. He equips them for their work; the power that is to make their preaching effectual is from Him; and it is His prerogative to say what shall be preached.

Yet who will dare deny the fact that there are men in the pulpit today who have never been called of God and who are not preaching the preaching that God would have them preach.

There are pulpits where men stand Sabbath after Sabbath, and while perishing souls are there before them, those ministers will deliver their sermonettes or rose-watered essays on history, astronomy, science, or the latest book they have read, while souls for whom Christ died are drifting to an awful hell. There is no use trying to close our eyes to this sad fact, for such men are to be found, even in the pulpits of some Methodist churches to-day, and God only knows how many souls are in hell for the want of true men of God to preach the glorious Gospel of the Son of God.

Question—What has science to do with the awakening of souls dead in trespasses and sins? What has history, philosophy, literature, to do with the salvation of men and women? What is there in many a sermon as preached in modern pulpits to feed the hungry souls, who, weary from the toil and care of the past week, come to the house of God on the Sabbath to feed on some morsel of spiritual food which they have a right to expect the one in the pulpit to give them? What is there to comfort those in sorrow, in many of the cold, lifeless, pulseless, godless sermons on popular themes, with the preacher's heart as cold as the subject?

Many of the subjects treated in the modern pulpit are good in themselves and in their place, but their place is not in the pulpit, thus supplanting the Gospel, which should have the right of way. God never called any man to preach the Gospel and equipped that man, and then filled his mouth on Sabbath morning with a message on history, science or many of the subjects treated from the modern pulpit.

Abraham Lincoln was a great man, and his life and the work he did would be a fitting subject for the schoolroom or the lecture platform. But God nowhere tells us to preach about men, but Christ and Him crucified. For while Lincoln, under the blessings of God, was the human liberator of four millions of slaves from human slavery, it takes the Christ of Calvary to break the shackles from the soul of the sinner. Geology may tell us of the different stratas of stone found in the bosom of mother earth. But it takes the Holy Spirit as revealed in this Gospel to reveal the deep stratas of sin in the soul. Science could tell what explosive to use in order to blow up what is known as "Hell's Gate" in the harbor of New York. But it takes this gospel to reveal to us the power that can rend the stony heart and thus make it possible for the seed of eternal truth to find a lodging there.

Philosophy may reason and speculate about the future of man. But it takes this Gospel to unfold to us the glorious fact that if a man die he shall live again.

Blessed be God for such a Gospel and for the high privilege of preaching the same!

Some may call us narrow, but so long as we are in this world of sin, so long as sin is what it is, and men and women are hastening to an awful hell, God helping us, we shall stand upon the walls of Zion and with all the power God gives us we shall preach this glorious Gospel in all its plainness and power, offering pardon to the penitent sinner and entire sanctification to the consecrated believer.

Question — What is implied in preaching the "Word?"

It means to give saint and sinner their portion. It means to tell the world what God has said in this Bible with no letting down, no whitewashing, no mincing of words, but to preach the plain, unvarnished truth as it is revealed in this Bible. This is where the rub comes with many. It means to tell every unsaved soul, no matter who they are or what their position, whether in the church or not, that they are sinners, guilty, condemned, and on the road that leads direct to hell.

Sin is no innocent infirmity, and to "preach the word" means not to minimise sin.

To "preach the word" means to tell every soul, rich or poor, learned or ignorant, in the church or out of it, that they must be born again of the Spirit, or never enter the kingdom of grace here. That there is no such thing as becoming a Christian by holding up the hand, signing a card, joining a church, or being baptized or confirmed. But there must be a divine, instantaneous, radical change wrought by the Spirit of God, whereby the soul becomes a new creature in Christ Jesus, and the old life is ended and a new life begun.

To "preach the word" means to look every converted soul squarely in the face and ask them the question, Have you received the Holy Ghost since you believed?

It means to tell them of the fountain that cleanses from all sin, and that being sanctified wholly they may blameless unto the coming of the Lord.

Here is where many in Methodist pulpits are failing to-day. And as a result their people are going on year after year struggling with the "old man" of sin, without the blessed experience of holiness, and as a result many backslide and go out into rayless night.

Many are afraid to preach definitely on the doctrine of sanctification for fear of being called "cranks" or "specialists."

But we need to remember that this blessed Bible declares that without "the sanctification no man shall see the Lord."

This Gospel which we are called to preach teaches that some time after the soul has been converted it must be sanctified wholly by the blood of Christ. People may reject it, oppose it, talk against it, and those in authority wield their ecclesiastical club but the man who has the experience and has a distinct call to "preach the word" will preach this Gospel in all its fullness and cry in death, "Behold, behold the Lamb."

Preaching the word means to tell people that they must live clean lives. How many do not like this kind of a Gospel. How much rottenness there is to be found in the lives of many to-day who profess to be children of God. But this Gospel teaches that we must clean up, and live clean lives; must quit the dance, the card table, whether in the home or in some public place; must give up the theatre and the things of the world, for the love of the world and the love of God cannot dwell in the same heart at the same time.

To "preach the word" means to point the child of God away from this world of cares and sorrows, trials and temptations, to a land of pure delight, where sin and sorrow can never come.

It means to shout to the weary and heavy laden ones of earth the glad tidings that there is a sunny south land for the soul where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest. To tell them of that

"Land of pure delight,
Where saints immortal reign;
Infinite day excludes the night,
And pleasures banish pain."

Tell them of that city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. Tell them of those mansions which Christ has gone to prepare for those who are faithful to the trust committed to them.

"Oh, how blessed," you say, "is such a Gospel! Preach this Gospel to us."

But listen. That which we have mentioned is only part of this Gospel which we are to preach. Many like to hear the side which we have mentioned. But such need to remember that while there is a place prepared for the righteous, and to "preach the word" means to preach concerning that place of bliss, yet it means also to tell the soul about the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone.

To "preach the word" means to tell every unconverted, unsanctified soul of that place called hell, which human language fails fully to describe; a place where the wicked shall lift up their eyes and from whence the smoke of their torment shall ascend for ever.

This is part of the Gospel we are commissioned to preach, and a few in this the twentieth century like to hear. They do not want to be disturbed in their sleep of carnality; they do not want to hear what God has to say about the bottomless pit, the rayless night, and the punishment that is everlasting.

It is all right with them to talk about the fields of bliss the flowers that bloom for ever, the gold-paved streets and pat people on the back and tell them they are good fellows when they are on the straight road to an awful hell.

But the man who [illegible] command of man and [illegible] word "according to [illegible] must not preach anything [illegible] regions of despair. He must [illegible] even with a shout, but [illegible] a whisper.

Beloved, I find [illegible] Bible about hell as a place where [illegible] be cast every soul that [illegible] as sure as heaven where [illegible] God shall be ever praised [illegible] the blessed Lord. The Bible [illegible] that the [illegible] eternal life [illegible] which God called me to preach [illegible] we have no right nor have the least desire to preach the one and not the other.

When God called me to preach, He said, "Preach the Word," and, God helping me, I have always done so. It has proven a sharp two-edged sword; it has made some people mad; some have howled, some criticised. But all the while my soul has a hallelujah good time, and is this moment on the way to glory, sweetly and fully sanctified by the Spirit's baptism, and with God to sustain me, and sinners before me, we shall preach this blessed Gospel until God says, "Come up higher," and then go to dwell with Him.

ANNUAL MEETING
... OF THE ...
Home Life Association of Canada

The Annual General Meeting of the Shareholders and Participating Policyholders of The Home Life Association of Canada was held at the offices of the Association in The Home Life Building, Thursday, January 12th, 1911, many Shareholders and Policyholders being present.

The President, Hon. J. R. Stratton, M.P., occupied the chair, and Mr. A. J. Walker, Secretary-Treasurer of the Association, acted as secretary of the meeting

Hon. Mr. Stratton, President, in presenting to the meeting the Report of the Directors, said:—

I have much pleasure in submitting for your consideration the Annual Financial Statement of The Home Life Association of Canada for the year ending December 31st, 1910, accompanied with a statement of the Assets and Liabilities and a Comparative Statement for the period under review.

In so doing, it is a pleasure to be able to congratulate those interested upon a general improvement in the results of the operations of the Association—a considerably improved earning capacity of its investments and a general improvement in condition of the interests of the Association, nearly, if not all, of the departments participating in this improvement and the Association generally sharing in the prosperous financial and commercial conditions that have marked the country in the past year, and which promise to be continued in the year to come. Many of these are worthy of more specific reference.

The improved condition of the standing of the Association, as represented by its Assets, is shown by the fact that the total of Assets, including capital not subjected to call, now amount to more than two millions of dollars, the exact figures being $2,027,739.29—an increase of $158,891.60 over the figures of last year.

The invested assets of a company or corporation of a financial character change in character and form as well as amount from year to year.

At the close of 1910 the invested assets of The Home Life Association, amounting in round numbers to $1,200,000 were composed as follows:—

First mortgages on real estate, $497,815.55.

Loans on the policies of the Association, $169,798.03.

To this may be added cash in bank, and on deposit receipts, $82,489.98, and accounts receivable, $268.13.

During the year the mortgage account has been strengthened to the extent of nearly $100 000; the sum of $21,337 added to the total of municipal debentures and bonds, and a considerable increase has been made in loans on the policies of the Association.

The interest earning capacity of the investments of the Association are very satisfactory—mortgages realizing 7.88 per cent., bonds and debentures 5 1-3 per cent., and loans on policies 5 1-3 per cent., the average being eminently satisfactory. The Home Life Building, in which there is at present no vacancy, has maintained its revenue producing value.

The insurance in force, showing an increase of $259,799, from $5,583,-[illegible] to $5,842,[illegible], is satisfactory as to [illegible] progress. The premium income shows a corresponding increase, the figures of last year being $204,529.65, and this year $210,686.99—an increase of $6 161.34.

The legal reserves, which in last year's statement stood at $928,530.14, now total $1,047,384.39, a substantial increase of $118,038.25.

The interest ratio again shows an increase, rising this year to six and one-quarter per cent. from 5 99 per cent. in 1909, which places The Home Life Association in this regard in the front rank among insurance corporations, and indicates that the investments have been placed with care and judgment.

In the matter of death claims the showing is the best in the history of the Association for several years, the demands being substantially below the estimated expectancy of mortality, in emphasis of the importance of careful selection and acceptance of risks.

The amount paid to meet the expenses of operation is $1,920.02 less than the preceding year.

The mortgage account exhibits a continuous, prosperous and healthy condition, the interest payments being promptly met, and the security represented by our mortgages being of a sound and satisfactory character.

The sum written off office furniture, now standing on our books at $2,835.24, more than provides for depreciation as the real value of the furniture is greater than its value as recorded in the assets.

The Home Life Building, as an asset, is gaining in its investment and net revenue producing value, a further reduction of liability to the amount of $5,000 having been made during the past year.

Loans on life policies, recognized as one of the most advantageous forms of life assurance business, have materially increased, and the interest pyaments on all undertakings have been well met.

At the end of the year there were unadjusted and uncompleted death claims to the amount of $4,500. The policy and practice of the Association are to pay all claims promptly on the necessary probatory documents being approved by the solicitor of the Association.

The invested assets of the Association now amount to $1,196,486.55, an increase of $154,623.31. These assets are of a character to stand the closest scrutiny in regard to safety, soundness, and earning value.

During the past year the auditors of the Shareholders have made their regular inspection and audit. The Government, through the Insurance Department, has also made its examination and inspection covering all securities held by the Association, as well as all details of its business operations. In both cases the results were in all respects satisfactory.

As you are aware, the amended Insurance Act came into force on the first of January, and the Association has prepared by conforming to its requirements, by the provision of new rate books and new policy forms, which are now in the hands of the agents.

In concluding my references to the Report and Statement before you, I feel that I am qualified in dwelling upon its generally satisfactory and encouraging character, and further instilled in the confidence that in the coming year The Home Life Association will enjoy a fair degree of the prosperity which now prevails throughout the country, and promises to continue. It affords me much pleasure to move the adoption of the Report.

Mr. Jas. L. Hughes, Vice-President, in seconding the resolution adopting the Report, expressed his satisfaction at the increase in the interest rate from 5 98 per cent. six years ago to six and a quarter per cent. (6¼ p.c.) in 1910, which, taken in conjunction with the unquestionable soundness of the investments, he considered ground for congratulation to all interested. Mr. Hughes further referred to the reduction in management expenses, and to the fact that the total assets for security of policyholders now exceed the two-million dollar mark.

Mr. John S. King, Vice-President, in supporting the motion of the adoption of the Report, took occasion to point out that the mortgage investments of the Company almost half a million dollars, are so placed in the different Provinces of the Dominion as to assist materially in the extension of the Company's interests and influence, and after careful investigation he was able to state that there was no undue allocation of mortgage funds in any one section, so that in the event of adverse conditions there would be no likelihood of any great volume of investment interests being injuriously affected. Mr. King was sanguine that the ensuing year would show even more favourable results than the past, and that the Company had entered upon an era of development and prosperity.

After remarks by Rev. A. L. Geo, of Simcoe, Mr. J. K. McCutcheon, Managing Director, Dr. John S. King, Chief Medical Referee, and others, the Report was unanimously adopted.

At a meeting of the Directors held immediately at the conclusion of the General Meeting the following Shareholders' Directors were elected by the meeting:

Hon. J. R. Stratton, M.P.; Mr. James L. Hughes, Chief Inspector of Public Schools, Toronto; Mr. John S. King, President Relindo Shoe Company, Toronto; Mr. Jas. J. Warren, Managing Director Trusts and Guarantee Company, Toronto; Mr. D. W. Karn, Piano and Organ Manufacturer, Woodstock; Mr. J. K. McCutcheon, Managing Director, Toronto.

The following Policyholders' Directors were elected:

Mr. J. W. [illegible], Guelph, Ont.; Mr. Charles Turnbull, Galt, Ont.; Mr. D. R. [illegible], Sask.

Mr. T. S. Hough, K.C., Winnipeg; Mr. James Maynard, Victoria, B.C.; Mr. A. [illegible] Kennedy, Winnipeg; Mr. Charles May, Edmonton; Mr. S. A. Rutherford, Winnipeg.

At a meeting of the Directors held immediately at the conclusion of the [illegible] Meeting the following officers were elected:

President, Hon. J. R. Stratton, M.P. Vice-Presidents, Mr. John S. King, Mr. James L. Hughes; Managing Director, Mr. J. K. McCutcheon; Secretary-Treasurer, Mr. A. J. Walker.

TOM FENTON GOES FREE ON MURDER CHARGE

Saltfleet Farmer Discharged Without a Stain on His Character--Judge Teetzel Charges Jury Against Accepting a Weak, Circumstantial Case as Proof of the Guilt of the Prisoner.

Hamilton, Jan. 16.—Thomas Finton was freed here Saturday without a stain on his character after Judge Teetzel had strongly charged the jury in his favor.

He was put on the stand in his own behalf and told told of his last talk with his father. They had a friendly conversation on several topics and he (Tom) then went and did the chores. He saw his father later and got a dollar with which to buy feed.

At the afternoon's session the defence concluded its case with Tom Finton, and Mr. Blackstock called a number of witnesses in. When these had all been heard, Justice Teetzel created somewhat of a sensation by asking Mr. Blackstock to give his views why the evidence should be given to the jury, intimating that no direct evidence, such as the weapon, or direct implication against the prisoner had been submitted. Mr. Blackstock therefore proceeded to review the evidence, pointing out where suspicion pointed to the prisoner. Tom wanted to get his wife or the farm, and the only way he could work it was, knowing that his father's will provided for him recovering half the farm, to do away with the father. With reference to the blood spots, Mr. Blackstock asked if the prisoner had not been given every opportunity to explain them, yet no attempt at doing so had been made, until the lawyers got on the case, when a cut on Tom's finger was wrung in so as to convince the jury that it was how the blood got there. He thought that Tom's statement that perhaps Mrs. Kerr put the blood on his overalls, showed that Tom was afraid. He contended that it was not necessary that the weapon should be found. He asked if it were natural that shoes that were worn around a barnyard should be immaculate. It was not necessary for the crown to explain these blood stains or what Tom put on his wagon before leaving home. Tom's uneasiness whenever the shoe pinched, was a point against him. Too much stress had been taken up with the weakness of circumstantial evidence, to suit him. Mr. Blackstock asked if it was possible with such a mass of evidence that the prisoner should escape for one of the most brutal crimes in criminal annals.

Justice Teetzel felt that should he send this case to the jury he would consider it necessary to tell them that circumstantial evidence should be taken with the greatest caution. He quoted law on the subject, and also English opinions to substantiate the stand he was taking. The circumstances had to be consistent with the prisoner's guilt, and while he would not go so far as to say that the facts were not consistent in this case, he thought that the evidence was weak in some particulars.

Justice Teetzel had a compliment to pay to Mr. Blackstock's ability and reliability on questions of law, and regretted that he was unable to agree with his opinion on this point.

Taking the evidence in its entirety, the jury would have a right to accept that the deceased was subject to fainting spells. He thought the position of the body outside the barn door was sufficient to raise a presumption in the minds of the jury that he might have died from an accident, and this had not been dispelled. His lordship did not think there was sufficient evidence to show a motive for the prisoner killing his father. The crown had failed to show that there was such a feeling between the father and the son as to indicate that the prisoner would commit murder. None of the crown witnesses had given evidence of actual quarreling. Acting on the presumption that all criminal prosecutions favor the innocence of the prisoner, he therefore told the jury that he must instruct them not to bring in a verdict of guilt against the prisoner. All the evidence did was to throw strong suspicion on the prisoner. He believed that the crown's action was fully justified, and that the investigation had been well conducted.

His lordship therefore recorded a verdict of "Not guilty" on behalf of the jury. The prisoner's wife and friends flocked around him, and Finton laughed for the first time since he appeared in court.

The crowd in court was so large that the police had to give out instructions before the prisoner was actually discharged.

When the courtroom had been cleared his lordship addressed the prisoner as follows: "You have heard my address to the jury, and, as I said, that while there was not sufficient evidence to convict you, yet there was sufficient to cast suspicion on you and force you to suffer the long term of imprisonment prior to your trial. I trust your conscience is as clear as mine is in discharging you. This matter is between you and your Maker, and no one else knows. And I believe you are an innocent man, and you are discharged from this court without a stain upon you."

TWO MEN BLAMED

Strangers Were Seen Around Wellesley on the Day of the Murder but the Police Are Reticent

SAY THEY HAVE CLUES

Berlin, Jan. 61.—Provincial Detective Boyd arrived Saturday evening to take charge of the Lobinski murder case. The police claim to have clews that will lead to arrests, but will divulge nothing. Detectives Boyd and Huber left early yesterday morning for the scene of the crime, and, after a thorough examination of the premises, interviewed everybody prominently connected with the case.

On Saturday afternoon the inquest was opened by Coroner Glaister, and adjourned until Wednesday in Wellesley village. Many false reports have been circulated, even the police having incorrect information until Saturday. For instance, the man who made the discovery of the body was not Leyes, but Charles R. Gerber. This was Thursday morning, his attention being attracted by the smokeless chimney and wide-open doors.

That the crime was committed on Wednesday night is indicated by the fact that Lobinski was seen at the window Wednesday noon. A brother of Chris Gerber had noticed on Thursday that the two rear doors were open, but he did not go in. When Chris was passing next morning, however, he went around to the back of the house, and found the body.

Many rumors are current, suspicions being cast on different persons. Much stress is laid on the reputed movements of two strangers wearing fur coats, and driving a team of horses, passing northward through St. Agatha and stopping at Bamberg Hotel Wednesday night.

Tracks in the snow showed that the men came from the north, and went that way. The position of the tracks make it appear that the team were not tied, giving rise to the belief that one man held the team while the other went into the house. The indications are that the man likely knew Lobinski well enough to induce him to let them in the house.

Large [illegible] deposits of [illegible] were found in the yard near the [illegible] of the wholesale district.

Blood-stained hammer makes it seem probable that the hammer was used as an after thought. The hammer belonged to Lobinski. A blood-marked chair tends to show that one man used it in assaulting Lobinski, while the other crushed in his skull with the hammer. An empty whisky glass was found standing on the window sill. Three loaded shotguns were in their usual places.

A search discovered no money, so that the murderers must have got it all, but there is nothing to show that the old man had over $700, all told, part of that consistsng of personal notes.

Lobinski was a veteran of the Franco-Prussian war, and came to Canada over forty years ago, living in Berlin before settling in Wellesley Township, about twenty-five years ago.

Living all alone since the death of his wife, Lobinski allowed his house to get into a condition of horrible filth. He was known to shoot and eat skunks. The parts of two bodies of shunks were found in the house.

A baffling circumstance is the fact that the body was tied to a post outside. The blood shed inside the house goes to prove that an attack was made in there. The wire used in fastening the murdered man's foot to the post was so tightly twisted that nippers must have been used.

The fact that the message to the provincial police was not sent by wire on Friday prevented Detective Boyd from getting here until Saturday afternoon, thus causing a delay of over 24 hours. This has occasioned very sharp criticism, as has the fact that Coroner Glaister had to come to Berlin to be sworn in, instead of a Berlin coroner being sent up. If this had been done an inquest could have been opened almost a day sooner.

Would Not Kow-Tow.

London, Ont., Jan. 16.—At a meeting of the water and power commissioners Saturday night, Edgar Vancleve was discharged as far as the water board was concerned, and Power Manager Dark asked for his resignation. The trouble arose over authority, neither being willing to work under the other. Vancleve was engaged as head engineer to take charge of all city work. He is still in the employ of the council, which pays him $2,600. The water board was to pay him $2,400. Dark's salary was $2,500. They have been employed by the city but six months. Dark came from Detroit and Vancleve from Niagara Falls.

Winnipeg Has Bad Fire.

Winnipeg, Jan. 16. Winnipeg has had another midnight conflagration which will cost the insurance companies about $40,000, the building destroyed being the Kelly block on Bannatyne avenue east, in the very heart of the wholesale district.

POSTMASTER-GENERAL HAS RETURNED

Hon. Rudolphe Lemieux Arrives at New York After His South African Trip--A Good Market For Canada There

GLAD TO BE HOME

New York, Jan. 16.—Bubbling over with enthusiasm for the future "new South African union," Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux reached New York yesterday and last night started on the last lap of his world circling tour. Captain Hector A. Vrret, Mr. Lemieux's private secretary, accompanied his chief on the mission. Mrs. Lemieux and Mrs. Varret met their husbands at Naples, and the party left last night for Montreal with Dr. Eugene Lemieux, who has been here since Thursday awaiting the arrival of the Celtic.

"South Africa is not Canada, of course, but it is a great country," said Mr. Lemieux to the representative of the Canadian Press, who was the first to reach the deck as the big ship was warped into her dock. "We had a splendid voyage across," he added, "not a ripple and we were far enough out to avoid the fog which detained the Megantic seventeen hours just outside the harbor. I have become quite a sailor, for it took us 17 days from Southampton to Cape Town, while from Durban to Naples it took us just 31 days.

"The chances for trade with South Africa are excellent. If the Canadian manufacturers will only send agents over there, they will find the market the best they could wish for. South Africa is a great ranching and mining country, but so far they have no manufacturers. Maize is grown to a large extent and exported, but Canada could sell them fruits as well as wheat and flour.

"They have everything that could be desired to make a splendid success of their union," continued Mr. Lemieux, "and up to date the union is working fine. The nation, and the new union have been chosen as a new starting point for all. You could not believe in seeing how the Dutch and the English are working together earnestly for the upbuilding of the country that ten years ago they were at one another's throats."

"How does the dual language question affect the union?"

"There is no friction that I could observe," said the Canadian Minister. "Parliament uses both languages; prayers at the opening of each sitting are said in both languages, and everybody seems satisfied. They have no school question like we have in Canada. The various provinces or states have charge of primary education, but, in view of the possible difficulties that might arise out of the application of the Herzog Act, Dr. Jameson and Gen. Botha have agreed on the appointment of a joint committee, which shall take up the educational question for all parts of the country.

"The provinces have less power than ours. Their Legislatures are called provincial councils, and they have a legislative union instead of a confederation. The central Government has the right to revise all money grants made by the councils. They have a wise provision for an amendment to their constitution in ten years if it should prove not to work as well as they hope.

"There are two serious problems ahead of South Africa, however—the negro and the Hindu questions. Natal, for instance, has 125,000 Hindus to 100,000 whites, while the native population is much greater than the Hindu. The Hindus came over to work in the coffee fields, and they did not go back. The question is whether all the provinces shall give the negroes and Asiatics the franchise. Cape Town admits negroes to vote, but the other provinces have not yet decided.

"I was very much interested during my stay in South Africa by visits to the old Dutch and old Hugenot families. These have been there for a long time, and they have splendid farms. I took a special interest in the Hugenots, for there are many of the same people in my own county of Gaspe, and there, too, they are among the solid and prosperous people of the district.

"The Germans and the Portuguese along the east coast vie with the English and a few Americans in promoting business, while there is an immense territory in Rhodesia, rich in gold and silver and other products, which will in a short time be one of the provinces of the new union.

"They have everything to make a success. With the exception of a comparatively small tract, the veldt, which is very hot in the day and cold at night, the climate is fine. The scenery is magnificent. The country about Durban is like the Riviera, while Table Mountain rivals the mountain of Fujiyama in Japan, and, with two races working together in perfect harmony, and with unlimited natural resources, the South African Union seems to me to be destined to become one of the most important parts of the British Empire.

"I must add that, as Canada's representative, I was welcomed with great warmth by all classes as the new dread. His grace the Duke of Connaught was most gracious. He told me that he was disposed to accept the office of Governor-General of Canada and I am glad to hear that it is practically decided that he will come to [illegible]

Mr. Lemieux expressed great satisfaction at hearing that the fisheries conference had resulted in a full understanding, and, while he would not make any statement on reciprocity while the subject was under discussion, he said he would welcome any settlement that was advantageous to both countries.

"I enjoyed my trip very much, and I was charmed with what I saw; but I am delighted to get back home, for, after all, Canada is the finest country on earth."

BLACKHAND TERRORIZES COURT.

Friends of Kidnappers Make Trouble for Magistrate.

New York, Jan. 16.—When Felis Esposito and Vincenzo Nicosa were arraigned before Magistrate Dodd yesterday there were a thousand ugly-looking men, many armed, of their own race, crowding the sidewalks outside the court room. They were friends of Esposito and Nicosa.

They could not get in, because Magistrate Dodd, warned by his last experience in attempting to try the same men, had sent for the reserves of the Miller avenue police station and had prevented any of the lowering, growling crew from entering the court. Even this precaution did not prevent an attack on Detective Santoco in court, of such violence that the case was adjourned.

At the last hearing the crowd got into the court room. The witnesses in the case were trembling in terror and even the detectives of the Italian bureau were nervous. Magistrate Dodd sent for the reserves and had the room cleared. Several knives and a revolver were found in the court room when the last of the crew had been pushed out to the street.

The men are charged with stealing Antonietta Sgambetta, 18 years old, from her home, and keeping her prisoner for several days in a hut.

Detective Santoso took the stand and began giving evidence. Vincenzo Nicosa leaped from the prisoners' chair at the detective's throat. He was tripped and pushed back to his place. With tightly clenched fists he leaned forward and, baring his teeth like a cornered wolf, screamed in Italian at the detective: "You lie, you lie, and I will get you; and if I do not get you, we will!" His struggles to reach the detective became so frenzied that the uproar in court was echoed by the surly crowd outside.

Magistrate Dodd hastily adjourned the case, ordering the men hurried back to prison and had the street cleared.

Want Earlier Elections.

Kingston, Jan. 16.—Ald. Given has raised the question of holding the municipal elections earlier in the year, holding that New Year's is a bad time to get the vote out, and the City Council will take up the matter to-night. The last week of November or the first week of December is suggested. If the council favors it, the Government will be petitioned for the necessary power.

Sermon by CHARLES T. RUSSELL Pastor Brooklyn Tabernacle.

GOD NOT ALONE

"The Beginning of the Creation of God."

Philadelphia, Pa., January 15.—Pastor Russell preached to-day from the text, "In the beginning was the Word (Logos) and the Word (Logos) was with the God and the Word (Logos) was a God. The same was in the beginning with the God. By him were all things made and without him was not anything made that was made" (John i, 1, 2). He said:

A week ago we considered the time when God was alone. To-day let us discuss the first creative act as respects intelligent beings. Long before man was created, or our earth was brought from its chaotic condition, long before angels and cherubim were created, Divine power brought forth a Son on the spirit plane—Jehovah's First-Begotten — glorious, perfect, beautiful, his own image and likeness.

This glorious One is in our text designated the Logos, the Word, the Message, the Expression of God. In the Old Testament he is symbolically referred to as "Wisdom" in the words, "Jehovah possessed me in the beginning of his way, before his works of old. • • • Then I was by him, as one brought up with him, and I was daily his delight, rejoicing always before him" (Proverbs viii, 22-30).

This mighty one, personified as Wisdom, is declared by St. Paul to be "the first-born of all creation" (Colossians i. 15-18). The Psalmist similarly refers to him as Jehovah's "first-born, higher than the kings of earth" (Psalm lxxxix, 27). Jesus thus refers to himself as one who had a prehuman existence, saying, "Before Abraham was, I am" (John viii, 14, 23, 42-58). The glorified, ascended Christ, in Apocalyptic vision declared the same great truth, that he was "the beginning of the creation of God" (Revelation iii. 14). And again he declared, "I am the First and the Last" (Rev. i. 17; ii. 8).

All of these Scriptures fully corroborate the statement of our text that he who subsequently became the world's Redeemer was long before the primary Son of God. He ranked first, not only in seniority, but also in honor, dignity and station, above all other sons of God, not one of whom was like himself—the direct creation of Jehovah. "For all things were made by the Logos, and without him was not one thing made that was made." He was not the creator in the primary sense of the word, but in the secondary sense. He was the active agent of Jehovah in all of his subsequent creative work; thus he was not only the first-born of all creation, but, individually, he was also the last of Jehovah's creation. To this agrees the word of St. Paul, "All things are of the Father and all things are by the Son."

Surely many have failed to appreciate not only the Divine personality of Jehovah, but also the greatness of him who is styled "The Son of God."

There was a time when God's people did not possess the Bible in their own language, and when education to read it was extremely limited, and when nobody possessed such wonderful Bibles (with references and concordances) as are common to-day. It should not surprise us that in that far-off time confusing errors crept into the traditional faith of the Church. The contention of the Jews was that Jesus of Nazareth was an impostor and that his mighty works were done under the influence of the fallen angel, Beelzebub. Should we think it strange that in the heat of discussion some of the followers of Jesus would make extravagant claims for him in their endeavor to oppose the theory that made of Messiah a mere sinful man?

It does not surprise us, therefore, that early in the third century claims were put forward in the name of Christ and his Apostles which neither he nor they ever authorized. The Apostles declared him to be "the Son of God with power" and that he was "holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners" (Hebrews vii, 26). The Master himself declared, "My Father is greater than I." "He is above all"; "he sent me"; "I came to do the will of my Father in heaven and not mine own will"; "I delight to do thy will, oh my God; thy law is written in my heart."

True, he also declared, "I and my Father are one"; but he showed in what this oneness consisted—that it was a oneness of will, of purpose, of work. Because he had fully submitted his will to the Father's will and had made the Father's will his own, therefore, they were one.

The Master again illustrated this oneness when he prayed for his disciples that "they all might be one, even as thou Father and I are one" (John xvii, 11. 21, 22). Evidently the Master did not pray that his disciples should all become one in person, but that they should all become of one mind, of one heart, of one disposition through their loyalty and obedience to the Word and to the spirit of God. And this oneness, he declared, was the kind which subsisted between the Heavenly Father and himself.

Leaving the simplicity of the teachings of Jesus and of the Apostles, some went to the extreme of declaring that Jesus was his own Father; that the terms Father, Son and holy Spirit all applied to one person who manifested himself to mankind in three different way corresponding to these names—one God in three manifestations. Others took a still different view and claimed that the Father Son and holy Spirit were three Gods who operated as one. In proportion as these unscriptural human theories were received, they produced confusion. And when asked how three persons could logically be one person, and how one person could be three persons equal in glory and power, of course no answer could be given. Then the subterfuge was raised, "This is a great mystery which nobody can explain."

It should not surprise us from what we know of the structure of human nature that these extreme views were opposed by others of the opposite extreme, some claiming that Jesus was a mere man; that he was born as are other men; that Joseph was his father, etc. Thus we behold the danger of any variation whatever from the precise teachings of the Word of God.

It should be needless to say to Bible Students that there is nothing in the Bible which declares a trinity of Gods. There is just one passage of Scripture quoted in proof of the Trinity (I. John, v, 7), and it is never quoted by scholars, because all scholars know that it was tampered with, several words having been added in the seventh century which are not found in any New Testament manuscript of earlier date. And those added words make the statement as a whole foolish.

If you will turn in your Bibles to this passage, you may strike out the spurious words as follows in verse seven: "In heaven the Father, the Word and the Holy Ghost, and these three are one"; and in verse eight the words "and there are three that bear witness in earth."

After thus eliminating the spurious additions, after thus removing from the precious ointment this dead fly of falsehood which was inserted for the very purpose of deceiving, and because no Scripture could be found to give color to the doctrine of the trinity—then you will be able to read that portion of the Word of God in its purity and simplicity. Then the "mystery" part will be gone from it forever. It will be in full accord with the entire Bible in declaring, "To us there is one God: the Father; of whom are all things, and one Lord, Jesus Christ, by whom are all things and we by him" (I. Corinthians viii, 6). How absurdly the passage reads in our common version, stating that the Father and the Son and the holy Spirit are bearing witness in heaven that Jesus is the Son of God!

The pure Word of God presents simply and beautifully the fact that the great Creator, the Father of all mercies, is Jehovah God, and that he has an only begotten Son who is yet to be the Saviour or Deliverer of all of Adam's race willing to accept the grace of God provided in him. And there is one holy Spirit, "the spirit of truth," "the spirit of wisdom," "the spirit of a sound mind," the spirit of power, energy, will mind of the Father—which is also the spirit of the Son, and which must be also the spirit, disposition, mind, will of all those who now come unto the Father as sons through the adoption which is in Christ Jesus.

Before the beginning of the creation of God, before the Only Begotten of the Father became the Alpha of Creation, the Father had wonderful purposes in himself respecting all his great plan for the everlasting future. It included this world, and mankind, and the permission of sin, and the penalty, and the restoration to be accomplished by Messiah's Kingdom and the glorious work of eternity in further creations in world after world.

But, as the Master declared, these things the Father had kept in his own power—in his own hand. He divulged them not to the angels, nor even to his dearly beloved "only begotten Son." We have seen how this Divine secret, Divine purpose, was symbolically represented in the scroll in the hands of Jehovah, as pictured in Revelation v. 1. We have seen that this revelation was delivered to the Lamb, the Only Begotten One, after he had been slain—after his consecration at Jordan, and in its fulness after his death at Calvary, when he ascended up on high, glorified at the right hand of the Father's majesty.

But before the Logos was made flesh, before he undertook to be man's Redeemer, the Heavenly Father set before him the glorious prize—the reward that he had promised him that he had a share, and that the exceeding thereof was to be given to one who would prove himself worthy, by demonstrating his loyalty to the Divine will.

We read that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, but we are not to understand from this that he came under Divine commands, the refusal of which would have meant Divine disfavor and his own degradation. On the contrary, we understand the matter clearly when we hearken to the Apostle's statement. He declares that Messiah left the glory which he had with the Father before the world was, and humbled himself to take upon himself man's form and then crucified himself even unto death, all because of the joy that the Father had set before him.

The joy set before the Logos was (1) That thus he might serve the Heavenly Father's gracious purposes.

(2) That he might recover mankind from the state of sin and death into which all were plunged by father Adam's one act of disobedience.

(3) Additionally he was promised the honor and distinction of the Messianic Kingdom by and through which mankind would be blessed and uplifted.

(4) He was promised a special Bride class to be selected from among the redeemed race of men—a class having his own disposition of loyalty to God and to righteousness, and faithful unto death—which like himself, would be exalted in the chief resurrection from the earthly to heavenly condition, far above principalities and powers and every name that is named.

(5) He was promised that his own personal distinction would be to all eternity a participation in the qualities of the divine nature; he would possess not only glory and honor, but also inherit life, deathlessness, immortality.

For these joys, he left his glory, he was made flesh, he sacrificed his earthly life and, being raised from the dead, he entered into his promised joy. Since, he is waiting in expectation for the completion of the Church, his Bride, the members of his Body, assured that then the Father will give him the heathen for an inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession, that he may bind Satan, put down sin and uplift the sinner and bring everlasting order out of earth's confusion by destroying the wilfully wicked.

As all Bible scholars know, the word elohim in the Old Testament Hebrew is of plural form, somewhat like our English word sheep. Thus we read in Genesis, "The elohim (Gods) said, let us make man in our image." This would very properly apply to the Heavenly Father and the Heavenly Son, in full accord with our text. "Without him (the Logos) was not anything made that was made." The word elohim signifies literally, the mighty, the powerful the great. Surely it would be strictly proper to consider the Logos mighty, great, powerful as the active agent of the Almighty One, Jehovah, who is also styled the Mighty Elohim.

This word elohim not only is used in respect to the Heavenly Father and his Heavenly Son, but it is also used in respect to angels as the messengers of God and of Christ, mighty to the doing of the will of God (Psalm vii, 5). "Thou hast made man a little lower than the angels (elohim)." Still further notice that this word elohim is used in respect to men; when Divinely appointed and active as God's agents they were mighty, or elohim. Thus we read of the seventy judges of Israel appointed by Moses, "The master shall bring him unto the judges (elohim)" (Exodus xxi, 6).

We have given a very literal rendering of our text, showing the fine distinction of the Greek original in a way that our English version does not show it. As Bible students we have not in the past been sufficiently critical in our study of God's Word, but now, in Divine providence, it is possible for those even who have practically no knowledge of the Greek and Hebrew to understand the Scripture presentations thoroughly. If any amongst my large congregation are unsuccessful in finding authoritative works that show the interpolations and mistranslations of the Holy Scriptures, I shall be pleased to have them write to me for information.

Our text in the common English version misrepresents the true thought of the original, but as we have rendered it the matter is so simple and clear that a child may understand. Jehovah God is from everlasting to everlasting and had no beginning. The Logos had a beginning—he himself was the beginning. "In the beginning was the Logos and the Logos was a God"—he was a mighty one, the beginning of creation, the first and the last creation of the God, the Almighty One—"of whom, by whom and through whom are all things."

All honor and majesty and worship belong primarily to the great Father of lights and to him Jesus directed the attention of his followers, saying, "After this manner pray ye — Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name." It is always therefore eminently proper in the highest sense of the word that our petitions should ascend to "the Father of Lights, from whom cometh every good and every perfect gift."

It has pleased the Father to so honor his First Begotten Son, and to so reward his faithfulness unto death and to so make him the Head in all things over the Church which is his Body, that it is eminently proper that, in the language of the Master, "All men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father" (John v, 23). They should not honor the Son instead of the Father, however, for the latter declares, "My glory will I not give to another." The exalted Christ is to be honored, yea, worshiped, because the Father has highly exalted him and given him a name above every other name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow and every tongue confess to the glory of God the Father (Philippians ii. 8-11).

Moreover, there is a special reason why all who recognize Jesus as the world's Redeemer should recognize the Father in their thoughts and in their prayers. This is because, by Divine appointment, he is the Church's Advocate with the Father—the One through whom we are acceptable to God even to the Father. How could we, therefore, ignore our Advocate, our Mediator, our Intercessor?

And with the world in the future, throughout Messiah's reign, this will be equally proper, because then he will be equally proper, because then he will be the world's Mediator, standing between God and men, until by his Mediatorial Kingdom he shall have lifted mankind from sin and degradation and death, back to actual justification and harmony with God.

Cicero on Wit.

There are witty sayings which carry a concealed suspicion of ridicule, of which sort is that of the Sicilian who, when a friend of his made lamentation to him saying that his wife had hanged herself upon a fig tree, said, "I beseech you give me some shoots of that tree that I may plant them." Of the same sort is what Crassus said to a certain bad orator who, when he imagined that he had excited compassion at the close of a speech, asked our friend here after he had sat down whether he appeared to have raised pity in the audience. "Very great pity," replied Crassus, "for I believe that there is no one here so hard hearted but that your speech seemed pitiable to him."—Cicero's Oratory.

Ancient Instruments.

The forceps, the probe and the speculum are all considered instruments of modern invention, but specimens of them were found in the ruins of Pompeii.

Winter Fodder In Kashmir.

In Kashmir they have a novel method of putting fodder up for winter use. The country lies in a valley among the Himalayas. The chief industry of the people consists in raising fine wool and in making this into fabrics which have carried the name of the country all over the world. As in winter snow lies some five or six yards deep, supplies of hay are hung among the branches of trees, where they are easily reached by the flocks of sheep.

Addison's Essays.

Addison wrote his essays in the Spectator to be read at the tea tables of the upper classes and attempted by this means to improve the condition of society.

Mexican Ruins.

Mexico has many ancient ruins, particularly in the states of Oaxaca, Chiapas, Yucatan and Morelia. Those of Mitla, in Oaxaca; Palenqua, in Chiapas; Uxmal, in Yucatan, and Xochimilco, in Morelia, are among the most famous and interesting. Some of them represent whole cities and are supposed to be from 2,000 to 3,000 years old. They all show the most elaborate carvings which closely resemble the Egyptian hieroglyphics.

Norway.

Although Norway is a maritime nation and has a larger percentage of its inhabitants engaged in seafaring than any other country, agriculture is its leading industry.

The Trouble.

"So she doesn't return your affection, eh? Well, I shouldn't get mad about that. What's the use of bothering about a girl?" said Watkins.

When You Feel Cross
DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

And Are Easily Worried and Irritated, Chances Are That the Liver is Not Right and You Need

Life is too short to be cross and grouchy. You not only make yourself miserable, but also those about you.

When healthy and active the liver filters the poisonous bile from the blood and passes it into the intestines where it aids the process of digestion and keeps the bowels regular.

But when the liver balks the whole system becomes clogged with a mass of fermenting food, which gives rise to gas on the stomach, belching of wind, pains about the heart, and a multitude of annoying symptoms which accompany indigestion and constipation.

There is nothing in the world which will more promptly afford you relief than Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills. This statement is true. A trial will convince you. This medicine acts definitely and directly on the liver and bowels and cleanses the whole digestive and excretory system.

Mr. Theo. Belard, Lac aux Sables, Portneuf county, Que., writes:—"I have found Dr Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills the best treatment obtainable for indigestion and impure blood. They cured me of indigestion, from which I suffered for four years.

"This certificate is given without solicitation, so that others may not waste their money buying medicine of no value when they can get Dr Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills, which I am convinced are the best."

Dr A. W. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills, one pill a dose, 25 cents a box, all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

Sinking Spells Every Few Days

"At the time I began taking Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy I was having sinking spells every few days. My hands and feet would get cold; I could scarcely breathe, and could feel myself gradually sinking away until I would be unconscious. Those about me could not tell there was life in me. After these spells I would be very weak and nervous, sleepless and without appetite; had neuralgia in my head and heart. After taking the remedy a short time all this disappeared and in a few weeks all the heart trouble was gone."

CHRISTMAS AND ROYALTY

King and Queen to Spend Holidays at Sandringham Castle

The King and Queen have deferred to the wish of Queen Alexandra, and the Royal family will consequently spend Christmas once more at Sandringham, as has been their invariable custom for several years past. It was King George's first intention to pass the holidays at Windsor Castle, as was usually done in the reign of Queen Victoria, and certain arrangements were made to this end. Queen Alexandra, however, greatly desired to have her children and grand-children around her once more, and this is now to be done. Neither the King nor the Queen of Norway will be able to remain in England over the holidays, and will leave Appleton Hall a few days before Christmas, while the Princess Royal and the Duke of Fife and their daughters will then be in Egypt, so that the family party will only be a small one. Owing to the mourning for the late King, the holidays at Sandringham will be shorn of much of their usual festive character, but, by desire of Queen Alexandra, the huge Christmas tree for the little ones of the party will be erected in the ballroom as usual, and there will be the customary doles of coal, meat, etc., to the tenantry. King George will spend several of his mornings shooting over the Sandringham preserves, and will be joined in these excursions by the gentlemen of his Household. There will be nothing in the way of a house party at Sandringham until the late autumn of next year, when the Kaiser may pay the place a private visit.

AMBASSADOR'S BONES FOUND

Skeleton Believed to be That of Murdered Envoy Brought to Light in German Wood

A skeleton found in a wood near the village of Quitzow, Germany, may turn out to be that of Lord Bathurst, the English Ambassador at Vienna, who disappeared on the 25th of November, 1809, as he was returning to England.

The Ambassador's mysterious disappearance caused great excitement throughout Europe. Early in the spring of 1809, Lord Bathurst had been sent on a secret mission to the Vienna Court, and at the conclusion of the peace meeting at Schonbrum, on the 15th of October of the same year, he received orders to return home. He started on the journey, and travelled from Berlin under the name of Koch, a merchant. On November 25 he arrived in Perleberg. Here he entered an hotel beside the posting station. In the evening, when the journey should have been resumed, Lord Bathurst was missing. His overcoat was found later on a heap of wood in the cellar of the posting station, and his leggings in a wood near the village of Quitzow.

There was a secret military inquiry into Lord Bathurst's disappearance. And a rumor was circulated that he had been murdered by the order of Napoleon. This rumor was credited in some quarters, as at the time, the enmity against France in England had reached its highest stage.

When the inquiry into the envoy's disappearance came to naught, prominent criminologists and historians occupied themselves with the case without, however, arriving at any conclusion.

Now, near the same spot where Lord Bathurst's leggings were found, a man's skeleton has been discovered. It is believed to be that of the English Ambassador.

THE LARGEST LOAF

Baked Recently in Texas—Weighed 140 Pounds—12 Feet Long

The largest loaf of bread in the world was baked the other day by Andrew Newberg, of Austin, Texas. This gigantic mass of the Staff of Life weighed 140 pounds, and was two feet high, three feet wide, and twelve feet, long.

After the ingredients were mixed, the baking process consumed more than an hour, a special oven being used for the purpose.

The loaf was sent to a barbecue at Moulton, where it was cut and distributed to a large crowd. Mr. Newberg accompanied the bread to its destination to see that it was safely carried.

By making this loaf, Mr. Newberg breaks his own record for the largest loaf of bread in the world, which was one weighing a hundred pounds, sent to the Louisana Exhibition in 1904.

DESIGNS FOR NEW COINS

A Proclamation by the King determining the new designs for gold and bronze coins has been published in the "Gazette." The effigy of the reigning monarch will appear on the obverse impression, and, except that the inscription is to read, "Georgius v. Dei Gra: Britt: Omn: Rex Fid: Def: Ind: Imp:" there will be no change on the reverse. That of the gold coins is to contain "the image of St. George armed, sitting on horseback, attacking the dragon with a sword, and a broken spear upon the ground, and the date of the year," with a graining upon the edge. The bronze coins, with King George's head on the obverse, will present on the reverse the familiar impression of "the figure of Britannia seated on a rock surrounded by the sea, her right hand holding a shield which heats against the rock, while in her left hand she grasps a trident." It will be noticed that no mention is made of restoring the lighthouse. As at present, the bronze coins will have their value—penny, halfpenny, farthing—plainly stated. The Proclamation is to come into force on January 1 next.

THE DIRGIBLE FOR THE NAVY

An Accident Has Occurred to Delay the Launching of the Mysterious Craft

Few undertakings have been responsible rigid dirigible balloon that is being built at Barrow for the Navy. Early in the year it figured in the War Secretary's statement in the House of Commons as evidence of the Army Council's attentiveness to the subject of aerial navigation. At frequent intervals it has been described in the newspapers, usually in the redundant terms of appreciation, which, in connection with aeronautical matters, the public appear to love. Thus, the size, speed, cost, armament and general utility of the new vessel, were all tremendous; it was being built under an armed guard, its secrets evidently being of the highest import, and so on, for the past ten months.

It now appears certain that the launching will not take place this year; that there has been an accident by which part of the vessel has been destroyed.

TO DEVELOP INTELLIGENCE

A New Left-Handed Movement Has Been Started

A movement has been started in Germany for the cultivation of ambidexterity. The idea is that developing the power to use both hands equally well means developing the intelligence in general and the memory in particular. It is said to have been scientifically ascertained that while right-handed people have the organ of speech on the left side of the brain, and vice versa, people who are ambidexterous have two language centres, one in each lobe of the brain. The infant begins life with two speech centres, but as the right hand is generally trained, and the left neglected, the right speech centre gradually grows torpid and useless. The extraordinary claim is now made that by the cultivation of the left hand the capacity of the right speech centre of the brain can be revived, and to that extent broaden the intelligence as ambidexterity increases the use of the human being's hand. Instances are quoted by supporters of the movement in which practising the left hand has rescued a power of speech until then paralysed. One patient in question was stricken by paralysis of the left organ of speech, and with it paralysis of the right hand. The doctors started teaching the patient to write with the left hand, with the astonishing result that in a short time the power of speech was awakened in the hitherto torpid organ of speech. An even more astonishing case was that of a boy, who, at the age of 13, lost his left hand, and soon learned to do fairly well with an artificial member. At the age of 30 he suffered a stroke of paralysis, which robbed him of the power of speech, but by means of a small ring with a pen attached to it, fixed to the artificial limb, he could practise writing, and thus not only recovered power over his original speech, but over French and Russian, which he had forgotten. As a matter of fact, ambidexterity is necessary in several professions and occupations, of which surgery and piano-playing may be given as examples.

A WELL-SUPPLIED PULPIT

There are various morals to this story of Doctor Clifford, the eminent English clergyman. One is that it is wise for public speakers not to put off their appearance at the meetings they are to address till the last moment. A writer in Woman's Life tells the story.

Doctor Clifford was once conducting a series of services in Birmingham. Arriving a few minutes before the commencement, the doctor was refused admission by the policeman at the door.

"I want to go in," said Doctor Clifford.

"Are you a seat-holder?"

"No, I am not."

"Then you can't go in."

"I think," remarked the famous passive resister, "that there will be room for me in the pulpit."

"I am not so sure of it," retorted the officer.

"But I am Doctor Clifford, and I am due to preach in another minute and a half."

"Oh, are you?" said the incredulous policeman. "I have let in two Doctor Cliffords already."

GOOD CREDENTIALS

Employer—"What do you mean by that?"
Applicant—"They took three months off my sentence!"

HOW TOMMY ESCAPED

At breakfast restless little Tommy began to play with the cruet-stand. His father told him not to do so. He persisted, and at last upset it and spilt the pepper on the tablecloth. His father said: "Now, Tommy, you were disobedient and upset the pepper castor, and I really ought to make the punishment fit the crime in putting some of the pepper on your tongue." Tommy looked like a dutch and asked: "Please, dad, if I upset the sugar-bowl?"

Artist—"I am really flattered to see you like my picture and want to buy it, but it's not quite finished."
Neighbor—"It don't matter. I just want to repair a broken window."

MORE LIKE IRISH

"Noo, my gude bairns," said a Scotch schoolmaster to his class, "there's just another instance 'o the uncertainty o' human life; ane o' your ane schulemates—a fine wee bit lassie—went to bed bed hale and weel at night, and rose a corpse in the morning."

A MATTER OF OPINION

At a recent wild beast show held in a town in the north of Scotland, two sons of the soil had occasion to visit the caravan containing the monkeys. One of them was overheard saying:

"Man Wull, thae lads are richt like human beings."

The other, in reply to his mate, said, with seriousness stamped all over his countenance:

"Awa and no haver, Jock; they're nae mair like human beings than I am."

UP TO DATE

"You claim to be a sailor," sniffed the doubtful housewife.

"Yes, mum," hastened the tar, as he took in a reef in his trousers.

"But you don't make use of that nautical expression, 'Shiver my timbers.'"

"Oh, no, mum; I say, 'Shiver my gasbag' or 'Shiver my wings.' I'm an airship sailor, mum."

KNOWS BETTER NOW

"That's right," assented Mr. Henry Peck. "Now, when my wife used to say that she could have done better than to marry me I used to argue the question."

HOW SHE SAVES

Mrs. Oldwed: "Warmed over dishes reduce expense.'

Mrs. Newsome: "I know; I always buy twice as much porterhouse as we can eat so we can have hash next day."

Wife—"Is there any difference between a fort and a fortress?"

Husband—"Well, I suppose that the fortress, being feminine, is harder to silence!"

NOT SO SLOW

A Scotch student, supposed to be deficient in judgment, was asked by a professor, in the course of his examination, how he would discover a fool.

"By the questions he would ask," was the prompt and highly suggestive reply.

Had Severe Pains In His Back.

Could Hardly Work.

Mr. Alfred E. Davis, Gorrie, Ont. writes:—"For some years I suffered from severe pains in my back and could hardly work at all, and when I stooped down to pick up anything felt as if my back must break. I was advised to try Doan's Kidney Pills, and after taking two boxes I was entirely cured, and feel that I cannot speak too highly in their favor.

"This was nearly four years ago and I still remain cured."

Those who have never been troubled with kidney trouble do not know the suffering and misery which those afflicted undergo.

Weak, lame or aching back comes from the kidneys, and when the kidneys get out of order the whole system becomes deranged.

They help the kidneys to flush off the acrid and poisonous impurities which have collected, thus clearing out the kidneys, bladder and urinary passages.

THE FEUD MAN AND THE FEUD WOMAN

AN Interview with "Cap" Hatfield in His Mountain Eyrie and an Appreciation of His Helpmeet. Who Has Shared Stolidly His Perils and Hardships, a Salient Type of the "Mountain Woman"

ELLISON HATFIELD.

CHARLES GILLISPIE.

IF you chance to be travelling through Virginia on a local train running down from Columbus to Norfolk you will strike a little corner in the mountains where three States come together. The brakeman will point it out to you and name the States—Virginia, West Virginia and Kentucky. A moment later he will call the station Panther, using his most official voice, although Panther is not much of a town—a few wooden houses built half up the hillside, the railroad at the bottom and hills crowding all around.

The hills are so close it is impossible to get a view of the sky from the car window. One must get out on the station platform, tip one's head back and look straight up. There is the sky, uninteresting enough. Off at one end of the platform you will find the figure of a man sitting on a horse. Raw boned, both of them lean, and long and lank. The horse looks half starved and altogether ugly; the man, all of that, is at the same time tired and forlorn.

The station agent, if he has time in the excitement of the train's arrival, will answer your query with a laconic "Cap Hatfield; watch out for him!"

Any one not knowing who Cap Hatfield is would laugh at the idea of watching out for this half-fed man. He wears a blue homespun shirt, old fashioned pull boots that reach to the knee and across his lap lies a musket of '63. He might be a civil war figure left behind by the armies that swept Virginia from the mountains to the sea. But he is far from that. The barrel of his gun is tied to the butt with pieces of dirty twine, yet the gun can shoot, and it has killed men.

Cap Hatfield is the last remnant of the Hatfield-McCoy feud, which was in its turn one of the last of those savage family wars which waged back and forth across the border line between the three States—Virginia, West Virginia and Kentucky.

The Hatfield-McCoy feud is at an end because the McCoys are all dead, except one who ran away to Texas and has not been heard from since. In the meantime Cap Hatfield would take anything he really wanted, from a chew of tobacco to a ton of steel rail. He would kill any one who got in his way as easily as he would shoot a turkey, and he is the most notorious moonshiner among the mountain whites. Altogether he is about as lawless as a rattlesnake in August, which in those mountains is saying a good deal.

If you want to meet Cap Hatfield there is just one man to introduce you; if you want to call at his mountain home there is just one man to take you there. He is James Baldwin, one time police captain, now railroad detective, of Roanoke, Va. Captain Baldwin expects to die with his boots on; the when and where has no particular interest for him. You might go with him as we went in the last warm days of October—by horses and over mountain roads. And it is worth while just to see these two fighters together, both so clearly the spirit of feudal days when all men lived to fight.

Cap Hatfield is afraid of the tall, white haired man from Roanoke. Baldwin has rare guts and a clear head. He is the only man who ever caught the mountaineer and carried him in to jail. Cap Hatfield admires a man who can do that, and so far as it is in him to be friends with any one he is friends with this man of the law.

"There are both State and government warrants out for Cap Hatfield's arrest and many a deputy in the United States service has tried to get a hand on him. Some years ago he moved from Pike county, Kentucky, where he was born and raised, and where he spent his time killing McCoys and distilling whisker contrary to the law. It was a bit dangerous to live at Pikeville under the eyes of the judges and the cases of the county jail. So he moved himself, his "hoss," his wife and his children a few miles east into Buchanan county, Virginia, where the hills are almost unpeopled and the trail is hard to find. He had been over there many a time when the law of Kentucky was after him, but this time he went to stay. He built his cabin on the top of a mountain which is heavily wooded and thick with undergrowth.

The mountaineer had plenty of children, nine of them in all, but some died; Cap scarcely knows how many there are alive now. Even so there are enough of them to guard that hill and keep busybodies away. There is just one trail up the mountains, in the first place, and a stranger may try that way if he dares. Ping! will come the first bullet snapping through the trees. The second will come nearer, and the third. If any one is foolish enough to pursue the journey, will come straight home. There will be no other sign of mountain, the Hatfields always fight under cover. They might shoot you full of holes, and you would have nothing to prove it was they. If you go with Captain Baldwin you put your faith in him. The revolver in your hip pocket might better be candy or chewing gum for the children.

Up the Mountain Trail.

Captain Baldwin, of Roanoke, and Cap Hatfield, of Buchanan county, have an agreement of peace. Until within a few years the Hatfields were always playing jokes on the railroad, pulling up the rails or taking the stove from some station house along the way. Sometimes they healed the stove, but often they were merely out for a good time. Just was the moonshine idea of fun. Captain Baldwin followed their trail until even the "old man" got nervous. So it happened that when he was "in all" for some such offence he submitted to an agreement. He promised [illegible] and property not to make another [illegible] of Cap Hatfield. A ride from Roanoke [illegible] up. The woman shooed roughly. "I'm afeared it ain't what yer used to here," she said.

"Oh, it's great fun," we answered, trying to believe it ourselves.

"Tain't like what you come from, I reckon?" she questioned wistfully.

"Well, you see, we live in the town," apologized, and then, to change the subject, "Do the children go to school?"

She folded her arms and I saw that had hurt her, although she answered bravely enough, "Gawd, no; they ain't no education worth mountin up here. I reckon you ben eddicated?"

"I've been to school," I admitted.

"Kin you write good?" she asked eagerly. Then, as I nodded my head, "I wanted my girls to hev eddication, but I cayn't git it nohow. There a growin' up here like the hawgs. There ain't nothin' I kin do. Seems livin' ain't no partikler fun," she added, shaking her head.

"You must have had a hard time," I said, as kindly as possible.

"There's be'n trouble a-plenty," she answered, with a hard note in her voice. "There's allus ben trouble with him. Men folks is hard to get on with."

"Weren't you afraid, all alone so much?" for it was plain there had been no chivalry in her life.

She held her head high. "Law, no. Ain't nothin' to be afeard'n of folks dies they dies, and that's all there is on it. I lost plenty of folks, too, with all this trouble of ourn, an' of they goes, why they goes; you can't help it nohow."

And with this piece of philosophy she settled back into a stolid silence which gave one again the impression of years spent waiting. It may have been those years of waiting and watching, and never knowing, which gave to the mountain women a courage their men have not. The men fight from cover and run, they never choose to meet the enemy face to face. But the women have braved any danger to help their "folks." In the history of the Hatfield-McCoy feud there are plenty of women who went to fight and went unarmed.

Early in the history of the feud there appears the mother of Randolph McCoy, thirteen years old, who was captured by the Hatfields. The boy was held a prisoner in a lonely cabin, and you may believe, well guarded. But his mother went in the middle of the night, tramping for miles over the mountains to reach her boy. On her knees she begged Bad Anse Hatfield, whose name was well earned, to kill her and spare the boy. It rather spoils the story of the feuds to know that he literally kicked her out of the cabin door. On another occasion some brave McCoy women notified their chieftain that trouble was afoot. And as a result the trouble came to them, for the Hatfields rode up to their cabin in the night, killed their men, dragged them out of doors and horsewhipped them until their ribs were broken.

And another time when the cabin of "Old Randy" McCoy was surrounded by the enemy in the night, it was Mrs. McCoy who opened the cabin door and walked out into the mob to reach her girls who had been sleeping in a cabin near at hand. One of the Hatfields, not thinking her worth shooting, struck her with the butt of his gun. She fell to the ground, badly hurt, but dragged herself along on hands and knees, still bent on saving her children, and Cap Hatfield, or one of his tribe, kicked her and killed her.

A Typical Mountain Woman.

warrants in reserve with the threat of Kentucky justice behind them all, agreed not to arrest the "old man." This contract has held for six years or more, and when Captain Baldwin goes to visit the Hatfields nowadays it is to give a word of warning or a bit of advice, as that may fall due.

In the last warm days of October the mountains are beautiful. Every roadway and open space is covered with a thick bed of yellow leaves, the pines stand in patches of dark green against the mountain sides and the view of the valleys is softened with blue haze. The horses climb up narrow trails regardless of the tree branches that slap in your face. It is a hard ride of some twenty odd miles from the railroad; nature is gracious and inviting, but after the first turn from the road the trail does not assist the traveller upon his way.

We, who had never made the journey, were at first garrulous; we laughed and made foolish puns. But as the mountains closed around us, and we came near to the firing line, the stillness made itself felt above our din. Captain Baldwin fell into the habit of his work and was quiet, pointing out an occasional bird [illegible] flew up on our passing. Once it was a buzzard under our very noses, and again it was a wild turkey far off. The trail dwindled away until it was just a faint break in the trees; we climbed over rocks and under low tree branches. We were scratched and mauled and our horses were panting when we came to the last turn upward, and Captain Baldwin said:—"Here we are."

No one wanted to talk after that, although Captain Baldwin had laughed at the idea of danger, telling us there was nothing to fear. We were, perhaps, not afraid, but the idea of a bullet whizzing through the underbrush was not reassuring. And who could tell what mistake of judgment the "brats," as Captain Hatfield calls them, might make? They might see us and not our leader; they might aim high and aim low; there were a dozen nights that made us pull our necks down into our collars and sit perfectly still as we rode. It is a paralyzing thought that you are riding under the gun eye of the enemy, even though the enemy be nothing more than three half grown boys.

Long before we came out into the open we could hear the yapping of dogs, and once the scuffle of leaves near at hand in the undergrowth frightened at least one of us dumb. Captain Baldwin rode on silent and unmindful, although he knew the "brats" were near and watching every step of our way. When we rode into the clearing near the cabin there they stood armed and ready. And Cap Hatfield, leaning against the cabin, a motionless, lazy figure, held his old fashioned flintlock across one arm ready for work if trouble came.

Our host did not greet us and we got down from our horses as best we could, fell off, one of us did, from sheer numbness and fear. When Captain Baldwin motioned to one of the boys to take our bridles he did it hesitatingly and daring to do so.

Smiling, Captain Baldwin went forward with a cheerful "How do you do?"

"Howdy," answered the mountaineer staring at us. The captain nodded our way [illegible]. "Women folks home?" he asked. "They ain't nothin' around."

Immediately the [illegible] door opened and another frightened face appeared. Seeing [illegible] friendliness as we [illegible] Hatfield [illegible] outside.

The woman looked at us [illegible] "It's all right. We didn't come [illegible] These fellows [illegible] And [illegible] Baldwin again nodded [illegible] yet the trouble of years can dissolve into a feeling and pass between people until each person understands. It was so in this case—the suffering of her lonely, hunted life was as keen to me as if she had told it word for word. We each looked toward the trail, and I for the first time saw the opening in the trees far below where the trail was revealed. How many times her eyes had looked toward that trail I could but partly guess. How many times she had watched for enemies and seen her boys coming home hurt from a fight! How many times her old man had gone that way and she had waited, wondering if he would ever come back! How many times her eyes had followed the trail, longing to go out into the world, and how much of the world's misery and bitterness must have dragged up that way to lodge at her door!

She drew her breath with a hard, quick sound—and we knew. She had scarcely spoken a word, and yet had told her story as she had not words to tell it. I turned toward her, eager to speak my sympathy, but her drawn, white face made that impossible. She was wringing her hands nervously in her apron. For a moment she wavered, then stepped back from the door with a quick "Min!"

"BATEESE" IN WINTER

LIFE IN THE LUMBER CAMPS APPEALS TO THE HABITANT.

The French-Canadian Peasant Is a Personality Unequalled the World Over, and His Happy-go-Lucky Nature Is Never so Well Suited as In the Winter Camp—It Means Money—Never Feels the Cold.

What particular quality there is connected with the Canadian Habitant which compels the admiration of every man, woman and child who comes into contact with this joyous spirit of the great northern forest is hard to explain. He is the soul of good nature, says one. He is happiness personified, a combination of rough strength and tenderness, a child-like being for whom the dawning of each day opens up a new world of song and adventure, declare others. Somehow one wishes it were possible to combine all these characteristics into one word which alone would picture the nature of this most likeable being about whom some of the sweetest songs in the world are sung and some of the most thrilling stories told.

In the valleys of Quebec all through the golden summer the Habitants live with their wives and children and, for all that a stranger might know, are but simple farmers. Always jovial and deeply interested in their home life and families, to all appearances Jean and Pierre and all the rest of them are quite contented with their simple country existence. But visit these little isolated farms at the time of the year when the days are shortening and th first snow is falling and inquire for your old summer time friends. "Gone," the wives and little Habitant youngsters will tell you, smiling at your ignorance. "Everyone gone to the lumber camps." Not a man who can swing an axe or drive a team would miss his winter season in the big timber. For six long months they live in the brooding silence and eerie whiteness of the great Canadian forest. By instinct, by training, they love the woods; they love the work, and, above all, they love the joyous, gregarious life of the camps, where 50 or 60 men are housed under one roof. The Habitant is by no means the reserved man which his lonely life on an isolated farm might be supposed to make him. On the contrary, he is a particularly convivial person, and his social instinct is ministered to by the life in the crowded camp; where the hard work in the bitter cold is made merry by shout and song, and where the long evenings are passed in the telling of tales and the singing of old Canadian roundelays as the men lounge in their bunks, or gather in groups about the roaring box-stove.

"Such a thing as a cold is absolutely unknown to the Quebec lumbermen," writes Birge Harrison, who spent some time a winter or two ago in the Habitant camps, "which goes far to prove the theory that colds have nothing whatever to do with cold. These men dress no more heavily than we do in the latitude of New York; often go bare handed, and perform their ablutions the snow, which freezes on one surface while it is melting on another. Personal cleanliness is not their strong point, however. They are washed so clean inside by the eternal bath of oxygen in which they live that they have a fine scorn for the condition of their external man. Many of them do not undress during the entire winter. Personally I was unable to attain to this happy disregard for physical cleanliness—again, perhaps, because I did not remain long enough in camp. After sleeping in my clothes for a week I began to pine consumedly for a bath.

"Fat pork is the one article of food in which the Habitants put greatest faith. Venison—which it may be said grows all 'round them—they regard as we regard bread, useful to fill in the chinks.

"In addition to pork the diet consists of pea soup (which is served by the quart), bread, apple sauce made of dried apples, and a rich molasses gingerbread. I certainly saw nothing else on the table during my stay; and I can bear witness that this menu, which under the ordinary conditions of civilized life would have wrecked my digestion in three days' time, proved a most satisfying and wholesome diet out here in the woods. The men seemed to crave no change of food, and they were a wonderfully rugged and sturdy lot.

"For the Habitant the cold is a negligable quantity—unless, indeed, the "white" whisky at some wedding or christening has been served with too free a hand; for alcohol is more deadly in high latitudes than even in the tropics. But alcohol is never allowed in the camps.

"There is one curious contradiction in the Habitant's attitude towards his climatic surroundings. If he flouts the cold out of doors, he will bask willingly in a temperature of 90 degrees inside. He will roast all night and be none the worse for it, apparently, in the morning.

"When in early May, the sudden Canadian spring comes to melt the vast accumulation of snow on the surrounding hills, these silent rivers are transformed into rushing floods and the logs thus set free start on their long journey to mills on the shores of the St. Lawrence, 40 or 50 miles away. This 'drive'—as it is called—[illegible] wonderful vitality and endurance of the Habitants. For two or three weeks they work all day submerged to their armpits in icy water; battling with the interminable processions of floating logs, shoving, coaxing, easing; ever watchful to prevent the dreaded 'jam,' which would tie up the whole harvest for a year. Then they lie down in their wet clothing to snatch a few hours' sleep, while another gang continues on during the night, for there must be no cessation of vigilance until the whole vast flotilla is floated safely down to the mill.

Leading the Leader.

A very small boy was trying to lead a big St. Bernard dog up the road.

"Where are you going to take the dog, my little man?" inquired a passerby.

"I—I'm going to see where—where he wants to go first," was the breathless reply.—Argonaut.

I am writing to tell you I have been a victim to Rheumatism for several years, and have been treated by seven doctors without finding any permanent relief until I got Father Morriscy's medicine. It has cured me so I am able to do my work and find I am as well as ever in my life.

Yours truly,
JOHN CRAWFORD.

Rheumatism cannot exist when the kidneys are in perfect working order for then they take out of the blood all the Uric Acid, which alone causes the Rheumatism.

Father Morriscy's "No. 7" Tablets

act directly on the kidneys, toning them up and helping them to clear the blood of the Uric Acid. If the Rheumatism is of long standing it may take some time to clear out all the poison, but almost from the first "No. 7" Tablets relieve the pain, and if used faithfully they rarely fail to cure.

Even if other remedies have done you no good, do not give up till you have tried Father Morriscy's "No. 7" Tablets.

FAMOUS NOVELISTS.

What Some of Them Did Before They Took to Writing.

Among those novelists who studied law we have Fielding, Scott, Charles Reade, Wilkie Collins, Blackmore, Washington Irving, George Meredith, Robert Grant, Henry James, Anthony Hope, Rider Haggard and Owen Wister. Journalism, which Mr. Kipling once defined as the one legitimate branch of the profession, is represented by Dickens, David Christie Murray, William Black, J. M. Barrie, Marion Crawford, George W. Cable, Stephen Crane, George Barr McCutcheon, Frank Norris, Richard Harding Davis and David Graham Phillips. The navy and merchant marine have given us Smollet, Captain Marryat, Fenimore Cooper, Clark Russell, Joseph Conrad and Morgan Robertson. Artists and architects include Thackeray, Du Maurier, Hopkinson Smith, Robert Chambers, Thomas Hardy and William J. Locke. Medicine and theology are not so well represented. Under the former head we recall for the moment only Smollett (naval surgeon), Holmes, S. Weir Mitchell and Sir Arthur Conan Doyle; under the latter, Sterne, Charles Kingsley, Henry van Dyke, Edward Everett Hale, Ian Maclaren, Ralph Connor and Thomas Dixon. College professors who have either given up their chairs to become novelists or have found time for occasional novels in the midst of their other duties are Sir Walter Besant, Robert Herrick and Brander Matthews.—Bookman.

A BLOOD TAX.

Payment by a French Town to Spain For an Ancient Crime.

Seven hundred years ago some shepherds of the valley of Roncal, in Navarre, were murdered by shepherds of the valley of Bareton, in Bearn, the crime taking place on the high pasture lands of Arlas, in the Pyrenees. It would have been difficult to bring the murderers individually to justice, and the Spaniards were preparing to make war upon the valley from which the French murderers had come when the French villages proposed that peace be maintained at the price of a yearly tax or tribute, to endure for all time, and this proposition was accepted.

The payment of this blood tax—originally three white mares, but later three cows of a particular breed and color—has been made ever since, the custom (it is nothing more) having survived even the years in which both France and have engaged and the storm of the French revolution.

Yearly the representative men of the two valleys meet on the frontier at a certain stone remote from any town and go through the ceremony of presenting and receiving the cattle. The order of procedure, which is elaborate and impressive, is fixed by a document bearing the date 1375, though the tax was paid a hundred years prior to that time. The records of each yearly meeting and payment are duly attested and deposited in the archives of the Roncalais.—New York Tribune.

The Sanity of Paris.

The French live within their means and by a sense of economy wholly unknown to us manage to save and retire to enjoy whatever fortune has stored up for them, says F. Berkeley Smith in Success Magazine. To them France is sufficient. They voyage rarely and gamble less. The spendthrift or the man who plunges on the bourse, the races and the gaming table is regarded by the masses in the light of a rogue and a fool. The Parisians work hard enough for their leisure, but they never eliminate it nor allow their work to encroach upon their traditional daily vacations, as luncheon, the aperitif hour, dinner and fete days. They work, not to amass millions and die in harness, but to save enough to give their daughter her dot, without which she may never marry; start their son in his chosen trade and have enough income left to retire before they are too old to enjoy their freedom.

Old and Modern Customs.

Palm Sunday in certain places is called "Fig Sunday" from the custom of eating figs on this day, as snapdragons on Christmas eve, plum pudding on Christmas day, oranges and barley sugar on St. Valentine's eve, pancakes on Shrove Tuesday, salt codfish on Ash Wednesday, frumenty on "Mothering Sunday" (mid-Lent), cross buns on Good Friday, gooseberry tart on Whitsunday, goose on Michaelmas day, nuts on Allhallows, and so on.—New York American.

Suffered for Years From Constipation and Sick Headache.

Headache seems habitual with many people; indeed, some are seldom, if ever, free from it, suffering continually, and wondering why they can get no relief. The most frequent of all are bilious or sick headaches, and are caused by some derangement of the stomach or bowels, or both.

Burdock Blood Bitters regulates the digestive and biliary organs, removes acidity of the stomach, improves digestion, regulates the constipated bowels, and promotes a perfect circulation of pure blood to all portions of the body.

Mrs. C. Meadows, Clarksburg, Ont., writes: "For years I was troubled with sick headache and dizziness, and was also constipated. I was advised to try Burdock Blood Bitters. I only took three bottles of the medicine, and now feel like a new person as I am completely cured. I can truthfully testify that B.B.B. is the best medicine I have ever used."

Burdock Blood Bitters, has, during the last 35 years, built up an unrivalled reputation as a cure for all troubles arising from a constipated condition of the bowels.

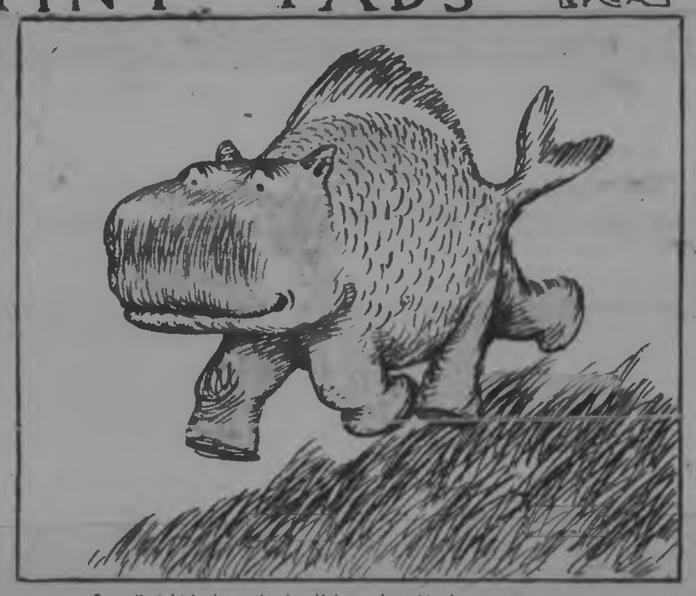
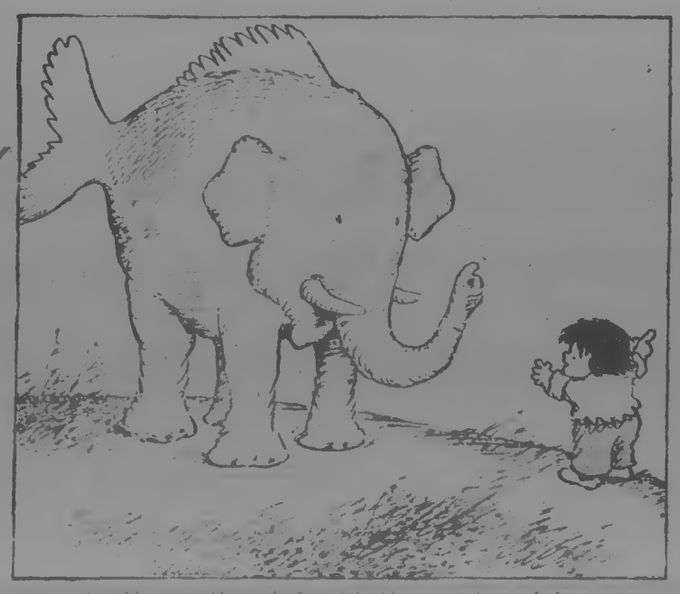
THE TERRORS OF THE TINY TADS

1.—The moon is shining brightly and the night is calm and still,
When all at once there comes a sound of screeches loud and shrill.

2.—"What is it?" asks the Tiny Tad. "My heart is full of dread!
"What is that awful screeching and that heavy sounding tread?"



3.—All night he hears the dreadful sound, and in the morn appears
A Hippopotamuskallonge to aggravate his fears.



4.—"Oh, [illegible]" cries the Tiny Tad. "I know not where to fleet,
"Oh, here's a Mackerelephant—perhaps he'll rescue me!"

5.—The Mackerelephant is good, he takes the Tiny Tad

U.M.W. May Withdraw.

Montreal, Jan. 16.—The prevailing opinion in labor circles is that Grand President Lewis of the United Mine Workers of America has been defeated, and that his opponent, Mr. White, has been elected. This means the withdrawal of the union from the lower provinces, where the Sydney and Springhill strikes, under the leadership of Grand President Lewis, the U.M.W.A. has dropped no less than $1,500,000, while 1,500 men and their families at Springhill are still on the payroll of the association.

President White has all along maintained that the Canadian end of the U.M.W.A. has been fatal, a drag on the finances of the concern, that the management has been worse than bad, that graft has existed amongst the officials, and that, while 5,000 men in Eastern Canada have benefitted by the Lewis regime, no less than 100,000 have suffered in the United States, owing to the so-called blunder of the existing management of the U.M.W.A.

This being the case, it is understood that the Dominion Steel Corporation, looks for an end to the Springhill struggle within five weeks' time.

It is also expected that socialism will receive an impetus under the coming regime, and reports state that this is spreading amongst the miners of Eastern Nova Scotia. It is stated, in fact, that to-day there are no less than 1,600 Socialists enrolled in the County of Cumberland, N.S., alone, and that the various associations affiliated with Socialism have a great many recruits in other parts of Nova Scotia, Alberta and British Columbia.

Almost Poisoned by Gas.

Ottawa, Jan. 16.—Arthur Gilbert, the Nationalist member for Drummond-Arthabaska, was, along with his wife and children, almost poisoned to death on Saturday by coal gas.

It is a curious circumstance that the building in which the near tragedy occurred belongs to the Dominion Government. Mr. Gilbert resides at 113 St. Patrick street, and on Saturday the employes of the Public Works Department did some work around the furnace. Apparently they had shut off the dampers before the gas had been turned out of the coal, for Mr. Gilbert and his family were soon under the influence of the poison.

About six in the evening Mr. Gilbert recovered consciousness, and having reached the door, made an effort to call help. He fell down in a stupor and passers-by thought he was merely a shrieking inebriate. Eventually the matter was understood and the family got out of the building.

Mr. Gilbert, his wife and ... [illegible] ... are all out of danger.

A SUCCESSFUL FINISH.

Canada and U. S. Complete Their Fisheries Agreement.

Washington, Jan. 16.—Diplomatic negotiations have scored a victory over arbitration in the fisheries dispute between Canada, Newfoundland and the United States, a statement issued Saturday by the State Department here, disclosed the fact that a complete agreement on all details involved had been reached between Canada and the United States, and likewise that a sufficient adjustment of difficulties with Newfoundland have been reflected to make unnecessary any recourse to the mixed commission of The Hague tribunal. Sir Edward Morris, Premier of Newfoundland, has returned home, to confer with the members of his Cabinet, but enough ground already has been covered to warrant the belief that a complete settlement soon will be effected. Sir Edward Morris' departure to Newfoundland was made possible on Thursday, when negotiations reached the point where it became obvious that it would not be necessary to take the question up again with The Hague.

The details of the agreement were not divulged, but they include the modification of certain fishing regulations, as well as the continuance of others hitherto in effect. A unanimous revelation to the representatives of both countries was the [illegible] with which the fisheries negotiations could be misconstrued. Many misunderstandings were straightened out, and the belief was general yesterday with respect to the Canadian fisheries question that American as well as Canadian fishermen would find mutual benefit from the improved regulations.

Wilfred Armstroug fell from a new elevator at Goderich one hundred feet to the ground. He received injuries that will probably prove fatal.

The store occupied by Murdock McLeod, a Moncton, N.B., tailor, was gutted by fire yesterday morning. The loss was $4,500 with insurance.

Andrew Wilson, arrested at Hamilton on a minor charge, complained that Policeman Campaign broke his jaw. The matter will be investigated.

John Hall, aged 30, turned on the natural gas under the boilers of the Salt Co., St. Thomas, last night and waited too long before applying the match. He was knocked unconscious.

The strike of the Portuguese railroad men having ended, normal train service has been resumed. The strike of the gas house workers, however, continues, but it is said that the strike will speedily terminate.

A Brutal Assault.

Galt, Jan. 16.—One of the most brutal assaults and highway robberies in the history of the town was perpetrated here Saturday evening, when Miss Sadie McLellan, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John McLellan, Stone road, and a prominent young lady, was accosted on North Water street about 9.15 o'clock by a man who offered to accompany her home. On her refusal he seized her by the throat and choked her, striking her in the face and inflicting a very nasty wound, from which blood poured profusely. He seized her purse, which contained $2 and some change, and then decamped.

The injured girl was picked up on the roadside by women who heard her screams and a doctor summoned. She was removed to her home and is a little better to-day. The police could get no description of the villain.

G.T.R. Wreck In London Yards.

London, Jan. 16.—Two Mimico trainmen, W. Armstrong and W. A. Murray, were injured and four cabooses demolished in a wreck which occurred yesterday morning in the local Grand Trunk Railway yards.

A freight train, in charge of Engineer Balfry and Conductor Drury of Mimico, backed into the line of cabooses in which the train crews were sleeping. Murray and Armstrong were pinned down by the wreckage, and, it was with difficulty that they were released. Armstrong's legs were badly smashed and his face lacerated. He is suffering greatly from the shock. Murray's feet were jammed, and it was necessary to amputate the toes of one foot. Two other Mimico trainmen were slightly hurt.

Gimli, Man., Jan. 16.—Prof. J. L. Macoun, F.L.S., F.R.C.S., assistant director and naturalist of the Geological Survey Department, Ottawa; A. G. Bachand and party of the Dominion Hydrographical Bureau, together with Captain Harold Bartlett and crew of the schooner Jeanie, arrived here yesterday, having come all the way from Fort Churchill, 1,100 miles, by dog train.

Boy Drowned.

Ottawa, Jan. 16.—While skating on the Ottawa River Saturday afternoon, two boys left the party, tempted to try the smooth ice where it has been cut. They got on to the thinner surface, climbing the wire to do so, and went through. Wilfrid Gauthier was pulled out by H. Plamondin, but Horace Prot, 10-year-old son of a widow residing at 97 1-2 Water street, was drowned. Plamondin just caught his toque as he disappeared. There is little hope of recovering the body until spring.

Drove Miles to Surgeon.

Blenheim, Jan. 16.—John Milens of Raleigh had one hand terribly lacerated by the knives of a root pulper Saturday, and had to drive seventy miles to Blenheim for attendance by a surgeon. Thirty stitches were put in Milens' [illegible] to have the injured member administered.

Woman's Strange Disappearance.

St. John, N.B., Jan. 16.—The strange disappearance of Mrs. Douglas Robertson, wife of a well-known storekeeper of Nerien, about 30 miles from here, is arousing much interest. The woman came to St. John with some prudence, as was her custom, on Wednesday, Jan. 4, and remained with her sister Mrs. James Clark, St. John West, when she started to return home. Her niece accompanied her to the Intercolonial Railway station, but they missed the train, and Mrs. Robertson decided to wait in the depot until the next train should start about an hour later.

Mrs. Robertson has not been seen since, though her husband and relatives searched in vain for a week, and on Saturday notified the St. John police. Mrs. Robertson is 44 years of age, and has a large family of children.

Cabby Cut His Throat.

Ottawa, Jan. 16.—Thomas Walker, a cabman, aged about 45 years, formerly in the employ of Hinton's livery, Albert street, committed suicide early yesterday at the Cambridge restaurant, corner Bank and Queen streets, by cutting his throat with a razor. Despondency, brought on by ill-health and a hard course of drinking and unemployment, are held to be the cause of the man's rash act. Walker has resided in Ottawa for several years, and was a native of Yorkshire, England.

New Zealand Mails.

Melbourne, Australia, Jan. 16.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier has cabled Premier Fisher of Australia, regretting that the Commonwealth has declined to renew the Vancouver and Australian mail service, with calls at Auckland and Sydney. Canada has decided therefore, to enter into a contract with the Union Steamship Co. of New Zealand, of which Sir James Mills is chairman, for a five-years' service between Canada and New Zealand.

Ordered to England.

Kingston, Jan. 16.—Orders to proceed to England as soon as possible have been received by Major Henri Panet commanding A Battery, R.C.H.A. Just where he will be stationed he does not yet know, but he will be with one of the Royal Horse batteries. He will leave at the end of next month and be absent eight months.

Working It Out.

The following note was delivered to a schoolmistress recently:

"Dear Mum—I am sorry that Johnny won't be able to come to school today. He has gone with his father to act as timekeeper. The sum you gave Johnny last night was, 'If the embankment is one and a quarter miles in length, how long will it take a man to walk that distance twenty-six and a half times, his average rate of progress being three and three-quarter miles per hour?' Johnny ain't a man yet, so dad's the only man in this house he had to go.

"They started at 4 o'clock this morning, and dad said he'd finish the sum in one day if he could manage it, though it would mean hard going. Dear mum, next time you want any information please make it 'woman;' then I can do the sum and dad can go to his work."—Tit-Bits.

Caesar's Lament.

The wild beasts gnashed their teeth and roared like a circus calliope; the gladiators shouted hoarsely; the arena was knee deep with gore.

In the amphitheater the pleasure seeking populace clamored tumultuously.

"More bloodl More deathl" they yelled ferociously.

"Would that I might grant this prayer," he muttered. "If only"—and imploringly he raised his eyes heavenward—"I could pull off an automobile cup race!"

Great Caesar wept.

For with all his boasted power he was unable to hasten the flight of time.—Chicago News.

The Enemies.

Apropos of the enmity, now happily buried, that used to exist between Minneapolis and St. Paul, Senator Clapp said at a dinner in the former city:

"I remember an address on careless building that I once heard in Minneapolis.

"'Why,' said the speaker in the course of this address, 'one inhabitant of St. Paul is killed by accident in the streets every forty-eight hours.'

"A bitter voice from the rear of the hall interrupted:

"'Well, it ain't enough,' he said."—Boston Globe.

An Exceptional Case.

"What are you doing these days?"

"Playing the horses."

"No money in that."

"Yes, there is. I get $2 a night for imitating hoof beats in a melodrama."—Washington Herald.

London, Jan. 16.—Harry Slater was discovered roaming around the local market late Saturday night with his mouth badly burned by carbolic acid. A partly consumed bottle was found in his clothes. He denies that he attempted suicide. He is in the hospital, but will recover.

Lynched Three Negroes.

Shelbyville, Ky., Jan. 16.—Fifty masked men early yesterday stormed the Shelby County jail, seized and lynched three negroes, two of whom were charged with insulting white women, while the third was sentenced to hang for the murder of a negro woman.

In the Paper.

"Did ye bring the paper home, Silas?" asked Mrs. Witherbee.

"Ya-as," said Silas.

"Anything p'ticlar in it this mornin'?" asked the lady.

"Ya-as," said the farmer. "Few quarts o' peanuts and a bottle o' hoss liniment. Kinder thought you and I might have a little spree for supper."

Who Adam Was.

Smiling Visitor (addressing the Sunday school)—Now, children, I want to ask you a question. Will some boy tell me who Adam was?

Tommy Tucker—Adam was the man that made the devil famous.

FARMERS' BANK MANAGER GOES TO PENITENTIARY

W. R. Travers is Sentenced by Magistrate Denison This Morning on Three Counts but the Sentences Are to Run Concurrently---"Crimes Were Worse Than Burglary," Commented His Worship.

TORONTO, ONT., JAN. 16. — Six years for theft, six years for forgery and five years for the falsification of the returns to the government, were the sentences imposed this morning by Magistrate Denison on W. R. Travers, the erstwhile manager of the Farmers Bank. The sentences are to run concurrently, which means six years in all. Travers received the sentence with a quick inward gasp and a twitching of his fingers. In sentencing Travers, the magistrate said the bank had been plundered and wrecked by his depredations. The crimes were worse than burglary, he said, because Travers could have entered hundreds of homes without nearly so much injury to the depositors and shareholders. The magistrate remarked, however, that the prisoner was to some extent a victim of the banking system, which provided for no outside inspection. Travers will be taken to the penitentiary in a day or two.

OTONABEE SCHOOL TRUSTEE ELECTION INVESTIGATION

The Result of Investigation Shows That Mr. O'Connor Was Fairly and Duly Elected---Intrusive Strife Breeding Tactics Were Unsuccessful.

The complaint that the proceedings of the meeting, at which the school trustees for School Section number eight of the Township of Otonabee, were not held in conformity with the Public School Act was, as noted in the Examiner Saturday, investigated before the Public School Inspector, at the Court House on Saturday afternoon. A very large number of the ratepayers was in attendance and displayed considerable interest in the proceedings. Mr. Burnham appeared for the complainants, and Mr. O'Connell for Mr. O'Connor, one of the elected school trustees. Mr. Burnham stated his case, and upon Mr. O'Connell replying, the Inspector defined the lines on which the proceedings were to proceed. Namely: Whether the majority of the ratepayers present at the meeting voted for the trustees elected, and whether all who voted were entitled to vote.

The election was held on December the 28th last, at the meeting of ratepayers held for that purpose, and at the meeting, Mr. O'Connor, amongst other trustees, was declared elected by Mr. Hazlitt, the chairman, by a vote of twenty-one to nineteen. For the purpose of facilitating the investigation, Mr. Burnham and Mr. O'Connell retired to an adjoining room with several of the ratepayers, to agree upon the parties concerning whom any dispute existed, and upon the investigation of the list, it was found that no irregularities had, in fact, taken place,, and that the vote should have been nineteen to seventeen in Mr. O'Connor's favour, instead of twenty-one to nineteen, the difference having arisen by reason of the fact that the names of several parties had been struck off, concerning whom it was doubtful whether they had the right to vote or not. The parties then decided that the election should be confirmed and this decision was registered by the School Inspector, and Mr. O'Conor confirmed in his election, and the complaint dismissed.

It was conclusively established at the investigation that no irregularity had taken place at the election. The complaint seems to have arisen at the instigation of some parties of the City of Peterborough, who, for some ulterior purpose or another, have been endeavouring to foment sectarian strife in the locality. Hitherto, the residents of that district have always lived harmoniously and peacefully together, and no ill-feeling existed between the different denominations until some self-seeking politicians had for their own purposes, endeavoured to create a religious agitation, and the investigation, which had no other result than to show that the election was properly conducted, was the result of their action.

CANADIAN DELEGATION BACK FROM WASHINGTON

MONTREAL, Q., JAN. 16. — The Canadian delegation, which included Mr. O'Donohoe, of the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Co., with representatives from other Canadian towns and cities, has returned from Washington. Thomas Robb, one of the delegation, said this morning that he didn't think a rush move would be made and it was said that if the United States permitted any damming of the St. Lawrence it would be under government control. There is every indication that the matter will be settled by the International Waterways Commission.

SENT TO CENTRAL PRISON FOR SIX MONTHS

SECOND APPEARANCE

Six months in the Central Prison was handed out to John McIntyre at the police court this morning McIntyre is a wandering umbrella repairer. He was lying alongside of the railway track in Ashburnham on Saturday evening in a drunken stupor, so helpless that the assistance of an express sleigh had to be enlisted to get him to the police station. He was accompanied by a friend, who it appears proved quite otherwise, for when his 'pal' fell by the wayside he proceeded on his way, leaving his fallen chum to the mercy of the elements. McIntyre had spent Friday night in the police station and had been told that if he came back again he would get a term in Central. Consequently, as Magistrate Dumble remarked this morning, he always kept his word, even with a poor man, so the half year sojourn in the vagrants' palace at Toronto was meted out to "John."

The prisoner pleaded not guilty to the charage of vagrancy, but the evidence of Chief of Police Thompson and his own story in the box was too much to permit of another chance.

Returning home on Wednesday at noon, he seemed as well as ever and was engaged in butchering a number of hogs when he was suddenly stricken with heart failure and collapsed. A neighbour, William Scott, arrived at this point, and assisted in carrying him to the house. Dr. Pettigrew was summoned, but Mr. Leeper was dead long before he arrived. He pronounced death caused by heart disease. He had been complaining for some time about his heart.

MR. HENRY BEST, EX-MAYOR OF PETERBOROUGH DEAD

Life-Long Resident of City Passes Away This Afternoon ---Had Long Served the City on the Council and Other Capacities---Was Widely Known and Greatly Respected

After an illness extending over a period of about two months, ex-Mayor Henry Best passed away at his late residence, 151 Lock street, at a quarter past one to-day. The deceased was in his sventy-fifth year, and up to the time of his taking ill, took a keen interest in the advancement and progress of the city.

The late Henry Best was the eldest son of the late Thomas Best, and was born in Peterborough in 1836. He attended the Public Schools here until sixteen years of age, when he was apprenticed to the tinsmith trade. Four years later he went to the Pacific Coast, via the Isthmus of Panama. After spending some time in San Francisco he went to British Columbia, and spent nearly a year in the mountains, exploring and prospecting, after which he returned to San Francisco. Subsequently he sailed to Valaparaiso, Chili, and was extensively engaged at that place in the manufacture of wooden cases for storing whale oil, his employes being mostly natives. This yielded encouraging profits, but disliking hte country he returned to San Francisco. He was subsequently similarly engaged at Panama; but after carrying on business there for about a year, he began to yearn for the old Canadian home again, and in 1867 returned to Peterborough. Business chances, however, induced him to locate in Lindsay, but the year 1873 saw him again in Peterborough, where he has since resided. The year following his return he purchased the business of his old friend, the late James Stevenson, into whose shop he had entered as an apprentice to the trade twenty-one years before The late Mr. Best took an active part in the municipal life of the city, and for twelve years sat in the Council, and was for two years Mayor of Peterborough. He was first elected to the Council in 1892, and then in 1893 he was out of the Council but was again returned in 1894 and served continuously until 1905, when he was elected Mayor, which office he held for two years. The late Mr. Best was, in politics, a staunch Conservative.

The late Mr. Best was predeceased by his wife two years ago. He leaves to mourn his loss, two daughters, Mrs. W. H. Manning, of this city, and Miss Best, at home, and one sister, Mrs. Thos. Porter, of Sault Ste Marie.

The funeral arrangements will be announced to-morrow.

MR. GEO. W. FITZGERALD EX-COUNTY WARDEN IS DEAD AN OLD RESIDENT GONE

The many friends of Mr. George W. Fitzgerald, London Street, city, will deeply regret to learn of his death which took place at 2.30 this afternoon. The deceased was very widely known in Peterborough and in this county. He was born in Smith Township in 1852 and was the youngest son of the late Gerald Fitzgerald. He lived for the greater part of his life in Smith township but moved into Peterborough about eight years ago and has since resided here. He was connected with the Peterborough Cheese Board for a long term of years and was widely known through that connection. He served his native township of Smith on the council board and was also a member of the county council and was Warden of the County for a term. During this regime the floating bridge at Chemong was constructed. He was appointed Game Warden by the Ontario government about si xyears ago but owing to an attack of apoplexy five years ago had to resign from that position. He never entirely recovered from that attack but was able to be out and around. Yesterday he was apparently in his usual state of health but last night at 10.30 he was seized with a third stroke which had a fatal termination at 2.30 o'clock this afternoon. The deceased had a very wide circle of friends, his many good qualities and sterling character having earned him the respect and affection of everyone with whom he came in contact. In 1873 he married a daughter of Samuel Robinson of Smith who survvies him. There are also left to mourn his loss, four sons, Clarence, of Vancouver, Percy, Walter and Alex. of Peterborough, and four daughters. Mrs. McConkey, Peterborough, Mrs. Nelson of Allin. Sas., Mrs. Hannah of Montreal, and Miss Edna at home, also survive.

The ufneral will take place on Wednesday afternoon at 2.3 0o'clock, from the family residence, 174 London Street, to Little Lake Cemetery. The deceased was a Conservative in politics and a Baptist in religion. He was a member of the Foresters and Oddfellows and will be greatly missed by the members of those organizations.

LINES ON THE ODE TO THE SCOTCH GATHERING

Lines on reading the ode to the Scotch gathering to be held on Jan. 25th:

The cauld winds were blawing, the snawflakes were fawing,
I sat doon a thinking, in ma room awe alane,
Ma heart it was aching, and weel nigh a breaking
When I thought on the ocean twixt me and ma ain.

Ma memory it pondered, in fancy it wandered,
On the heath-covered mountains of Scotland again,
Blyth, blyth was I roamin' thy shores dear Loch Lomond,
Wi' a heart free frae sorrow and cankerous pain,

Hand in hand with ma dearest, of lassies the fairest,
True till death was our love tae each ither—
Thy islands and wild woods, dear land of my childhood
I wave you a sad, sad farewell, and forever.

Farewell tae your shores, I shall ne'er see you more,
Nor sail o'er your bright, bonnie, crystal-clear wave,
Nor hear the sheep bleating, where my loved one lies sleeping,
And the primroses grow round the shrine of her grave

Ma een filled with tears, when I thought on the years,
That an exile frae hame I had been,
I reached for ma paper tae keep back the water
That was risin' foolin' the bath o' ma een

Ma heart gied a jumping, ma e'e caught a something
Bout Scotchmen tae gither to sing o' their hills.
Quoth I, I'll be there lad, your job for tae share lad,
Though in sillar it cost me ma last dollar bill.

I up and I louped, ma chair, lad, I couped,
I danced as I did in lang syne,
Thrice blessed be ye, laddie, and true may yer lass be
For writing such hamely bit lines.

Sweet, sweet were yer verses, but vile were yer curses,
On them that would dare bide at hame;
But I'm share lad, ye need na, as Scotchmen will meet ye,
Though wild was the night and though lang was the lane.

May the circulation grow greater, o' the Examiner paper
And blessed be the editor that printed yer line,
Though his fare may be scanty, I trust aye blessed wae plenty
Till the ages shall roll and the trumpets sound time.

PLEADS GUILTY

Blacklisted Man Was Drunk on Friday and Saturday

A black listed man was before Magistrate Dumble at the police court this morning, charged with an infraction of the liquor license law, in regard to such persons. The accused pleaded guilty to having been drunk on Friday and Saturday last. This was a repeated offence with the prisoner, but His Worship did not impose a fine, but reserved judgment for one week. In response to the question from Inspector Stewart, as to where he got his liquor, he stated that a strange man, whose name he did not know, bought him a flask and he gave him fifty cents for it.

THE LATE HENRY BEST.

This afternoon Mr. Henry Best died after two months' illness, at his residence, 151 Lock street, at the age of 75 years. In the passing of Mr. Best Peterborough loses a resident, who, as a citizen, public-spirited and level-minded, held a high place in popular esteem, and as a municipal representative, had an important record covering the duration of a dozen years. He entered the Council in 1892, and, barring the year 1893, was continuously a member till 1906. For that and the previous years he occupied the position of Mayor, and while he was in the Council he had an active share in the construction of our sewerage system, being chairman of the committee during the building of the outfall sewer, and closely connected with the extension of the system. During his official life he was also intimately connected with the inaugurating of our system of granolithic sidewalks. Mr. Best was a faithful and industrious civic representative, and of good business ability, which he effectively employed in the discharge of his duties.

BANK OF NOVA SCOTIA.

In another part of this issue of the Examiner is to be found the 79th annual report of the Bank of Nova Scotia. Sound financing, as well as good brains seem to fit the "Bluenose" province. The record of prosperity and progress is of a piece with past achievements. For the year to Dec. 31 1910, the net profits, after providing for contingent losses, amounted to $662,901.80, which, with the balance of $4,88[illegible]15, previous balance at credit of profit and loss account, made the sum of $707,166.95 available for distribution. Of that total the quarterly dividends at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum absorbed $360,000; the reserve fund was increased by $150,000, from the bank premises account $125,000 was written off, $25,000 was contributed to the officers' pesion fund and $5,000 to the relief fund raised in connection with the Campbellton, N.B., fire. The balance of $42,166.95 was carried forward at credit of profit and loss. It is worthy of especial note that the net earnings were 22 per cent. of the capital stock.

Deposits not bearing interest totalled $8,245,404.96, and those bearing interest $31,556.28 The reserve fund now stands at $5,650,000, as compared with the paid-up capital of $3,000,000, a fact testifying to the remarkable strength of the Bank of Nova Scotia and the excellence of its management. As against public liabilities, the bank holds in readily available assets not less than $28,455,734.43, which strikingly indicates the conservative character of the policy pursued by the board. The general financial statement is thus highly satisfactory and its accuracy has been vouched for by an independent audit. The local branch, under the management of Mr. C. E. McLeod, which has shared in, and contributed to, the general prosperity of the Bank, will shortly occupy its handsome premises on George street, opposite the Market Buildings.

CORNERING COCAINE.

Persons who live normal lives, and have no more exciting experience with stimulants than a mild cup of tea, have no idea of the extensive and deplorable use of cocaine and morphine, especially in cities. This condition justifies the legislation introduced by Hon. Mackenzie King, Minister of Labour, to restrict the sale of cocaine and morphine, except by medical authority. A gentleman in this country, a prominent and active temperance worker, says that he would regard the prohibition of alcoholic drinks a calamity, in view of the fact that the untameable human appetite for stimulants would, by the removal of alcoholic stimulants, provoke an increase of the use of morphine, cocaine, and other drugs of their kind. This gentleman is a medical man and knows it is to be assumed, whereof he speaks. He holds that the use of these drugs has more, morally degrading effects than the use of strong drink. Especially in large cities is the drug habit very strongly in evidence. In Montreal, it is stated, that a traffic of almost incredible proportions, especially in cocaine, is carried on, and that the police courts are crowded with the victims of the degrading habit. Restrictive legislation may do much to minimize the evil; but it cannot be thoroughly effective. The people are bound slaves to stimulants in some form. The refined gentle lady, who would scorn and flee from a glass of grog, in horror, having recourse to a cup of tea as a "bracer," has, in lesser degree, the same appetite for stimulants as the confirmed drunkard has in a more emphasized degree. The artificiality of the habits of life of the age we live in, its inhuman or unhuman, condition of rush and hurry, sap the vital powers, and the power of resistance to fatigue to a degree that makes stimulants, in some form, a necessary element, in tolerable existence, and the sustenation of the capacity for performing the everyday duties of life. Such stimulants as tea and coffee are comparatively harmless; but when it comes to whisky, cocaine, opium, in its various forms, and other drugs, that, as Kipling says, is another story. It, therefore, becomes justifiable, if not, indeed, a duty, to repress, as far as possible, by legislation enactment, the use of these degrading drugs, by making access to them difficult.

THE CANADIAN BANK OF COMMERCE.

On Saturday the forty-fourth annual report of the Canadian Bank of Commerce appeared in the Examiner. This annual report is looked forward to as an important event in the financial world. The Canadian Bank of Commerce is not only "Canadian" in name, but Canadian in the extent of its operations, which cover every part of the Dominion, and are of a character and importance, to constitute the bank a dominating financial force. The annual address of the President, or General Manager, in its elaborate and analytic character, assumes the proportions and, in its sphere, the significance of a budget speech. This year's report shows a continuance of advance in all its interests. The profits for 1910 were 1,838,065.04, an increase of $327,370 over the best previous year. This profit was 18 per cent. of the capital. The dividend was, therefore, increased to 9 per cent., calling for a payment of $900,000 in dividends. The sum of $1,000,000 was transferred to reserve account, and $310,204.06 was carried forward on account of profit and loss. Assets total $157,053,015. The showing of the report is eminently satisfactory to those immediately concerned, as well as to the people at large, as a great degree of national prosperity is reflected by it.

CANADA'S POPULATION.

With its almost infinite extent of resources and capacity for accommodating population, Canada has a special interest in making these conditions known to the world. Many are to-day living who remember the time when, in British eyes, Canada was a country of little value, and a merely tolerant, if not contemptuous attitude was held towards this country. But all this is changed and the eyes of Britain, commercial, financial and homeseeking, are turned towards this country as the land of promise and performance. Canada's place in the Empire, is a permanency not to be disturbed by any considerations. And that place will become and be all the more important by retaining the genius of British institutions, through the attraction of British population. We are going ahead in this regard and displacing the United States as the destination of British immigration. Even as recently as ten years ago the United States took almost seven times more British immigrants than Canada, the figures being 47,978 and 7,805 respectively. By contrast in the eleven months of last year Canada got 118,582 British immigrants and the United States 79,930. British returns of the outward set of immigration for ten year demonstrate the increasing favour, absolutely and relatively, with which Canada is regarded. They are as follows:

	To Canada	To United States
1900	7,805	47,978
1901	7,121	45,883
1902	14,750	51,617
1903	45,866	65,392
1904	51,284	66,790
1905	62,505	80,097
1906	91,283	85,941
1907	117,552	97,941
1908	41,455	31,451
1909	42,378	36,377
1910 (11 months)	118,582	79,930

These figures taken in connection with the large inflow of population from the United States, show that Canada is getting a valuable population, one accustomed to constitutional government, and the conditions that will make them easily fit places of useful Canadian citizenship.

National Dances As An Element In Religious Propagandism

(Montreal Witness)

We are beginning to hear of the possibilities of the theatre to aid and abet the aims of the church, instead of frustrating them as, under present conditions, it too often does. And now we are told of the reforming power of the graceful rural dance. This is set forth by an enthusiast in the very attractive Christmas number of the new 'T. P.'s Magazine' in an article on 'The National Revival of Morris Dancing,' by Mary Neal. The movement proper had its genesis in the Esperance Club for working girls five years ago this autumn, but the real work which prepared the members of the club for 'this joyous service of their country' began about fifteen years ago. The club used to end its winter companionship by a holiday spent together in the country or at the seaside. There Miss Neal and the girls studied the ways of the creatures and of the flowers, and watched the waves and the clouds. One little dressmaker, when she first heard the broken rhythm of the beautiful folk-song, 'The Bold Fisherman,' said: 'Isn't it just like the sound of the little waves 'curling over? The writer says: 'I think now that quite unconsciously we had been setting our life and 'work to a rhythm deeper in the 'heart of England than is possible 'when the whole year is spent in the 'rush and roar of the city, and where 'work goes with the whirr and speed 'of machinery.' Scottish and Irish National dances had also been great features of the writer's work, so had play-acting, 'and surely there is nothing so helpful in breaking the strain 'of long hours spent in factory and 'workshop as the self expression gained by acting the part of those in 'wider, happier and more heroic circumstances. I have seen the little 'working girl playing the part of a 'great lady for one night a week gain 'grace and dignity from the bigger 'personality in which she lived even 'for so brief a time. I have seen the 'girl of stormy temper by playing the 'nature made gentler by playing the 'part of Saint Elizabeth of Hungary 'for one whole winter.'

The love which had sprung up among the girls for the country, with its sweet and simple joys and slow yet vigorous rhythm, and their love of song and peasant dance naturally created an interest in the old folk songs of England. The first song learned was 'The 'Seeds of Love,' and Miss Neal says that she has never professed to understand the results which followed, nor the harvest of good fellowship and joy which has been gathered in since. There was an instant response to the music on the part of these London girls; perhaps it was a stirring of some ancestral memory of the country side. It had been the custom of the club to invite friends to a festival of song and dance at Christmas time and on May Day, so as Christmas time came round they began to look for dances which would be in harmony with the spirit of the folk-song. Miss Neal heard of two countrymen who, through five generations, had the knowledge of Morris dancing handed on to them from father to son. She invited these men up to town and set them to teach the dances to the members of the Esperance Club. The dance first learned was 'Beansetting,' probably an ancient priest's ceremonial dance, symbolic of the sowing of seeds in spring. When the songs and dances were presented before the friends of the members there was a universal request that the new discovery should be comunicated to a wider public.

This was eventually done at a concert given in April, 1906. Immediately after the concert inquiries began to come from club leaders, teachers, poor-law guardians, inspectors of schools, clergymen and country gentlemen asking where these songs and dances could be learend, with a view toward introducing them to the young people in whom they were interested. They saw in these world-old songs and dances something which made for joy and wholesomeness and vigorous health. Quickly as the girls learned the dances, their power of teaching them was quite as wonderful. 'Thank you for sending such a 'gay little spirit into our home,' was a sample out of hundreds of messages of thanks which Miss Neal received from people who had asked for the services of the girls as teachers. 'Experience has confirmed my first impression,' says Miss Neal, 'that the healthy, laughter-loving, 'self-respecting, hard-working girl of 'the people is the ideal teacher of 'these peasant dances. The very nature of the dances, virile, strenuous, 'open-air, with nothing of subtlety or 'indelicacy or drawing-room posturing, demands like character in their 'interpreters, and it is far away from 'drawing-rooms and gentility that we 'must look for those who will keep 'true to the tradifional spirit of the 'dances.' The Morris dances were formerly almost always danced by men, but it was interesting to see that although when danced by girls they changed their character in some degree, yet the girls were able to hand them on to men dancers in such a way that nothing of the traditional characteristics was lost.

So there are now through the work, direct and indirect, of the club, hundreds of men and boys who, in different parts of England are dancing as their forefathers danced in the days of "Merrie England." The practice has also become officially recognized by the Board of Education; the Inspectors and Directors are furthering it, and teachers, especially of elementary and secondary schools, are eager to learn and to import the songs and dances. Because they have seen the stunted grow tall and straight, the delicate child gain new health and vigour, because among children and young men and women old tastes have been changed and newer and better ideals have taken their place the promoters of the movement are rejoicing in its growth. Mary Neal dreams that the Morris dance and folk-song may become a link of empire when those who have learned them will be scattered through the King's dominions. We have seen less happy 'links of Empire' suggested. The movement certainly has much to commend it. Like the Boy Scouts, like the Village Drama, which Mr. Stead has sought to revive, it makes for the health of body and mind, for the simplicity, for the common human joyfulness which is the great lack in our civilization to-day. The folk-song is now the delight of hundreds of young people whose taste a short time ago did not rise above the banalities of the music hall ditty, and the merry Morris dances have, in many instances, displaced other enervating dances. On behalf of this movement it is declared to be the true method of reform which desires not to lessen joy but to increase it, which aims not to destroy, but to fulfil.

THE ROYAL BANK.

The year 1910 was certainly a notable one for the Royal Bank of Canada, as reference to the annual statement, printed elsewhere, will show. The latter part of the year was marked by the absorption by it of the Union Bank of Halifax, and, while quite a portion of the very large increases in assets and deposits should be attributed to it, the fact that the consolidation was effected only on November 1st, indicates that the recorded net profits must be taken as having been earned almost entirely by the Royal Bank itself. The net profits for the year ending December 31st, 1910, reached the total of $951,336.99, equal to 18.29 on the average paid up capital for the year of $5,200,000. These earnings, compared with $838,306.51, show an increase of $113,030.48. One of the outstanding features of the statement would seem to be the very large increases in the amount of the assets of the bank, the gold and silver coin now standing at $4,141,664.06, compared with $3,560,347.62 at the end of the previous year, while Dominion Government notes now total $8,530,488.25, against $4,993,532.25 at the end of 1909, showing an increase for the both accounts of approximately $4,118,000.00. The aggregate assets now stand at $92,510,346.95, as against $67,051,162.62, at the end of the previous year. Deposits now total $72,079,607.27, as against $50,822,129.31 at the end of the previous year. Of this amount deposits bearing interest amount to $51,709,781.96 as against $33,456,884.85, at the end of the previous year, while deposits not bearing interest amount to $19,137,130.43 against $16,955,930.07 at the end of 1909. The capital now stands at $6,200,000.00, as against $5,000,000.00 at the end of 1909. The average paid-up capital during the year, however, was only $5,200,000.00. The reserve fund makes a big advance from $5,700,000.00 to $7,000,000.00, the sum of $1,300,000.00 of this increase being from premium on new stock, and $100,000.00 being transferred from profit and loss account. The statement, while pleasing to a large number of shareholders of the bank, should also be regarded as particularly satisfactory from the public standpoint, as indicating the strong position the larger banks of the country are gradually assuming.

EDITORIAL NOTES

It is shown by statistics that 125 million dollars are spent in the United States annually for candy. This is only the first cost and does not include dentists, and indigestion doctors' bills.

The Ottawa Free Press says that W. R Travers, of the Farmers Bank, "is paying the price of failure"—he is paying the price of wrong-doing. Failure to succeed is not a crime, except in the eyes of those who succeed.

The exemptions from taxation in Ottawa and Kingston, amount, in round numbers, to a third of the total assessment. Thus the taxpayer pays his own and a big share of his neighbour's taxes. Is this condition good for either city, or any city?

The "Nationalist Idol," Mr. Bourassa, is getting worse. On his return from France to Montreal, he said he was "delighted to see the people of my own race." He has even excluded the people of old France from a look in as the "republic on the St. Lawrence."

An English chemist has produced an alcohol which can be used as a motive power, and we may expect the introduction of whisky-driven autos, locomotives, launches, etc. We have had some experience of whisky-driven trains and conveyances, but whisky in the driven and whisky in the driver become distinct things.

BOOSTING THEIR WAGES.

The rumour is being revived that the members of the Ontario Legislature intend trying to raise their sessional indemnity when they meet in a few weeks. They get $1,000 now and it is said they want $1,500.

In even proposing such an action the members are having their nerve right where it shows most. They only sit for about two months, and even then there isn't $15.00 worth of work to do.

In Queen's Park, Toronto, a Tory member of the Legislature has to do just about what he is told.

Sir James Whitney does all the real work on the Government side, and al lthe initiative that he allows to creep out from the men behind him is dear at $1,000.

ASSETS INCREASED SO DID THE BUSINESS

Home Life Assurance's Death Claims Below the Estimates—Had a Very Good Year

The report submitted at the annual meeting of the Home Life Association of Canada by the president, the Hon Mr. Stratton, scintillated throughout with echoes of a prosperous year. The improved condition of the standing of the Association, as represented by its assets, is shown by the fact that the total of assets, including capital not subjected to call, now amounts to more than $2,000,000, which is an increase of $158,891 over the figures of last year.

At the close of the year, the invested assets of the Association amounted to $1,200,000, and is composed as follows: First mortgages and real estate, $497,815; bonds and debentures and collateral loans, $287,220; loans on the policies of the Association, $169,794; real estate owned by the Association, $158,893; cash in bank, $82,489.

The insurance in force shows an increase of $289,799 from $5,583,001 to $5,872,690. This means an increase in premiums of $6,161. The interest ratio also shows an increase rising this year to six and a quarter per cent., from 5.99 per cent. in 1909.

In the matter of death claims the showing is the best in the history of the Association for several years, the demands being substantially below the estimated expectancy of mortality, in emphasis of the importance of careful selection and acceptance of risks.

Owen Sound—A Town.

Owen Sound is an Ontario town which certainly shows none of those symptoms of retrogression which are said by some critics to be invading the systems of eastern municipalities. Its equilibrium, that is the biggest fact about Owen Sound. It never puts on air—Owen Sound became a town in 1857; it is still a town. Which is where it differs from other places in Ontario which call themselves cities, though none of them have more population that Owen Sound. Therefore, Owen Sound is the largest town in Ontario. To be hackneyed, you might say that Owen Sound "has in the path of progress," sitting up there on an inlet toward the southwestern part of Georgian Bay. Here it corrals a big heap of western traffic—fresh water liners tooting up the lakes for the red wheat shacks of Port Arthur and Fort William; two transcontinental systems feeding the boats. They are prosperous in Grey County's metropolis. Owen Sound has a comfortable look. If you ask a real estate man up there about that he will wink and tell you about building stone—part of the rocks of Georgian Bay. We will show you it in the postoffice, which cost a cool hundred thousand. This stone has built a good piece of the Soo Canal and bridges in Toronto. Citizenship is described as virulent in Owen Sound; remember local option. And there is something significant surely in this fact: just now public spirit is going into its pocket for a large sum to enlarge the water supply which gravitates into town from deep springs.—Canadian Courier.

The Speech From the Throne.

There is something quite mediseval about this time-honored custom of reading the speech from the Throne. The Governor-General sits with his hat on all the way through, except when he addresses the members of the Lower House, and then he gives it a gentle tilt. In order to show that he is the representative of the representatives of the people the Speaker, standing on his little hassock at the bar, keeps his three-cornered hat on also, and when His Excellency raises his headgear the Speaker does likewise. Speaker Marcil has long, flowing white locks, and there is a growing suspicion that his hat is too small, for it is only by the exercise of continual dexterity that he is able to keep it on his head. At the recent opening of Parliament it was quite fascinating to watch the movements of this "tile." The Speech was of unusual length, and half the time the three-cornered affair drooped entely over the left eye of the "Honorable Charlie."

Earl Grey, with a graceful wave of his hand, sent by his aide-de-camp a copy of "his" speech (prepared by Hon Charles Murphy) to Speaker Marcil, and the latter promptly put it in his inside pocket, and marched off, headed by the mace, to the House of Commons, where, a few minutes later, in a Sherlock Holmes tone of voice, he informed the members that "I have secured a copy of His Excellency's speech in order to avoid mistakes."

By John T. McIntyre. Copyrighted and All Rights Reserved

"It was on the morning that you called to announce the coming of Miss Vale. We were speaking of how it sometimes happened that very innocent things led to most weighty results; and I remarked, if you will remember, that your visit might lead to my connection with a murder that would dwarf some of those which we had spoken of."

"So you did," agreed Pendleton. "That is rather remarkable, Kirk."

"And, further," smiled the investigator, "I recall that I expressed great admiration for Marryat's conception of a homicide in the matter of Smallbones and the bag. The weapon used by Smallbones, it turns out, was identical in character to the one used by Sagon."

"A bayonet," cried Pendleton. "By George! So it was."

Just then Stumph announced Allan Morris.

The latter was pale and haggard; his clothes were neglected, and there were some days' beard upon his chin. He seemed astonished at sight of Pendleton; however, he only nodded. Then he said unpromptly to the investigator:

"You are Mr. Ashton-Kirk?"

"I am. Will you sit down, Mr. Morris?"

Morris sat down, dejectedly.

"Tobin advised me to come see you," he said. "I refused at first; but in view of what the newspapers contain this morning, I reconsidered it."

Ashton-Kirk nodded.

"If you had come to me in the first place," said he, "you'd probably not have fallen into this mess, and you would have saved yourself a great deal of suffering. He regarded the young man for a moment, and then went on. "Miss Vale, I suppose, has told you of her dealings with me."

"She has," said Morris. "She's been very candid with me in everything. If I had been the same with her," bitterly, "I should have acted more like a natural human being. You see, we were to be married; she was very rich while I had comparatively nothing. But this in itself would not have been sufficient to have prevented our wedding for so long. The fact was that I had gotten myself into trouble through speculation. I had a fear that my position might even be considered criminal from some points of view. And I allowed myself to get nervous over it.

"However, there was a way by which it was possible for me to extricate myself. To explain this, I'll have to go back some years."

"Take your own time," said Ashton-Kirk.

"Well, my father had worked for years perfecting the plans of a heavier-than-air flying machine," Morris resumed. "At the time of his death he had me that it was all complete but the construction, and that I had millions within my reach. But Hume had the plans my father had borrowed money of him—a considerable sum—and had given him the plans as security.

"Hume had always derided the idea of the monoplane. Tobin, who knew them both, tells me that he was forever arguing my father upon the subject. And when the time came when the machine would be redeemed, Hume [illegible] There was no record of [illegible] to show that the [illegible] occurred. The most [illegible] was the whole thing was a [illegible] He had never [illegible] had never paid out one [illegible] saw nothing about the matter. Time and again the man [illegible] and each time [illegible] I'd go off into [illegible] I have no doubt [illegible] anxious on his part was to [illegible] self, these [illegible] cancel [illegible] such things.

"Was it [illegible] for your father to duplicate the plans?

"At an earlier time it would have meant but a few weeks' application at most. But at this period the thing was impossible. The last long debauch seemed to have sapped his intellect; it also was the direct cause of his death."

"I see," said Ashton-Kirk.

"I took the matter up with Hume at once," went on the young man. "But I had no more success than my father. To the man's eyes, I had but replaced my father; I was another patient subject for his mockery, derision and abuse.

"There were some scattered drawings of the monoplane in father's office. I began a study of these, thinking to evolve upon the principal idea. But I was unsuccessful.

"All this, you understand, was before I had met Miss Vale, and before I was tangled up in the trouble I have just mentioned.

"The fear began to grow on me that Hume meant to use the plans to his own advantage. I knew that he had long been familiar with Locke who was reputed to be a mechanical genius, and between them, I fancied they'd take action. I began a watch upon the reports of the Patent Office, thinking that it would finally give me something tangible to use against them. However, I never gave up my visits to Hume, or my efforts to make him admit possession of my father's property.

"It was during one of these visits that I first met Spatola; and I was much struck by the performance of his cockatoos. My father had always held to the idea that the problem of flight would be finally solved by a study of the birds; this gave me an idea, and I took to visiting Spatola in his lodgings in Christie Place. He'd have the cockatoos fly slowly round and round the big attic, and I'd watch them and make notes.

"It was about this time that I met Miss Vale and asked her to be my wife; a very little later, in an effort to raise money, I got into the financial trouble which I have referred to. After a [illegible] the question of a time for our marriage came up. I was filled with fear and put it off, this occurred several times, and I was at my wits' end. I could not marry with that hanging over me. Suppose it should turn out as I feared; imagine the shock to a high-spirited girl to discover that she had married a defaulter.

"It was then that I turned to the matter of the plans as my only hope; with a perfected plan I could readily secure a large sum of money in advance. So I redoubled my efforts to have a settlement with Hume; but he only scoffed me as usual. Continual visits to Spatola [illegible] the flight of the birds, showed me that the [illegible] was a fine fellow, well educated and with much charm and appreciation. We became [illegible] friends and so little by little, I told him my story.

"About the invention [illegible] back?"

"Yes."

"[illegible] to Peterboro[illegible]

"I [illegible]," said he, "that I [illegible] could [illegible] Ashton-Kirk [illegible] greater part of their [illegible] been carried on there; the land had been finally rounded up and convict-[illegible] The bayonet, so legend has [illegible] in Bayonne, and [illegible] would be [illegible] name. He thought that in time an opportunity would present itself to cross the room some night, enter Humes' place by the scuttle and so possess myself of the plans.

"On the day preceding 'the murder I had made up my mind to have one more try with Hume; and if that failed I intended to follow Spatola's advice, break in and take the plans by force. I was so full of this resolution that I could not contain myself; I hinted at it to Miss Vale; and the result of that hint, you know."

He leaned his face forward in his hands and seemed to give way to a bitter train of thought. He was evidently despondent.

"It was also some such hint upon your part that induced her to visit Locke at Dr. Meteer's place, wasn't it?"

Morris raised his head and nodded.

"Yes," he said. "After the murder I suspected Locke at once of having something to do with it. I told Miss Vale; she went there without my knowledge—seeing that I had not the courage to go myself," he added bitterly, "and demanded the plans."

"And she learned that they were still at Hume's—behind the portrait?"

"Yes. Locke told her; he was overcome with horror at the murder. He had merely decided to secure the plans, having somehow learned their hiding place. He had no intention of killing Hume."

"But why did Sagon do it?"—he must have had it in mind when he bought the bayonet at Bernstine's," said Pendleton, looking at Ashton-Kirk.

"He had. Do you recall how Burgess' report spoke of a league of smugglers in Europe of which Hume was a leading spirit, and also of how they had been captured and nearly all but Hume were tried and convicted?"

"Yes."

"Sagon was one of those convicted. The diamonds which Hume tried to smuggle into this country were to have been turned into money at the time of the gang's arrest and the proceeds spent in their defence. But instead of doing this, Hume left his comrades to their fate and absconded. When Sagon gained his freedom he began a search for Hume—meaning to have revenge. This search finally led him to Locke as a person who had known Hume, and who would be likely to be able to tell where he could be found."

"Sagon has told you this?" queried Pendleton.

"Yes. He talked freely after he saw that his case was hopeless; and he, too, insisted that Locke did not intend to commit murder. Locke, even at the time of his meeting Sagon, was looking for someone to aid him in gaining possession of the Morris plans. The workshop which we saw beside Locke's house contained a monoplane in course of construction, but there was something lacking which he felt Morris' plans could supply, and so he was anxious to get hold of it by hook or crook.

"Sagon, whose purpose from the first was murder, was not at all averse to combining it with something else. He took the room at Mrs. Marvin's place after he had perceived that an entrance could probably be made at Hume's by way of the scuttle. He said he read 'business guys' that the mechanist on the first floor was about to go, even no doubt. I [illegible] who frequently called upon Sagon and Mr. Morris here, whom the men did not expect of being a [illegible]

To prove the theory that Pendleton had formed and which I have mentioned in a former part of my story, Ashton-Kirk [illegible] Sagon, who he had used as a [illegible] And it turned out as I had thought. Sagon [illegible] Hume had first met [illegible] visiting Locke's, or Hume's, either upon the night of the murder, or last night, I would have prevented it."

Ashton-Kirk nodded kindly; the young man's position evidently appealed to him. But Pendleton sat rather stiffly in his chair and his expression never changed.

"I will now come into possession of whatever value there is in my father's invention," went on Morris, "and added to that, it turns out that the—the other thing, of which I stood so much in fear, has turned out favourably. "But," in a disheartened sort of way, "I don't care much, now that my engagement with Miss Vale is broken."

"Broken!" exclaimed Pendleton.

"I saw her this morning," said Morris. "During the past week," he continued, "it gradually came to me that I was not the sort of man to make her a fitting husband. I had like a squirrel while she faced the dangers that should have been mine. I knew that she realized the situation as well as I, and I did what I could by making it easy for her."

He paused at the door.

"If there is anything that I can do or say in the final settlement of this case," he added, to Ashton-Kirk, "I will gladly place myself at your services, sir. Good-bye."

GOODFELLOWSHIP LEAGUE'S INTERESTING MEETING

The ordinary meeting for men was held in the Princess Theatre yesterday afternoon, under the auspices of the League of Goodfellowship. The subject of Rev. C. Carpenter's address was "Christian Politics: Part II. The Duty of the Individual to the State." After summarizing briefly Part I. "The duty of the State," and repeating that what he said did not apply to any particular church or state, but to Christians of all denominations in all parts of the world, he went on to say that the duty of the individual to the state was put in a crisp form by St. Paul in his injunction to "Fear God, honour the King, love the Brotherhood.' He stated that all history teaches that nations only attained and maintained prosperity, as they have clung to the tenets of the Gospel. Rome, Greece, Egypt, were wonderful centres of greatness and learning, but having no foundation of a moral order, waned and passed away. England is great and grand because she has feared God. That nation is going to flourish and its institutions to prosper that clings firmly to the maxim, "God first, man second". Only as the individual realizes the substratum of the moral code of God, will he be so able to order his life, that it may be a benefit to the state and beneficial to the community in which he lives. You and I must insist upon the men who represent us, fearing God. This is the kernel of all else. Every man must do his own individual part in producing that unity that conduces to the welfare of the state.

Secondly, "Honour the King." We are told to honour the King before loving the brotherhood, because until there is law and order, and until they are enforced, it is impossible for man to do what he wishes for his country. The King is the supreme head, and speaks through his ministers, his judges and his officials, and we must obey the laws of the State, so long as they are not contrary to the will of God.

Public opinion rules the standard of progress, and as the combination of individual opinion, makes public opinion; it is your voice to the King proclaiming power and force.

Third, Love the Brotherhood, is another form of our duty towards our neighbour. Every little grievance should not be brought before the law, as they can be settled in a simpler way. Our brother should be considered in his opinions and feelings, and when a man loves his brother he will look after him, as well as he looks after himself.

It is the duty of the State and of the individual, whilst not neglecting the present, to have an eye for the distant future. Unless the future is considered and provided for, then God help that country in the days of dearth and famine.

Discord and difficulty in the future is the result of the policy which says "Let things alone so long as I am well provided for."

In conclusion, he urged his hearers to study Canada in all its vastness. Learn the fundamental laws necessary for the proper dealing with its problems. Infuse your best into the national progress, and if this is not realized by governors, and governed, then the Dominion must follow in the bitter steps of Greece and Rome.

Mr. A. Bogstrom sang "The Children's Home."

TWO MODEST ATHLETES.

Famous British Oarsmen Have Visited Canada—Unassuming Persons.

The British amateur oarsmen appear to be unique figures in the athletic world. They are among the few men who have been prominent on the sporting pages of the world without contracting the advertising habit, and when Hon. Rupert Guinness visited Toronto a few weeks ago he was not preceded by announcements nor did he try to get into the public eye. When interviewed, it was as a politician that he expressed himself, and talked of colonial preference and tariff reform instead of speaking the last word regarding the sporting events of the moment. In fact, it seems hard for Canadians to believe that a man who had twice won the Diamond Sculls could be so modest. Hon. Rupert Guinness is one of England's gentleman athletes, and his stalwart figure and quick movements indicate the benefits of the life he has led. It may be added that he has not confined his career to taking part in and talking about athletics, for he is now a Unionist member of Parliament, and has also served as a soldier.

His quiet coming and departure recall the visit of Mr. Vivian Nickalls, another famous English oarsman who was present at the Canadian Henley in 1908. He came with a crew which he had been coaching in the United States, and had been at the course for a day before it became known that one of the finest oarsmen of the day was present. Mr. Nickalls did not make himself conspicuous, neither did he talk of the superiority of the English style or the English oarsmen.

There is a story told concerning him which indicates that he had no thought of adopting that attitude. A week before the races at St. Catharines, a Canadian sculler had fallen out of his boat while taking part in the Olympic races in England. A sporting man was making fun of the showing which Toronto oarsmen had made in England on various occasions, and remarked to Mr. Nickalls: "I suppose you Englishmen think we are very foolish to take such long trips to learn to row?"

"Perhaps we are especially justified in thinking that when you carry off some of our pet trophies," replied the British oarsman ironically.

Keep Out.

An invention has been completed for what many thought to be impossible, namely, an indicator to reveal the number of the 'phone where the receiver is taken down while a conversation is taking place. Subscribers to rural 'phones know that there are always one or two people that are always interested in other people's business and frequently their presence may be known by the click of the receiver as it is taken from the holder. This indication will not only indicate when a third person comes on the line, but when they come off.—Tiverton Watchman.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

HERE'S a suggestion for the young person who is apt to be impatient when father or mother doesn't readily understand something, and who, instead of gently explaining things as she would do to her girl friends, snaps them up with "I've told you that four times already" — or something like that.

The little stenographer lady contributed the suggestion. She says she has been a victim of the habit, but isn't ever going to be again. Personally, I believe she never really was.

"It all came over me in a flash the other night," she says. "It was just before Christmas. I'd been up until one o'clock the night before, working my head off to finish something that had to go away. I'd skipped my lunch to do some final shopping. I'd had a terrifically long hard day at the office and I came home that night, so dead tired that my head felt all confused and queer.

"Well, after supper, mother was doing up presents for me and I was trying to write one or two Christmas cards. Every now and then, she'd ask me who was to have the lace jabot or if I'd written the card to go with Aunt Eliza's sofa pillow and I was that tired that each time it actually took me two or three minutes to get it through my head what she wanted.

"And all at once it came over me that that was the way of it. Don't you see? They've had a long day of it and it's toward evening and they're tired and they just can't think as quickly as they could when it was morning.

"Why when I thought of it that way, I just couldn't see how I ever got short and impatient even when father asked me something four times in one evening or when mother insisted on getting the girls names all mixed up. It just seemed incredible that I could ever have been anything but patient."

If we stopped to think much about them, most of the unkind things we all do would seem really incredible to us, wouldn't they?

It's all because we don't stop to consider, to put ourselves in their place, "to think."

Of course that's a shade better than intentional unkindness, but—well, let's recall a favourite verse of mine, whose warning, if heeded, I believe would reduce the unhappiness in the world by about half.

"Much evil is wrought by want of thought
As well as by want of heart."

THE FRIEND OF MAN IS PARISIAN SAGE

No man likes to look older than he is. Every woman on earth absolutely abhors such a condition. You may be 30 in years, but if you are bald-headed or grey, people will surely take you to be many years older and you will be helpless to prevent.

Dandruff is the root of all hair evils. If it were not for the little destructive germs working with a persistency worthy of a better cause, there would be no baldness.

Parisian Sage, America's greatest hair restorer, will keep you looking young and attractive.

It is guaranteed to make hair grow and stop falling hair; to cure dandruff in two weeks; to stop itching of the scalp almost instantly.

Parisian Sage is the most invigorating, satisfying and pleasant hair dressing made; it makes the hair soft, luxuriant and handsome; it is especially praised by women who have beautiful hair. Parisian Sage is for sale by all druggists, 50 cents a large bottle or postpaid from The Giroux Mfg. Co., Fort Erie, Ont. The girl with the Auburn hair is on every bottle. Sold and guaranteed by Wm. Madill.

Y. W. C. A. NOTES

Miss Blodgett of Detroit, who is at the Y.W.C.A., conducting a two weeks' series of Bible studies, gave a most forceful address yesterday afternoon at the Murray St. Church. The deepest interest was instanced throughout by the audience which filled the church. Miss Blodgett is giving character studies on "The Women of the Bible." Yesterday Sara was studied; to-morrow at 3.30 at the Y.W.C.A. Ruth will be gone over. All are cordially invited to hear this able teacher.

Will all intending to join Judge Huycke's Class at the Y.W.C.A. be present if possible to-morrow evening. This will be the initiative study to "In Memoriam," and a most interesting and important one, as the whole poem will be introduced in outline that the class may more intelligently enter on the study of this great poem. GETTING INTO CANADA.

Robert Barr Misrepresents In Order to Make Magazine "Copy."

In one of his latest stories Robert Barr brings his hero, Lord Stranleigh, to Canada, where he has an amusing experience with the Immigration officer. The trouble with the incident is that it could not have happened, and the officials at Montreal and elsewhere are annoyed. Mr. Barr represents Stranleigh as traveling with his valet and bearing with him letters of introduction to bankers in Montreal, Toronto and New York. At Montreal he met with an experience which made him wonder if he were within the boundaries of the British Empire. No doubt he will be excused by many because of the purpose he had in view in making protest against one feature of the Canadian regulations governing the admission of emigrants, but he quite failed to master his facts. He describes the immigration official as being the man who had discovered that on several occasions immigrants, assisted by their friends, had traveled first-class instead of second or third in order to escape the restrictions set up against the admission of paupers. This is where Mr. Barr goes astray. No man would pay $40 or $50 extra in passage money in order to avoid the necessity of possessing $25 on landing. But Mr. Barr had to create this kind of situation in order to bring Lord Stranleigh, "the richest man in the world," up against one of our immigration officials. And so the official, little knowing the man he was dealing with, tackled his lordship.

"Do you possess twenty-five dollars?" asked the official sternly of the richest man in England, who gave the name of Edmund Trevelyan.

"I've got two dollars," answered Stranleigh, "or perhaps sixpence less since my last bottle of Bass."

"Are you a farm laborer?" was the next question.

"I have occasionally worked upon a farm, but I never made any money at it."

"Did you earn the money that paid your passage?"

"Well, now that you corner me, I can't say that I did."

"Were you assisted by friends, or did you come over through the help of any charity?"

"Through the charity of old George Selwyn I received some assistance."

"Then you must go back."

"I intend to."

"If you have a return ticket why didn't you say so?"

"Because I didn't take a return ticket. I sail for England in a month or two via New York.

"Merely came this way to view the scenery?" suggested the officer.

"Exactly. Still, I hope to get some assistance when I land. I carry letters to people over here."

"You won't land," said the guardian of his country with decision. "The Dominion expects every man to pay his own way, and we consider it servile for anyone to accept outdoor relief. You flash up twenty-five dollars or else stay aboard this ship."

"I agree with you," said Stranleigh, "that that's a very good spirit to work on."

He dug down into his pockets and fished up some Canadian money, which he counted.

"I find I have only a dollar and eighty cents. That last bottle of beer has wrecked me. What do you suggest?"

"I don't suggest; I order. It's you for the raging main once more. I've caught several of your tribe already."

"Ah! I understand now why Lord Kitchener avoided Canada and came home through the United States. Horatio Herbert Kitchener is a wise man, and there are not more things in heaven and earth, Horatio, than are dreamt of in your philosophy."

The young man glanced to the rear.

"Ponderby," he said quietly.

The deferential valet stepped forward.

"How much money have you?"

Ponderby had been trained to substitute "sir" for "my lord."

"I have about a thousand dollars in currency, sir, and the letter of credit for ten thousand."

"Bring hither the wherewithal and crush this official. Perhaps we can both crawl into Canada under cover of our ill-gotten gains."

Good—Though Live—Indian.

An interesting sidelight on an Indian of Western Canada was discovered by a party of Ontario men a short time ago at a Hudson Bay post on the Saskatchewan River.

Feeling hospitably inclined, the members of the party brought up the stock of tobacco in the store and started distributing it among the noble redmen. The latter, of course, eagerly accepted the gifts of the weed, and, as news of the good fortune spread among the Indians in the vicinity of the store, more and more of them came trooping in.

Among the newer arrivals was an old Indian of striking appearance, and to him also the visitors offered tobacco. To their surprise he made a motion declining it, and, thinking that perhaps the old man was doing so through imagining that he would need to pay for it, the Easterners asked an interpreter to explain that the tobacco was being offered free.

"It's no use offering it to him," said the interpreter with a laugh. "He won't take it. He belongs to the Plymouth Brethren."

Telling of the incident, one of the party said, "I wouldn't have been more surprised if we had been told that the old Indian belonged to the Salvation Army."

Cool Reception.

This one hails from Ottawa and goes back the few days to Hallowe'en. In answer to the hopeful, insistent calls of a gang of youngsters, an upstair window of the house under attack was opened, and the head of the head of the house was thrust forth. "How many are there of you?" asked the householder, and the revellers eagerly informed him that they numbered seven. The head was withdrawn, but soon reappeared, saying, "Well, share that among you." "That" was a pail of cold water.

Her gait was clumsy, awkward, slow,

PAINTED THE BUST.

Caretaker Renewed Statuette of Laura Secord and Caused Sensation.

Drummond Hill Cemetery—or, as it is known to tourists, the battleground of Lundy's Lane—has undergone a remarkable and pleasing change since it passed under the protectorate of the Queen Victoria Niagara Falls Park Commission. The rank growth of wild shrubs, weeds, and tall grass has been cut away, bare spots sodded, walks of finely crushed stone laid, and an ornamental wire fence encloses this at one time most utterly neglected and reproachful of all God's acres in the province.

Many neglected graves have been made to look as though they received decent remembrance—graves of martyred patriots, soldiers, and statesmen have been marked, and even the far-down corner pointed out as "Potter's Field," where the unknown dead, gathered from the river, lie in unmarked graves, has been made less forlorn looking, and more like a place where they bury human beings.

Tottering stones, moss-grown and leaning with fearful slant over the mounds and sunken graves, have been straightened up, cleaned, and both mound and depression made one common level.

All this work has been done under the supervision of the time-honored sexton of Drummond Hill, and he takes an excusable pride in the work. He bestowed especial pains upon one historic spot—sacred to him as it is to all of us—the grave of Laura Secord, and in his zeal precipitated the one grim tragedy of the work of "restoration," that will haunt him to his dying day.

The sexton did not like the looks of the dull bronze, with its gun-metal finish. He did not sufficiently admire, perhaps, "sculptured marble and enduring bronze," to appreciate its classic significance—not then, but he does now. However, he decided to make a change in the complexion of not only the face, but the whole bust of the classic memorial that marks the resting place of the heroine of Beaverdams—to improve, in short, on the art of Miss Mildred Peel, the sculptress! So, one day not long ago, the well-meaning and delightfully innocent sexton got a brush and some nice lamp black and aluminum paint. He treated the flowing drapery of the figure to a sombre tone of black, and illuminated the features with the aluminum. The effect was startling!

When the last stroke of this now, alas! lost art had been drawn over the surprised-looking features of the heroine the sexton stepped back and admired his handiwork. It satisfied him thoroughly. He called several friends to see the transformation. Most of them came to admire and remained to swear. The sexton was not prepared for criticism, and he expostulated with the dissenters from his school of art. In vain he pointed out the advantages over wear and tear he had applied with his brush; the storm of disapprov grew in violance.

Passersby on the street below the rise of ground on which the memorial stands would stop and look in wonderment at the unusual change that had come over the figure on the hillside. Then they climbed the fence for closer inspection, and joined the crowd that was growing bigger—and it was not a very solemn crowd at that.

When the shades of night fell there was a falling off in the attendance. Later on the moon shed its pale light on the scene, and this only heightened the ghostly effect and increased the prejudice against the sexton's artistic temperament.

Seeing that the change was so decidedly objectionable, and by this time disgusted with the lack of appreciation of his artistic efforts, the sexton on the next day, with much labor, took the bust down from its pedestal, and removed it to a quiet corner of the graveyard, where he succeeded, after infinite trouble, in removing the objectionable tints and restoring the memorial to its classic beauty.

A Chip of the Old Block.

Men who, after starting life without a cent, have accumulated a fortune, delight in lecturing the rising generation on the way it was done. Their advice may not be an accurate description of their own work, but it is always highly edifying. A short time ago a well-known Torontonian who has made a success both financially and as a philanthropist, was tendered a dinner by his employes. When the time came for speech-making, he told the young men how to succeed. He took himself as an example. How had he achieved the position which he now held? He always valued education. The first dollar he saved, he put into a book. That fact alone was the secret of his success in life.

When he sat down, leaving all those at the table duly edified, his son, who had enjoyed the privileges of the wealthy, followed with a dashing address in which he referred to the first speaker. "I am a chip off the old block," he announced. "I know how the governor made good, and so at a very early age I decided to go and do likewise. Later on I carried out my resolve. The first dollar I got, I put into a book, too, and I may add that the bookie has it still."

Cap Should Be Inanimate.

There's a dear old gentleman who presides over the infant class of a certain prominent Toronto church, and incidentally furnishes his assistants with a deal of amusement by his lively humor, which is, of course, beyond the comprehension of the class whose minds they are endeavoring to train along the straight and narrow way. Not long since, one of the most strenuous of these infants was twirling his cap restlessly and attracting too much attention from the other infants, when the old gentleman exclaimed with fervor:

"Johnny, put your cap down, it won't run away." Then, with less fervor and more humor, he added "At least I hope it won't."

The Only Way.

"I'd give anything to know his past life."

"Get him to run for office."—Lippincott's.

Air You Breathe.

The air breathed daily by a person weighs thirty-four pounds—about six times as much as the food and drink consumed in the same time.

Greatest Whispering Gallery.

The Mormon tabernacle in Salt Lake City is the most perfect whispering gallery in the world. The dropping of a pin into a silk hat at one end of the huge structure is distinctly heard at the other end.

Napoleon's Toy Cannon.

Napoleon's first plaything was a toy cannon. Later in life he declared that the whole course of his life was determined by that toy.

England's First Census.

Britain's house of lords was for nearly half a century an implacable opponent of a census of the population, fearing a growth of sentiment politically antagonistic to the landed aristocracy as the result of the disclosure of the rapid growth of the commercial cities and manufacturing towns. The first census of English, in 1810, revealed a total population of 8,992,536.

Fiddler's Velvet Crab.

The fiddler's velvet crab is very ferocious and derives its name from the plushlike feel of its upper surface, which is densely covered with short silky hairs.

Apple Trees in Tasmania.

Tasmanians plant apple trees close together. The average orchard is set out ten feet apart instead of twenty or forty feet, and as many as 600 bushels are sometimes gathered from a single acre.

The Hardy Goat.

The goat because of its hardy nature is less liable to tuberculosis than the cow. It utilises food better and gives more milk, considering its bodily weight. Goats prefer hilly ground and do not do so well on low, swampy ground. They need protection against cold rains and must be well housed.

Gas Mantles.

When gas mantles are blackened they can be cleared by sprinkling with salt when the flame is turned low. Turn the light full for a minute and repeat until clear.

Basking Sharks.

Seventeen species of sharks, some of them twenty-five feet in length, inhabit the far eastern seas, while the basking shark of the Indian ocean frequently attains a length of fifty feet.

Belgium's Sea Front.

The sea front of Belgium, which extends about forty miles, stretching from Holland to France, is paved almost entirely for the entire length and forms one huge, wide ocean boulevard. And this, by the way, is the most productive of public works in the kingdom.

Metal Pans.

Although the first American patent for a metal pan was granted to a Baltimorean in 1810, it was half a century later that the industry began to flourish.

Gold Pen Tips.

Osmium is a metal, interesting as being the heaviest known, and has a specific gravity of 22.447. It was discovered in 1803 by Tennant as an alloy of iridium in platinum ores. The metal is rare and is not used in the arts. The alloy of osmium and iridium (known as osmiridium) resists the action of acids and is used for the tips of gold pens.

"I suppose you would like to have a customer with a figure like the Apollo Belvedere."

"No," answered the tailor. "Handsome men aren't always the best pay. I'd rather have one with a figure like Croesus."

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

BELLEVILLE TEAM HERE ON THURSDAY NIGHT

First Home Game in the Intermediate Series Will be Played This Week and Should be Well Worth Seeing---Belleville Team Held Trenton to a 7 to 6 Score and is Very Strong.

The first home game of the season in the intermediate series will be played on Thursday night of this week when Doc. Gilbert's Belleville seven will clash with the Peterborough team in what should prove a most interesting game. The Petes are not to be judged on Friday night's game in Trenton. They were crippled to start with and did not at any time show their true form. They will be in much better shape for Thursday night's game and ready to give the invaders from Belleville a merry battle for the honours. The septette from the Bay of Quinte district is not to be despised, however, as they held Trenton to a 7 to 6 score and were ahead of the Speed Boys by 5 to 2 at the half. They will make Peterborough extend themselves to the limit. The locals must win this game to keep in the running and must also trim Trenton here. Realizing this fact they will take no chances and will have the strongest line-up possible on Thursday night. It will be a good game of hockey beyond a doubt and there should be a big crowd on hand to see the opening game of the series. Belleville and Peterborough are tied for second place in the district and the Petes have got to land this game. The standing in this district is as follows:

	Won	Lost	To P'ly
Trenton	2	0	4
Peterborough	1	1	4
Belleville	1	1	4
Cobourg	0	2	4

PETERBOROUGH'S CHANCES IN THE INTERMEDIATE SERIES

District Looks to be Between Trenton and the Locals with Belleville Not Out of the Running However---Petes Must Win All Their Home Games.

The battle for this district in the intermediate series would seem to be between Trenton and Peterborough, although Belleville is by no means out of the race yet. However, the Bay of Quinte team lost a lap by reason of being beaten on their own ice by Trenton, and from all appearances will have a hard time to win it back to come here and also go to Cobourg, where, from all indications they are assured of a warm reception. The intense rivalry between Cobourg and Trenton which culminated in three of Trenton's players being disabled will not make matters a bed of roses for the Trenton aggregation when they tackle Cobourg at home. If both Peterborough and Trenton win all their remaining games they will be tied for the district. The three crucial games come the week after next; that is if Peterborough wins from Belleville here and Trenton beats Cobourg in Trenton. On Tuesday the 24th the Trenton team will play here. A win for Trenton will give them the district; a win for Peterborough will leave matters in a very interesting condition. Both teams play away from home on the following Friday, Trenton in Cobourg and Peterborough in Belleville. A win for Peterborough and a loss for Trenton would give Peterborough the district; a win for Trenton and a loss for Peterborough would give Trenton the district; if both teams win the district is tied up; if both teams lose the result is the same. All of which goes to show that there will be some fireworks and a merry bunch of excitement before the battle in this district is over. It looks like the most interesting race in years and every game is of supreme importance.

Former Peterborough Ball Player Will be Taken South by the Leafs

BIG CROWD WILL GO WITH GRILLERS TO LINDSAY

Special Train Leaves Grand Trunk Station at 7:10---Game Should be Well Worth Seeing as Lindsay Will Have a Stronger Line-up.

The Grillers who have been temporarily in the background for the past week while the intermediates occupied the centre of the stage, will come into action again to-morrow night when they play the return engagement with the Lindsay Midgets. They will be accompanied to Lindsay by a big crowd of fans who are going up by special G. T. R. train, which leaves here at 7.10 sharp. The Grillers have a very big following, the great showing they have made so far in the O.H.A. winning them a host of friends, and they will not lack for supporters to-morrow night when they hook up with Cap Simpson's aggregation. Although Lindsay was badly beaten here the week before last they will be a much more formidable aggregation on their own ice, and the game should be well worth seeing. A Lindsay trip is always popular and a large number of fans have signified their intention of going up to-morrow night.

LINDSAY STRONG

Midgets Will Have a Better Team To-morrow Night

The game next Tuesday night between the fast Peterborough juniors and the Lindsay juniors will be well worth attending. The Lindsay line-up will be the strongest yet, and Peterborough will find a snag confronting them when they run up against the forwardline from Lindsay. The Peterborough fans will be here on a special train.—Lindsay Warder.

Lindsay will have on the strongest junior line-up possible Tuesday night to meet the Peterborough juniors. It will be no runaway for the team from the east. — Lindsay Warder.

GRILLERS' LINE-UP

McMartin Will Take the Place of Sorel at Right Wing

The management of the Peterborough Junior O. H. A. has selected Jimmy McMartin to fill the vacancy at right wing on the Griller's line-up, caused by the fact that Sorel is not eligible owing to having played two intermediate games. McMartin weighs 155 pounds and works for the hour at top speed. The club is very fortunate in its spares, as in McMartin, Anderson and Pratt they have a trio who are ready and fit to jump into a vacancy at any time. The line-up for to-morrow night's game at Lindsay will be as follows:

Goal—Patterson.
Point—Reynolds, capt.
Cover—Heffernan.
Rover—Coughlin.
Centre—Hall.
Spares—Anderson, Pratt.

All these men are expected out to practice to-night.

It was rough in spots and featured by the stellar work of the two goal keepers, Hughes for the Toronto-Nova Scotia and Sawers for the Montreal

The return game will likely be played on the 26th. The two Chemong teams are very evenly matched.

Submarine With Crew Of Twenty Cannot Be Raised To Surface

Special wire to The Examiner:

Wiel, Germany, Jan 17. Intense [illegible] of a safety [illegible] excitement here this morning when one of the newest submarines of the Naty sank to bottom without warning with the crew of twenty men aboard, and was unable to raise to the surface. Communication was maintained with the submerged crew by means of a safety [illegible] apparatus attached to a buoy floating on the water. All wrecking apparatus here so far has been unable to raise the vessel, but the crew of the submarine are all alive and hopeful of rescue. British and other foreign warships near the harbour offered assistance.

TWO KILLED IN A BOILER EXPLOSION

Special to The Examiner.

NEW YORK, N.Y., JAN. 17.—Word was caught here by wireless that seven were killed and two injured on the battleship Deleware by a boiler explosion within the last twenty-four hours. The Delaware is in Atlantic somewhere on the way to Hampton Roads. It is understood that the victims were imprisoned in the boiler room and scalded to death without a chance to escape.

MR. WILLIAM BUNTON HAS PASSED AWAY

Mr. Wm. Bunton, for the past fourteen years up-town ticket agent for the Grand Trunk Railway in Peterborough, passed away this morning in Toronto, at the residence of his sister, Mrs. Bilder, where he was removed on Thursday of last week. The intelligence of his death will cause genuine grief in Peterborough where few men were better known, more liked or more highly respected. His constant cheerfulness and amiability enabled him to make friends with everyone with whom he came into contact and his passing away will be deeply regretted.

The late Mr. Bunton was fifty-one years of age and was born in Burlington, Ont., where he received his earlier education. After leaving school he taught school at Milton for a short time and then went to Belleville, where he took a course in the Belleville Business College, and came to Peterborough about the year 1884, and entered the employment of the late Thomas Bradburn, to whom he acted as book-keeper. From Peterborough he went to St. Louis, but returned to this city in 1892, and had lived here continuously with the exception of 1895, when he went to Hastings, where he was employed as grain buyer by Messrs. Fowlds. In 1897 he was appointed as City Ticket agent for the Grand Trunk Railway at Peterborough, which position he occupied until his death.

The deceased had not been in the best of health for the past two years but his condition did not grow serious until a couple of months ago, when he was confined to the house. He, however, was enabled to be out occasionally, but a short time ago he had a paralytic stroke, which was followed by another on Sunday last. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity. He was unmarried. Four sisters and one brother survive, some of whom reside in Peterborough.

FARMERS' BANK CREDITORS HOLD WARM MEETING

TORONTO, JAN. 17.—Shareholders from all parts of Ontario and of all classes of the community were crowded into the defunct Farmers' Bank head office this morning, when Liquidator Clarkson called the meeting to order. Clarkson explained that it was to be a creditors' meeting with shareholders meeting again this afternoon. He read over the statement already sent to those interested. When the liquidator mentioned preferred claims and first ranking of note issue, one creditor in the back of the room said "that's the biggest outrage in the whole community." It seemed to be the general opinion that a double liability call would be necessary.

ENCOURAGING PROSPECTS FOR THE 57th BAND

Annual Meeting of the Organization Was Held Last Night—Vote of Thanks to Old Members Who Have Retired.

OFFICERS ELECTED

Exactly forty members attended the annual meeting of the 57th Regimental Band last night, in the band hall and the enthusiasm and interest shown presage big things for the organization during the year that is commencing.

The Treasurer's report presented indicated a most gratifying state of affairs. The gross receipts were nearly $4,000, and after all expenses had been paid there was a balance of $443 on the right side of the ledger to start the year with.

The prospects for the coming year are exceptionally bright, not only as regards the prospective earning power of the band, but also the efficiency of its members. Nearly a round dozen of new men in the city, who are experienced musicians, are available, and the band this year will have the unique experience of choosing its instrumentalists, instead of accepting all comers. The two drummers of the band, Messrs. R. Beach and R. Chambers, who have been forced to resign from the organization on account of their connection with local theatres were tendered a most hearty vote of thanks by the members for their long service with the band. Mr. Beach having been a member for thirty years, and Mr. Chambers, for twenty-three years.

Mr. Gliddon was re-engaged as leader at a salary of $600, and was given a vote of thanks for his services.

The following officers were elected:
President—E. Cronk (acclamation).
Vice-President—Angus McPherson.
Secretary—J. A. Harper (accl.)
Treasurer—R. Shelton, (accl.)
Ex.-Com.—R. Mein, chairman; C. Westbrooke, F. C. Miller, C. Wesley, J. Beyette.
Librarian—E. Cronk.
Asst. Librarian—Messrs. Myles and Hanrahan.

WANT $1,000 TO BUY BOOKS FOR THE LIBRARY

A deputation from the Public Library Board, consisting of Messrs. E. H. D. Hall, Duncan Walker, and T. F. Matthews, waited on the Property Committee of the City Council last evening, with the request for a grant of one thousand dollars, for the purpose of replacing books that have been lost, repairing and also procuring new ones. Mr. Walker explained that some of the books were in very bad shape, and it was the desire of the Board that they open the new Library with books in fairly good order. In regard to the reference library, the present equipment was not up to date. There was no great number of reference books, and there are practically no technical books. If the library opens without the latter the working man who wants a book and cannot get it will go away and say the library is no good. Mr. Walker compared the number of books in libraries in towns about the size of Peterborough, showing the number in the latter to be much fewer than in the majority of places. The granting of $1,000 now would mean less in the annual grant.

It was moved by Ald. Morgan, and seconded by Ald. Bradburn, that the committee recommend to the Council the payment of $1,000 to the Library Board.

WORTH MOUNTAINS OF GOLD

During Change of Life, says Mrs. Chas. Barclay

Granitville, Vt.—"I was passing through the Change of Life and suffered from nervousness and other annoying symptoms, and I can truly say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has proved worth mountains of gold to me, as it restored my health and strength. I never forget to tell my friends what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me during this trying period. Complete restoration to health means so much to me that for the sake of other suffering women I am willing to make my trouble public so you may publish this letter."—Mrs. Chas. Barclay, R.F.D., Granitville, Vt.

No other medicine for woman's ills has received such wide-spread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine we know of has such a record of cures of female ills as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

For more than 30 years it has been curing female complaints such as inflammation, ulceration, local weaknesses, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration, and it is unequalled for carrying women safely through the period of change of life. It costs but little to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and, as Mrs. Barclay says, it is "worth mountains of gold" to suffering women.

REFORESTRY IN SPOTS.

We are inclined to expect a great deal from the Dominion Government Conservation Commission; but even that great body cannot work miracles. It can only succeed in its mission by the practical co-operation of the provinces and the people. It is all very well to demand conservation of our forest resources, and the practical application of a system of reforestry, but these are other things, in their way of equal importance. Throughout the longer occupied districts of older Ontario, there is a great dearth of forest plots. On some farms, even in the vicinity of Peterborough, there is not a square rood of woodland. This condition even in a scenic sense, in a restricted area, is undesirable. The absence of trees represents the absence of the sylvan charm of the landscape, coferred by clumps and belts of trees. But what is more serious, this woodless condition extending over large areas has a climatic effect, injurious to agricultural operations, lessening rain fall, both in volume and regularity, and leaving the unsheltered soil exposed to wash-outs, and aiding the rain fall to rush off in swollen streams, instead of being stored in the natural reservoirs formed by forest land, and trickling out beneficially and by degrees. On every farm, almost, there are from one to many acres of waste land unfit for anything but the growing of trees; and in many places there are large areas of country, unfit for agriculture, which might profitably, in many ways, be planted to trees. The Provincial government should take an active part in the work of reforestry. If it would show an interest, and set an example, conditions might be created that would result in the planting of trees on every foot of farm and other land that cannot be profitably employed otherwise. If this were done the face of the country would be changed: the climate would be improved; the rainfall improved; the scenic effects would be improved and there would be an all round improvement of incalculable importance.

BENEFIT OF DETRACTION.

There is a slang saying, more expressive than elegant — "every 'knock' is a 'boost'"—which seems to apply specially to slanders of Canada, and especially the Canadian West. We expect our United States rivals to draw the long bow. They are inclined to do so on almost every subject; but we particularly expect them to misrepresent Western Canada, which is rapidly robbing them of the cream of their Western farmers. But the lies told in the name of a reckless patriotism and self-interest have no effect. The stream of immigration from the United States continues to flow in. We hardly expect similar, treatment, however, from "John Bull," whether he be of the figurative type or the publication of that name is to be considered. In a recent issue of "John Bull" appeared an article so grossly and iniquitiously false on the face of it that Sir Wilfrid Lanrier, in closing the discussion on it in Parliament, truly said that its malice was "so apparent that it could hardly do any harm." This article, or others of its kind, which have previously appeared, have, apparently, "hardly done any harm." The Canadian receipts of immigration from Great Britain are steadily growing. In a table printed in yesterday's issue it was shown that the total of immigration from Great Britain to oCanada, which was, in 1908, only 41,455, grew to 42,378, in 1909, and in the eleven months of 1910 reached the large figures of 118,452, or nearly a three fold increase in two years. Thus, it appears, that detraction of Canada's resources, conditions and opportunities is only another successful form of advertising. Detraction suggests investigation, and that so effectively explodes the slanders that the reaction in sentiment, intensifies the favourable opinion of Canada as a home and a happy release from the hampering conditions that prevent growth expansion and home making in the old land. Canada cannot be checked by detraction, either by John Bull or Uncle Sam.

THE CHIEF'S REPORT.

The first annual report of Chief Thompson, head of our police force, appears in to-day's issue. It has several features of interest. We learn from it that Peterborough is, so far as the police records go, becoming more moral. The record of misdemeanours and crimes dealt with shows that last year these totalled 480 as against 510 in 1909. The majority of these cases were of trifling character, an evidence that the city is peopled by law abiding citizens.

But it is to be remarked that more cases might have been entered by the police force with distinct advantage. It was to be noted last season that the law relating to the destruction of noxious weeds was greatly ignored. On one vacant lot in the centre of the city a magnificent crop of burdocks matured without police or other molestation. Every day the seeds of these, attached to the fur of vagrant dogs, is carried away and distributed to every part of the city, to establish hundreds of new centres of weed distribution. This adds another indictment to the list that can be placed against the vacant lot,—inadequately taxed and still growing in value from the enterprise and surroundings of those in the vicinity.

Another satisfactory feature of the record is, that during the year, the police affixed only two diphtheria placards and thirty-two scarlet fever placards. The value of this record depends, however, upon whether pyhsicians did their duty in regard to reporting cases that came under their professional notice.

But that does not indicate that there should be the continued neglect of sanitary conditions such as has obtained in the past. Sanitary inspection, as practiced by the police, has been a good deal of a farce, and necessarily so, too. Chief Thompson points this out in his report. A policeman is employed to serve a notice to the owners of dirty premises to clean them, and no means is available to see whether or not the injunction is obeyed. In the absence of a garbage disposal system, the necessity of improved sanitary inspection becomes more urgent.

Chief Thompson recommends an increase in the police force from five to nine. Five policemen is certainly a small number to patrol a city of nearly three thousand acres or two by two and a half miles in area. As a matter of fact, only a few streets in the business district, are patrolled by the police. The rest of the city, which pays the larger share of the cost of maintaining the police force, is very rarely favoured with the visit of a policeman. Everyone has noticed how the presence of a policeman in an outlying district brings the small boy to his good behaviour. The Examiner has frequently suggested that the occasional visit of a policeman to the residental parts of the city would tend to prevent, the petty depredations which, while not serious in themselves, are often a source of annoyance and loss to the citizens.

Canadian Bank Failures And The Effect On Canadian Public

(Mail and Empire.)

Canada's list of banks failures is attaining dimensions that might be called respectable were it not for the fact that the story of each collapse seems more disgraceful than the last. Looking over the list, no case comes to mind where the folly and criminality of a bank wrecker were so brilliantly combined as in W. R. Travers. The Ontario Bank collapse was a bad affair, but its manager sought to shift some of the blame upon the negligence of directors. The manager of the Farmers' Bank seems content to assume the whole responsibility for the failure, and admits looting the institution in a manner whose boldness is unequalled. It may be that when the full story of the failure comes to light others will be implicated with him, and sinister reasons for his otherwise inexplicable conduct made known.

Favoured Depositors.

One incident of the failure vividly recalls a somewhat similar episode of the failure of the Bank of Ville Marie at Montreal. A gentleman who had a deposit in the Hochelaga branch of the institution was in the bank the very afternoon of the collapse. He saw the manager rush out of the office and hurry up the street. As the depositor was going out he met the manager returning, accompanied by a couple of persons. They went to the counter, chequed out the deposit standing to their credit, and as soon as they had departed the door was closed and a note announcing the suspension was put in the window. These favoured depositors did not profit, however, by the solicitude of the branch manager, for they were compelled to refund the money. This failure was a bad one, and for his share in it the president, Weir, was sent to prison for two years. His punishment, however, was not satisfaction to the depositors, who received little or nothing from the wreck.

Loans to the Family Compact.

Probably the worst of Canadian banking failures was that of the Bank of Upper Canada, which spread shame and ruin from one end of the province to the other. Bad management rather than criminality was responsible for this failure, the cause being tersely described in the words: "Lending money to the Family Compact." The manager and directors of the bank advanced many large sums to men of good family all over the province who desired to engage in business, irrespective of their ability to manage it. The directors apparently thought that blood would tell, and that a gentleman was always a proper person to lend any amount of money to. One after another their enterprises collapsed, and each failure was another blow to the bank. If the bank had confined its operations to Toronto, where at one time, it owned the whole of St. John's Ward, it might have remained solvent. The final collapse followed an insane piece of banking. Drafts amounting to $1,000,000, drawn by local Grand Trunk Railway officials upon London were returned dishonoured, and the Bank of Upper Canada closed its doors.

The Commercial Bank of Kingston.

The Commercial Bank of Kingston was ruined by dealings with the Great Western Railway Company, whose account was permitted to grow from a very small one to the largest on the books of the bank. The railway company raised money in England with which to build a line across the State of Michigan, connecting Detroit and Milwaukee, but soon it needed money faster than it could be secured in the Old Country, and the Commercial Bank very kindly advanced what was needed. When the railway's obligations reached the sum of $1,200,000 the bank called a halt and tried to collect. The obligation was repudiated by the English directors, who alleged that the money had really been borrowed by the Detroit and Milwaukee Railway Company. A lawsuit showed that the borrowers were officials in both companies, and the Great Western was relieved of its responsibility. A run on the bank followed and the doors were closed. Subsequently the depositors were paid in full, and the Merchants Bank purchased the salvage.

Toronto and Montreal Failures.

The Central Bank failure is still fresh in the memory of thousands of citizens who lost their money owing to the manager's practice of lending large sums on insufficient security. The Federal Bank was also closed, but all the creditors were paid in full. The Ontario, Sovereign and Farmers are other instances of criminality or mismanagement that particularly concerned the people of this city. In Montreal, the Mechanics', the Metropolitan, the Exchange, the Consolidated, and the Banque du Peuple left financial scars that took many years to heal. In the case of the Banque du Peuple, a few years of reckless management brought disaster, after half a century's sound banking. The Maritime Bank of St. John and the Commercial Bank of Manitoba are instances of bank failure due to pushing and reckless enterprise. A feature of the failure of most Canadian banks is that the loss is usually spread over a wide area, which is due to the branch bank system. In the United States, generally speaking, the effect of a bank failure is local.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The heart of the Scotchman begins to thump a little faster and the mind to grope among the recesses of gray matter, for stray tags of poetry, as the twenty-fifth of January approaches. This is the one hundred and fifty second anniversary of the proughman poet, Bobbie Burns, who first saw the light in a clay cottage near the old Brig o'Doon on January 25th, 1759.

THE VITALITY OF ANNUITANTS.

The question is often asked: "Why do anuitants live longer, on the average, than other people?" The great factor in the question, of course is, that those people live the longest who have the least worries. It is a truism that worry kills more people than work does. Take from a man the primal worry of existence, the worry about his bread and butter, and you leave his mind free for higher and more healthful activities. Burden a man with the fear of the poorhouse or a destitute old age and you cripple his right arm. A man who is ever saving against the evil days and the lean years, fearful that some storm may break at any time to destroy his hoarded gain, comes often to those same lean years with some substance, but with shattered nerves as well.

For all men and women it is well that the Government has provided a means whereby savings may be laid aside for the future with perfect confidence that they shall be available when old age comes. "I am fearful," says one, "not that I must die, but that I may be a burden on others, in my last days."

A Government Annuity will not solve all such problems, but it will solve, and is solving, many of them.

Ask your Postmaster, or write to the Superintendent, Ottawa, for information.

TO OBTAIN LOWER BUSINESS TAX.

(The Canadian Manufacturer.)

If the rate of taxation on buildings, improvements, business and incomes was lowered, and the aggregate made up by an increased tax on land values, it would work to the greater business prosperity of the municipality where it was carried out, and to the decided advantage of manufacturers and other business men in that municipality.

The experience of Vancouver, Edmonton and other centres where this tax has been lowered or removed entirely, is proof of this statement.

Therefore the work of the Tax Reform League, Toronto, whose aim is to secure sufficient backing to influence the Ontario government to have the Ontario Assessment Act amended so as to allow municipalities to tax buildings, improvements, business assessments and incomes at a lower rate than land values, should receive the hearty support of every manufacturer in Ontario.

This organization, whose secretary is Mr. A. B. Farmer, 75 Yonge street, is sending out a circular calling attention to the following words to the objectionable features of the present Assessment tax:

"The business and income taxes of the present Assessment act are especially objectionable.

"Under the income tax the salaries of the officers of incorporated companies are taxed, while the incomes of the same persons under a partnership would be free. Thus the income tax is in many cases a penalty on a particular form of business organization.

"The business tax, since it is based on the value of the premises occupied is really a double tax on buildings and improvements, and penalizes the building of large, attractive and commodious premises to the detriment of the employes of the building trades and of the general public.

"On the other hand a moderate increase in the tax on the value of all land whether used or unused, inclines the owners to meet the offers of those who desire to develop it, and when coupled with reduction of the building and business tax results in an increase of all productive enterprise.

"So far from being a new radical or revolutionary measure, the plan of allowing municipalities to reduce taxes on building-, business assessments and incomes has been tried for years in New Zealand, New South Wales, and our own province of British Columbia with satisfactory results.

"This measure is eminently conservative since it recognizes that conditions differ in different municipalities and provides that each municipality may alter its system only after due consideration, and on favourable vote of the ratepayers.

"We therefore commend this proposal to business men in the hope that they will consider it in relation to their business interests and support the demand for local taxation."

It is hoped that many manufacturers will help along this movement as far as it is within their power.

IT IS NOT IN THE BLOOD

Medicine Taken Internally Cannot Cure Eczema. It is Caused by Germs

Eczema cannot be overcome by ordinary treatment and the old-fashioned way of dosing the system with drugs. Eczema is caused by a parasitic germ that bores into the skin. It is generally a contagious disease. Until the parasite is completely destroyed and removed, eczema cannot be cured. Fully one-third of skin diseases are in the form of eczema.

We so thoroughly believe that Rexall Eczema Ointment will overcome eczema and allied skin ailments, that we unhesitatingly promise to promptly return the money paid us for it should it in any way be unsatisfactory to the user.

Because of its remarkable cleansing, antiseptic, germicidal, soothing and healing influence, Rexall Eczema Ointment has a very pronounced value in the treatment of skin diseases, especially where the form of ailment is of the chronic, aggravating sort. We highly recommend it for the dry scaly form or the weeping type, where there is a constant flow of ill-smelling excretion.

Rexall Eczema Ointment is very prompt in relieving pimples, blotches, skin discolourations, ringworm, acne, nettle rash, tetter, hives, ulcers, insect bites and for healing sores and wounds. It is a pleasant smelling grayish-white ointment, and is very cleanly for use. Two sizes, 50c. and $1.00. POST CARD COLUMN

Peterborough, Jan. 16th. 1911.

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I was certainly delighted with the letter of the president of the Brotherhood of St. Paul, advocating a reform in the system of taration in our city and with the prominence you so generously gave to it in your last issue.

I believe a Tax Reorm League should be formed independent of our Council or Board of Trade, because it is claimed and with considerable foundation that those two bodies are controlled by vacant land holders.

If this assertion is not correct let us hear them discuss the question and the idea of deciding it by plebiscite. I would suggest that the Trades and Labour Council also take up this matter.

This body might be of some benefit to the city if they will only wake up and not go to sleep again until our next municipal elections. If they will not show more evidence of their sincerity I would advise that they apply for a franchise for the distribution of hot air.

Municipal government by commission. This question could be handled at the same time. You, Mr. Editor, from time to time have tried to wake the citizens to the fact that if we wish to remain in the swim with the other progressive cities of Canada we will have to make some independent move along these lines.

In former years it has been the custom to waste good money by sending deputations to investigate the workings of new schemes of municipal government in other places and they have always found that owing to conditions and circumstances schemes that were beneficial in some localities would be detrimental to others.

Are we always going to wait for the other fellow to make the move. Individually some may be losers, but such is always the case in matters of this kind. Collectively I believe the citizens have everything to gain.

Let us all get busy and take this matter up. Surely we have men amongst us that have independence enough to advocate these reforms and if adopted, sufficient backbone to carry them out.

Yours truly,
RATEPAYER.

"ASHTON-KIRK, INVESTIGATOR"

CHAPTER XXVI.

THE FINISH

"For the first time," said Pendleton, as the door closed upon Allan Morris, "I can feel sorry for him. To lose a girl like Edyth Vale is indeed a calamity. Think of the courage she's shown—of what she was willing to do. Why, Kirk, she's one in ten thousand."

ButAshton-Kirk only nodded: he had arisen upon the departure of Morris, and was now drawing on a pair of gloves. The splendid qualities of Miss Vale apparently had little appeal for him at that moment.

"Are you ready?" he asked, in a business-like way.

"Ready?" repeated Pendleton, surprised.

"To be sure. We can scarcely call this case complete until something has been done in the matter of Locke."

"That's so. But, somehow, I had the notion that your men had already attended to him.

"I always prefer to finish my work in my own way," said the investigator. "Osborne, as soon as he heard of Locke, through Sagon, wanted to take up the trail. But I convinced him that he'd better leave it to me."

Pendleton clapped on his hat.

"I'm with you," said he, "but where do you expect to find him?"

Ashton-Kirk rang for Stumph and ordered the car; then he replied:

"We'll more than likely find him at home. Burgess followed him back to Cordova, last night."

They went down and climbed into the car, and were soon on the road.

A little distance from the Mercer Institute they came upon a compact looking man seated upon the top rail of a fence, much-splashed boots and a sun-scorched suit of clothes.

"Ah," said Ashton-Kirk, "I see Burgess is still on the job."

"Burgess," echoed Pendleton. He looked at the man upon the fence in surprise; except for the very broad shoulders there was no resemblance.

However, Burgess grinned amiably through a rather neglected growth of beard.

"I expected you along about this time," said he, to the investigator. "Is everything all right?" asked Ashton-Kirk.

"He's still there," answered Burgess, and he nodded toward a house with a peaked and slated roof which stood some little distance up an intersecting road. It was the same house through the window of which Pendleton had seen Edyth Vale some nights previously, but, somehow, it seemed strange and unfamiliar in day light.

"I can see three sides of it from here," went on Burgess. "And if he dropped out of one of the windows on the fourth side I could sight him before he'd gone fifty yards. You may be sure he's there, all right."

"You've heard of what took place last night, I suppose."

"So has Locke," said he. "Apparently his orders are to furnish him with the papers as soon as they arrive. A man from the Institute building brought one to him more than an hour ago."

Just then Ashton-Kirk noted far up the road upon which Locke's house stood, a very small buggy, drawn by an equally small horse. In the buggy sat a man whose huge bulk seemed to bulge out beyond its sides. Arriving before Locke's house, the small horse stopped, as though from habit. Then with a mighty effort, the fat man rolled out and waddled to the gate. He pressed and re-pressed the button; but no one answered.

Ashton-Kirk looked at his assistant.

"Are you quite sure that our man is there," asked he.

Burgess chewed his straw calmly. "I'm positive of it," said he.

The fat man now entered at the gate and going to the front door, tried it. But it was evidently fast, and he turned away. Hesitating for a moment, he laboriously approached the work shop, the roof of which could be seen through the trees. Apparently the result was the same here, for in a very few minutes he was seen to waddle back to his buggy and climb in with much effort. Then the small horse ambled forward while the fat man leaned back in great distress.

"You recognize him, do you not?" smiled Ashton-Kirk.

"I do now," returned Pendleton. "It's our friend Dr. Mercer."

When the buggy arrived at the spot where the motor-car stood, the doctor regarded its occupants with some surprise.

"Good-morning," greeted Ashton-Kirk.

Painfully, gaspingly the other answered this in kind. The round white face wore an expression of martyrdom.

"I am pleased to see you once more," said he.

"You like driving in the morning, then?" said the investigator.

The principal's flesh quivered with repulsion.

"It is an exercise ordered by my physician," he answered. "I protested against it strongly, but he was obdurate. And I am compelled to do it before I have had my breakfast," hollowly. "It is scarcely short of barbarous."

Here the small horse stretched its neck and shook itself until the harness rattled. Pendleton, looking from master to beast thought they might exchange places, much to the master's ultimate well-being.

There was a short pause, then Dr Mercer sent his head toward them.

"When you visited the institute a few nights ago," said he, "you also, at my request, visited Professor Locke."

Ashton-Kirk nodded.

"For some time," proceeded the other, "I have fancied that there was something wrong with him. Not of a physical nature, as is, unfortunately the case with myself, but more in a mental way. But since that night I have been sure that some sort of a derangement had fixed itself upon him, or is in progress. He can scarcely be called the same person. More than once I have been afraid," and here the speaker lowered his voice to a husky whisper, "that he is unbalanced."

"That is very grave," said Ashton-Kirk.

"It has o'ccurred to me," went on the doctor, not without shrewdness, "that something happened that night which unsettled him." The eyes seemingly floating in fat, turned themselves first to Pendleton, then to Ashton-Kirk. "I suppose, though, you know nothing of it?"

"We noticed that he seemed greatly agitated," replied the investigator. "And we are alarmed to hear that he seems disturbed."

"It is our rule that no one leave the institute grounds after nightfall," said Dr. Mercer, in a troubled voice. "Last night I had occasion to send for him, but he was gone. This morning I stopped to reproach him for his absence; but apparently he has not returned.'

"You're mistaken there," put in Burgess. "Look!"

He indicated the house as he spoke. The small figure of Locke was seen emerging at the front door; he paused for a moment, peering this way and that in his near-sighted fashion, then hastily made his way toward the work-shop. Evidently he had not seen them.

With great labour and much catching of breath Dr. Mercer had turned sufficiently to see these things. He seemed greatly astonished.

"He was there all the time," said he. "It is not possible that he did not feel the vibrations of the buzzer, for he is very sensitive to such things."

His indignation appeared to swell him even to greater proportions than before.

"It is an affront," he stated in a choked tone. "It is a deliberate affront. He felt the buzzer, and he knew it was I. But he did not consider me of enough importance to trouble himself about."

Panting he sought to turn the small horse, but in a moment Ashton-Kirk was out in the road and had the animal by the head.

"I beg your pardon," said the investigator, "but it would probably be more beneficial to yourself and others, if you continued your drive and let Professor Locke to us."

Amazed beyond ability to stir, the doctor sat and stared. But finally he found his tongue.

"Bless my soul and body," exclaimed he with a great wheezing exhalation. "I scarcely understand this, sir."

Diseases Of the Skin

Dr. Chase's Ointment

Cold, damp weather brings out eczema and salt rheum. Many who are subject to these ailments do not suffer except during the changeable weather of fall and spring.

The annoying itching and the disfiguring blotches on the skin make this trouble almost unbearable to those who are not familiar with the soothing, healing influence of Dr Chase's Ointment.

Relief comes almost as soon as this ointment is applied. Gradually the irritation disappears, the sores are healed up and the skin is left soft, smooth and natural.

There is always danger of eczema spreading and becoming chronic. For this reason the use of the ointment should be regular and persistent until the cure is thorough and complete.

Mrs. John J. Delory, Linwood, Antigonish county, N.S., writes: "I want to say that Dr. Chase's Ointment has proven a great blessing to me. I had salt rheum on one hand, and could not get it healed up. The itching was most distressing at times. Two boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment has cured me completely, and I gladly recommend it to every sufferer."

In every home there is a demand for Dr. Chase's Ointment. It is particularly useful where there are children. Chafing and skin irritation are relieved at once. Obstinate wounds are readily healed. Baby eczema and all forms of poisoned or irritated skin are soon cured by this soothing healing ointment. 60 cents a box, at all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

POLICE CHIEF THOMPSON RECOMMENDS INCREASING OF FORCE BY FOUR MEN

Annual Report to the Police Commissioners Yesterday Makes Interesting Reading—How the Cases Were Dealt With.

SOME SUGGESTIONS

At a meeting of the Police Commission yesterday afternoon, Chief Thompson presented the following report for the year:

To the Chairman and Members of the Board of Police Commissioners of the City of Peterborough, Ontario.

Gentlemen,—I have the honour to submit for your consideration and information, my annual report of the Police Department of the City of Peterborough for 1910.

I regret very much to report that we have on our calendar for the past year, one of the most serious charges known in the laws of our country—that of murder.

However, apart from the abovementioned charge, it is very gratifying to report that crime is on the decrease. We had, during the month of August, a number of shops and stores broken into, and I am pleased to say that we have to our credit, the conviction of the offender, who was sent to Kingston Penitentiary for seven years.

I also take this opportunity of complimenting and thanking the citizens of Peterborough for the kind assistance they have given the Police Department at all times during the year.

I also desire to thank the Board personally, for the courtesy that they have shown me since I have taken charge of the Department.

It is also desired by your Chief, to thank Chief Howard and his Associates on the Peterborough Fire Department, for their willingness to assist the police at any time.

The number of cases summoned or apprehended during the year were 460 as against 519 in 1909.

Recommendations

The time has come when reasonable Police protection must be given to our citizens and manufacturers, and the increasing population during the last few years demands this.

The area of Peterborough is 2,807¾ acres, being two miles wide and two and three-quarter miles long. It is nearly half the size of London, Hamilton or Ottawa, and there are only five Police Constables here. There are streets in our city with thousands of people living on them, with valuable property, unpatrolled. Life is the most important thing, property comes next. In the event of fire particularly at night, there should be police patrolling the above-mentioned places to send in alarms to the Fire Department. This is only one of their numerous duties, and while Peterborough has been very fortunate so far, as to serious fires, still it is always the unexpected that happens. We feel quite safe having such an efficient Fire Department, and at its head, Chief Howard, who is a very able officer, but the Police Department has its responsibilities in the security of life and property.

I think that the above-mentioned reasons are sufficient to warrant the increase that I am now about to recommend, without taking into consideration the fact that the number of our police is far below the average, and, as it is an established fact that a Police Officer in a district has a telling effect in the preventing of crime.

I, therefore, strongly recommend that a substantial increase be made to the force this year, viz., four men.

It is customary in other cities to reckon Police Officers pay by the day. As you are aware the men work every day in the year, Sunday included. The highest paid men on our force to-day are receiving $700.00 per annum, which is equal to about $1.92 per day. The lowest paid men are receiving $600.00 per annum, which is equal to about $1.64½ per day.

I would ask the Board to consider the advisability of striking a scale of salaries for the Department, viz., first, second, and third-class pay, and would recommend that the men receive an increase of ten cents per day.

I trust that your Board will urge upon the Council the necessity of going on with the work of remodelling the Police Station and Police Court room, as early in the Spring as possible, as it is at present in a deplorable condition, most uncomfortable, unsanitary and unfit for use.

I would also recommend that the Police Department be relieved of the duties of Sanitary Inspection. This work occupies the attention of one Constable for at least three months in the year, and then the work is not thoroughly or systematically done. The Constable, when he is on his rounds at this work, if he finds a yard in a dirty condition, the owner, or occupant is served with a notice to have it cleaned within 48 hours. The Constable then continues on his rounds, but never returns to see if his instructions have been carried out. We are, therefore, continually receiving complaints regarding this work. Secondly, this work is not considered as Police duty, and I find that this work comes at a time when the Police Department is the busiest.

I would also recommend that the appointment of a Sergeant and Plain Clothes men be made in connection with the Department.

Remarks.

You will notice in the report that there are a large number of cases under the Breach of License Act. I desire to draw the attention of your Board to the fact that none of these cases are for selling during prohibited hours, but the greater part of them are against people who are on the prohibitary list, and charges for selling liquor to minors.

Houses of Ill-Fame.

There are no houses of ill-fame in the city at present to my knowledge.

There are no known gambling resorts in the city at present that I am aware of.

The general health and conduct of the police force, since I have taken charge, I am pleased to report, has been good, and the members of the Department are working in harmony together for the best interests of the city, which only goes to show the able manner in which the Department was conducted under the leadership of the late Chief Eossel.

During the year, as previously stated, we had a number of stores and shops broken into. On investigating the matter, I found that these places were all entered between the hours of 4 a.m. and 8 a.m. During these hours, there were no police on street duty. Owing to the fact of only having five men, I find it impossible to make a proper schedule of duty, covering the 24 hours, with a continuous Police service. The business section of our city should be patrolled by Police Officers every hour of the day and night, in order to properly protect the lives and property of our citizens.

The Chief Constables' Convention of Canada meets this year in the City of Ottawa, and I trust, gentlemen, that you will make it convenient for me to attend, accompanied with the necessary appropriation.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

I have the honour to be, gentlemen,

Your obedient servant,
D. THOMPSON,
Chief Constable.

Moved by Mr. Dumble and seconded by Mr. Morrow, that the report be referred to the whole Board.—Carried.

City Clerk Armstrong read a letter from the City Engineer, which had been referred to the Police Commissioners by the Board of Works, on the vandalism by youths on Hallowe'en. Moved by Mr. Morrow and seconded by Mr. Dumble, that Mr. Armstrong acknowledge the letter and the matter of future preparations for Hallowe'en be left to the Chairman and Chief Thompson.

A request was read from Mr. Fleuburg for a license to run a second-hand shop on Simcoe street.—Granted.

The City Clerk is to place a request before the Finance Committee, that the City Treasurer be authorized to pay expenses directed by the Board.

The meeting then adjourned to meet again Monday, January 23.

NEARLY DIED OF STONE IN THE BLADDER

GIN PILLS SAVED HIM

513 James St., Hamilton, Ont.

"Five years ago, I was taken down with what the doctors called Inflammation of The Bladder—intense pains in back and loins, and difficulty in urinating, and the attacks, which became more frequent, amounted to unbearable agony. I became so weak that I could not walk across the floor.

My wife read in the papers about GIN PILLS and sent for a box. From the very first, I felt that GIN PILLS were doing me good. The pain was relieved at once and the attacks were less frequent.

In six weeks, the Stone in the Bladder came away. When I recall how I suffered and how now I am healthy and able to work, I cannot express myself strongly enough when I speak of what GIN PILLS have done for me." JOHN HERMAN. 48

GIN PILLS are sold at 50c a box—6 for $2.50. Sent on receipt of price if your dealer does not handle them. Sample box free if you write us, mentioning this paper. Money back, if GIN PILLS do not give full satisfaction. National Drug and Chemical Co., Dept. B., Toronto.

Canadian Doctors Prescribe and Recommend Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey

The good results derived from the use of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey, the great tonic stimulant, among leading doctors have been so marvelous that they feel it their duty to express themselves publicly for the benefit of the profession as well as the public health.

Known It Twenty Years

"I might say that I have known Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey for twenty years, and am happy to tell you that I consider it the purest and very best product on the market." Dr. J. J. A. Asselin, Ste. Rose, Quebec.

I Often Prescribe It

"I do not advocate indiscriminate use of alcohol, but I often prescribe it in moderate doses, especially for elderly people suffering from senile changes and debility. I order it to be taken during the principal meal of the day and well diluted. An important matter is to find a safe and reliable liquor. While I practised my profession in Boston, Mass., which I did for twenty-five years, I had frequent occasion to order Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey among my elderly patients, and I must say the result was to their advantage." Prosper Bender, M. D., Quebec, Que.

Beneficial Results

"I have employed Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey where indicated for a great many years with great success. I would not be without it, as it is a pure and palatable beverage. Have had the best results after lingering illness and in children and the old. Its low proof and delicate flavor make it most acceptable and beneficial, hastening convalescence." J. P. Sivewright, M. D., Chatham, Ont.

These are a few of the letters received from practising physicians throughout Canada, who, like their brothers in the United States, realize that Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey is the greatest remedial agent and the most nutritious tonic stimulant for building up the weak, aiding digestion and prolonging life.

All grocers and liquor dealers or direct $1.25 a large bottle. Refuse substitutes and imitations; they are injurious. Send for free medical booklet and doctor's advice.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

ACCORDING to the United States' latest census there are 4,833,630 women in the country who work for wages. That is, one out of every five women is obliged to be a wage earner.

Don't such statistics impress upon you the big necessity for women to get out of the still comparatively few beaten paths in which they have been most successful, in order not to lower wages to starvation point by overcrowding these few occupations?

Don't those statistics impress upon you your duty to help our wage earning sisters by sending in to this column any hints as to unusual occupations at which women you know or have heard of have made their living or even home pin money?

I hope they do.

Here are a few suggestions that have come to me: I have heard that law publishing houses pay very good salaries to women to analyse, designate and classify decisions of the Federal and State courts. I should think such an occupation might be more profitable and more congenial to many women than school teaching or ordinary clerical work. I do not know whether the worker would have to have a full legal training or not. Doubtless any publishing house could furnish this information.

An interesting way in which a stenographer augmented her earnings was by advertising to take dictation over the telephone from people quarantined on account of contagious diseases. The work was done in the evening outside of her regular working hours, but a public stenographer of course could do it at any time and it seems to me this wouldn't be a bad plan for some ex-stenographer bride, who would like to increase her income a bit.

The profit to be made by raising hens has been mentioned before in this column, but perhaps this little story of another woman who succeeded in this work may be interesting.

"Your request for the suggestion of profitable occupations for women induced me to tell you of mine—raising chickens — the males for 'fspring frys' and the females for eggs. The 'frys' dressed, find a ready sale at twenty-eight cents per pound. The eggs to a regular customer at the door can be sold easily at forty cents per dozen the year around or at the highest market price. This is more interesting work than most people imagine. I have about fifty-five hens averaging four dozen eggs per day. A regular customer pays forty cents a dozen, and with his auto calls once a week for them. Food and supplies average $3.80 per month, which you can readily see nets a clear profit of $44.20 per month. How many shop girls salaries exceed this?"

A woman who lives near a jewelry factory, wrote this:

"Many women near my home make quite a little money making chain purses. Women are advertised for by the hundreds early in the fall to come and learn. Man yfirms also send out little links to the women, and with a small plyer, a strew strongly inserted in a stick of clothes pin, or a little board, the links can be opened, inserted in each other, and the little chain purses made.

"One young woman whom I know makes eight dollars a week doing this work, but the others get from three to five according to the amount of housework they have to do."

Whether such work could be obtained in other localities, of course I do not know, but think it would do no harm for anyone who thought she would like such work, to write and inquire from some wholesale jewelry firm whose advertisement could be found in any paper or magazine.

LITTLE LAKE CEMETERY CO. HAS ANNUAL MEETING

Reports Were Presented and Officers Elected Yesterday ---Vote of Thanks to Superintendent F. Wise for His Efficient Services---Mr. W. H. Moore is Again President

The annual meeting of the Little Lake Cemetery Company was held yesterday afternoon, when the following directors were present: Messrs. W. H. Moore (president), E. H. D. Hall, W. G. Morrow, J. J. Lundy, Charles Stapleton, B. Shortly, T. A. S. Hay and Arthur Stevenson. The president secretary and superintendent each made their annual report which was adopted. A resolution was unanimously passed, it being moved by Mr. B. Shortly and seconded by Mr. Charles Stapleton that Mr. Frank Wise, Superintendent of the Cemetery has been a good and faithful superintendent, and the cemetery has prospered and progressed under his management and in the opinion of this meeting he is entitled to the thanks of the shareholders.

The reports were as follows:

Directors' Report.

To the Shareholders of The Little Lake Cemetery:

Your Directors for the past year beg to report as follows:

At the meeting of the Board held over a year ago, an examination of the receiving vault in the grounds was made, when it was found to be in a decaying condition and the stone work considerably cracked, requiring repairs. It was observed that the vault covered the whole or the most part of eleven lots, situated in a very desirable section, which if cleared of the vault would be in demand at good prices. It was therefore decided to excavate under the Chapel for a new vault and about twelve months ago the work was proceeded with and was completed early during the past summer. Your Directors are able to state that the construction and finish of the vault is in every way most acceptable and satisfactory to them. It is nearly double the size of the old one; its walls, floors and ceiling are composed of concrete, and every way is completed in the most lasting manner. The cost was about eight hundred and sixty-five dollars, which will be met out of the proceeds of the sale of the lots that had been occupied by the old vault.

Your Directors last year put a concrete curb around a triangular plot near the north east corner of the grounds, most of which is reserved for flower plots, and this has had so improving an appearance that they recommend a similar curb being placed around the grounds enclosing the Chapel; besides, it will protect the banks from being injured by carriage wheels. They have also repaired and improved the Chapel foundations and the whole interior of it, and have placed a furnace in the new conservatory. The cost of the improvements to the Chapel was one hundred and fifty dollars.

Your Board has purchased a city debenture for fifteen hundred dollars from surplus money, as an investment towards future maintenance. The fund for this purpose has now reached the sum of $14,417.31.

Your Directors have endeavoured, and they believe with some fair measure of success, to maintain the general condition of the cemetery, so that its attractiveness has not been surpassed in any former years.

Although the financial statement shows a small overdraft at the Bank since covered, yet it may be pointed out that accounts are owing to the Company for various services to lot owners to the extent of $2,271.00, which will, it is expected, be paid within a short period.

Your Directors have to record with deep regret the recent loss of one of their number, namely, Mr. James Stevenson, who had been a member of the Board for nearly thirty-six years, and its President for a number of terms, and who always took a deep and active interest in everything affecting the improvement of the grounds, and whose good judgment is apparent in many ways in the cemetery, and in the financial condition in which the company now stands.

W. H. MOORE,
President.

Superintendent's Report.

Peterborough, January 16, '11.

To the President, Directors and Shareholders of the Little Lake Cemetery Company:—

Gentlemen,—Another year of work in your cemetery has closed, and I beg to report upon the progress made.

Owing to the old receiving vault and chapel (two separate buildings) requiring considerable repairs, your directors resolved that one good building would be better than two separate ones; therefore, the old receiving vault was torn down and an excavation made beneath the chapel and a new

An unaccountable error has occurred in the Red Dodger, which we wish to correct. NO APPOINTMENT YET OF CARETAKER FOR LIBRARY

Property Committee Discussed the Matter Last Night — Qualifications of One Applicant Will be Investigated.

CHAIRS NOT SATISFACTORY

The new City Property committee for nineteen hundred and eleven met in its first business session last night. There were present Mayor Morrow, Ald. Geo. Duncan, chairman, Aldermen Morgan, Bradburn and Brown.

Mr. E. J. Hickay, of Bethune St., asked permission to pile stone on the Corporation's lot at the corner of Stewart and Murray streets, until July 15th. No action taken. The city is going to clean this lot up in the spring.

Sixteen tenders for the position of caretaker of the Isolation Hospital were received. No action was taken on two applications that came to hand after advertised date for receiving same, December 27th.

Some of the applicants forgot to state the salary they expected.

This matter was left in abeyance, the chairman being given authority to enquire into the qualifications of one applicant, and reoprt back to committee in one week.

It was moved by Ald. Bradburn, seconded by Ald. Brown, that the Library Bureau Co. be notified that the chairs furnished them for the Public Library arrived here in bad condition, and are not of the same quality as the chairman saw in Toronto and approved of, and that they are here subject to the company's order and at their own risk. Also that the book stacks are not finished as the agent represented they would be.

The chairman reported that he had accepted the lowest tender for furnishing the library with blinds—that of A. W. Cressman, at $52.75. At a subsequent meeting of the Council Ald. Duncan was authorized to secure these blinds at his own discretion.

The chairman was authorized to have an ice house built at the Isolation Hospital and to arrange for having ice drawn thereto.

Architect Blackwell will be notified to see that all windows in the Isolation Hospital are cleaned by contractor, according to specifications.

The chairman was authorized to purchase blinds for the hospital.

The committee will recommend to the Council that a Sanitary Inspector be appointed. And the council authorize the committee to have such appointment made.

The chairman was authorized to enquire into the question of securing power for electric light at the Isolation Hospital, and report back to the committee.

Ald. Brown suggested that coal-dealers pay for all coal they have weighed on the market scales

"Then they won't weigh on the market scales at all," said Ald. Bradburn. "In any event the consumer would eventually pay for this weighing. If any action at all is taken in this direction it should be made compulsory that all coal be weighed on the market scales."

It was decided to take no action in this matter. The present by-law provides that when coal is ordered at market weight, it can be weighed on the market scales free of charge. The police are also empowered to stop any coal rig and have its contents weighed before delivered.

CHAIRMAN'S ADDRESS

Mr. Richard Hall, Chairman, then made the following remarks:—

Gentlemen, of the Board.

I am glad to again congratulate you on the successful year just terminated at the Hospital.

In all departments the number treated has exceeded former years and the general satisfaction has exceeded former years and the general satisfaction expressed by patients speaks well for the efficient conduct of the Institution.

The Lady Superintendent, the Assistant Superintendent, Nurses and Medical staff are deserving of every praise for their excellent services and the kindly consideration of the sick placed in their care.

Considerable improvements have been carried out during the year all with the object of making the wards attractive and homelike and adding to the comfort of the patients.

The Operating Room has been remodelled and should be of greater service by reason of the improvements.

I have to record, with regret, the death of Mr. James Stevenson, a member of this Board for many years and who gave the best years of his life to the interests of the Hospital.

I thank you for your continued interest in the work and trust that the Hospital may continue to grow in usefulness and popularity.

His Worship, the Mayor addressed the Board and congratulated them upon the splendid statement presented and the excellent financial position of the Hospital which should be very gratifying to the Citizens of Peterborough. He thought it was somewhat unique that a City should be endowed with a splendid Institution treating upwards of 600 patients in the year, such a large number paying nothing and this without one cent of expense to the Rate-payers. It is indeed a standing monument to the late Mrs. Nicholls.

A vote of thanks was tendered Mr. Madill, the efficient chairman of the Supervision Committee for his labors during the past year. A considerable number of improvements have been carried out under his supervision and the Board desire to recognize his faithful services.

The election of officers was then proceeded with, resulting as follows:

Richard Hall, Esq.—Chairman.
W. H. Hill, Esq.—Hon. Sec'y.
John Crane, Esq.—Secretary.

A Nominating Committe was then appointed to strike the standing Committees for the year and reported as follows:—

Supervision—Messrs. Madill, Kemp and Aldridge.

Finance—Messrs. Fair, Dr. McCulloch and J. Green.

Property — Messrs. McClelland, Kemp, and Mayor Morrow.

Visiting:—January and July, Rev. Mr. Coon and Mr. Fair.

Feby. and Aug.—John Green and John McClelland.

March and Sept.—Representatives of St. Andrew's Church and Wm. Aldridge.

April and October—Wm. Kemp and J. J. McBain.

May and Nov.—Wm. Madill and Dr. McCulloch.

Supervision—Wm. Madill.
Finance—Robt. Fair.
Property—John McClelland.

PURIFIED HIS BLOOD

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills Healed Mr. Wilson's Sores

When the sewers of the body—bowels, kidneys and skin ducts—get clogged up, the blood quickly becomes impure and frequently sores break out over the body. The way to heal them, as Mr. Richard Wilson, who lives near London, Ont., found, is to purify the blood. He writes:

"For some time I had been in a low, depressed condition. My appetite left me and I soon began to suffer from indigestion. Quite a number of small sores and blotches formed all over my skin. I tried medicine for the blood and used many kinds of ointments, but without satisfactory results. What was wanted was a thorough cleansing of the blood, and I looked about in vain for some medicine that would accomplish this.

At last Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills were brought to my notice, and they are one of the most wonderful medicines I have ever known. My blood was purified in a very short time, sores healed up, my indigestion vanished. They always have a place in my home and are looked upon as the family remedy."

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills cleanse the system thoroughly. Sold by all dealers at 25c a box.

WEDDING BELLS

DRAIN—RUTTAN.

Campbellford was the scene of a very pretty wedding on Saturday, January the seventh, when Miss Hannah Ruttan, daughter of Mr. John Ruttan, of Colbourne, became the bride of Mr. William Drain, of Stony Lake. The bride was neatly attired in a gown of white silk trimmed with valenciennes lace with ribbon drawn through, bowed, and forming a sash at the back. She wore the usual bridal wreath and veil, carrying a shower of lily of the valley tied with white ribbon which formed a French knot. The bride was assisted by her sister, Miss Susan Ruttan, who wore a costume of pale blue silk with black picture hat to match, while Mr. F. Burnham, of Keene, assisted the groom. The groom's gift to the bride was a china tea set, to the bridesmaid a gold bracelet and to the groomsman a set of gold cuff links. The bride was a well known and highly esteemed lady, who for the past few years has been living in Peterborough. Mrs. Drain carried with her the warm congratulations of her many friends whom she met during her stay in this city, while all join in wishing her a long and happy wedded life. The young couple left on the evening train for Chicago, St. Paul and other points west, and on their return will reside in Campbellford.

Mr. and Mrs. Drain will be at home to their many friends after February the first.

LITTLE LAKE CEMETERY CO. ANNUAL MEETING

vault built at a cost of about $85. The combining of these two buildings will be found very convenient, as the funeral service and the disposal of the remains can be accomplished under one roof. The ground where the old vault stood comprising about 1,400 superficial feet, will make excellent burial plots. This ground, which is centrally situated and in a very desirable locality, has already been graded and is now for sale.

I graded and seeded another block in Section "O" situated in eastern part of the cemetery. It will be found necessary in the near future to open this section for burials, as this class of lots are all sold.

A concrete curb has been placed around a triangular plot in the north end of the cemetery, giving it a very neat appearance. I would advise that this permanent work be continued where necessary, as it not only adds to the appearance of the cemetery but lessens the labour required to keep the roads and banks in condition.

Extensions have been made to the water system where found necessary, and all the taps that were leaking were replaced with new ones. A new concrete wall to replace the old wooden one was built and a new furnace installed to heat the new greenhouse. We are now in a better condition than ever to supply the lot owners with the plants and flowers they may require for their plots.

The number of lot owners taking special interest in their lots is still on the increase, and it is gratifying to know that a general satisfaction of the care taken of them is continually expressed, and orders for discontinuance of work through not having obtained a satisfactory result are practically nil. Trusting that this work will still continue to increase, I am,

Your obedient servant,
F. WISE,
Superintendent.

Senator Lodge Nominated.

Boston, Jan. 17.—United States Senator Henry Cabot Lodge was nominated at the Republican caucus yesterday for a fourth term by 125 out of 153 Republican members of the Legislature, or 16 less than a majority of the House and Senate on joint ballot. As the absentees were nearly all from the House, it is anticipated that the majority of the Senate's votes will be cast for Mr. Lodge to-day, but that the House will be deadlocked. Whether his deadlock will continue to the joint convention on Wednesday was a matter of interesting conjecture last night. While it was generally admitted that should Mr. Lodge be returned, he would have to seek some Democratic support.

Arrests Expected.

Berlin, Jan. 17.—Detectives Boyd and Huber are back in Berlin working on the Lobinski murder case, and, although they are close-mouthed, there is a general belief that they are working on clues that will result in arrests. They investigated the story of a Baden man having got money from Lobinski after getting him drunk, but no arrests was made.

In searching the two barns on the Lobinski property the police yesterday found cans containing silver coins, one can in the hayloft of each barn. The amount of silver totals about $80. After the post-mortem in Wellesley, it was decided to forward the stomach to Toronto for examination, also the bottle containing a fluid mixed with Paris green.

THE GERM WHICH PRODUCES DANDRUFF

Finally Causes Baldness—Kill the Germ and Save Your Hair—Newbro's Herpicide Will Do It

Did you ever try to discover a reason for the dying of a valuable plant? You perhaps found that life was destroyed by some insect or parasite working about the roots and sapping away the elements which go to support plant life.

The dandruff germ exercises the same destructive influence upon the life of the hair. It forces its way down the follicle around the hair bulb and thus prevents the hair from getting proper nourishment. The hair dies and drops out.

Newbro's Herpicide prevents this by killing the germ. It also frees the scalp from the accumulations of dirt and scurf skin. With the removal of these obstacles to a clean, healthy scalp, the hair will grow naturally and luxuriantly.

Send 10c. in postage or silver to The Herpicide Co., Dept. R., Detroit, Mich., for a nice sample of Herpicide and a booklet telling all about the hair.

OPPOSITION TACTICS WERE ROUTED BY THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Verville Offers the Original Eight Hour Bill---E. A. Lancaster Accused Government of Scheme to Cheat House and Labour Interests but the Premier Administers a Rebuke.

Ottawa, Jan. 17.—The game of party politics as played by the exponents of exigency on the Opposition benches suffered a severe expose at the hands of the Prime Minister in the House of Commons yesterday.

The House went early into committee on Mr. Verville's amended eight-hour bill, and Mr. A. C. Macdonnel submitted an amendment under which the words of the section providing for the eight-hour day would be strengthened by enacting that no laborer shall be required "or permitted" — the latter two words being added—to work longer than the time prescribed.

The proposal proved the inauguration of a long-drawn-out and at times acrimonious debate. Members of the Opposition vied with one another in captious criticism of the measure. Mr. Middlebro described it as "worthless and meaningless." Mr. Goodeve contended that the amendments had destroyed its significance. Mr. Lancaster went farther, and accused Mr. Verville and the Minister of Labor of "putting up a scheme on the House and the labor interests." Finally the labor man called the critics. He offered the original draft of the bill. There was an immediate panic to the left of the Speaker and the Opposition backed down.

The chief objection to the amendments, A. C. Macdonnel (S. Toronto) declared, was that, by the introduction of a number of exceptions the bill would accomplish no more, excepting the proposed penalty of $200 than could be done by order-in-council. The wording of the clause that no man would be "required" to work more than eight hours a day provided a loophole for contractors.

Hon. Mackenzie King thought that the clause was not binding, and asked if the clause was changed that a man should not be permitted to work more than eight hours, if it would prevent him, after that amount of time had been served, from taking up any other work.

A. S. Goodeve (Kootenay) declared that the Government should declare its intention with regard to the amendments, and ascertain the opinion of labor bodies and those interested.

In reply to Major Currie (N. Simcoe) as to who on the Government side was responsible for the bill, Sir Wilfrid turned the question by saying that Mr. Verville introduced his amendments in order to insure the passage of the measure through the House in a moderate form. He thought the bill, as first introduced, would not be acceptable to the Opposition.

Mr. Borden claimed that the bill was virtually a Government measure, although they did not want to be responsible for it. Amendments were promised at the time of the second reading, and the subsequent discussion indicated the Government was well aware of the nature of the amendment and restriction. He challenged the Government to withdraw the amendments, and test the opinion of the House on the first question.

Claude Macdonnel said it was difficult to say whether or not the bill was being simply put forward to secure a party advantage, with no serious objections behind it.

Mr. Lancaster declared the Minister of Labor and Mr. Verville were playing a game upon the House. After the House had unanimously committed itself to the bill, the Minister now said he was not in favor of the bill, for which he had voted on the second reading, and supported the amended bill, which cut the whole thing down to public buildings and not public works.

Mr. Goodeve remarked that the original bill had been approved by the labor unions, and they had no right to amend it without sending it back to the unions. Take as an example the insurance bill. In this case the companies had been asked for their opinion. He declared himself in favor of the original bill, as did Mr. Rhodes of Cumberland.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that no doubt the labor unions would prefer the original bill, but the free Canadian people were not composed of labor unions only.

Mr. Macdonnel argued that a contractor, by the bill, might refuse to employ men who would not work more than eight hours a day.

Hon. H. R. Emmerson favored the original bill, and was opposed to the amendments because they discriminated.

An amendment by Mr. Macdonnel to pay overtime, time and a half, and on Sundays and holidays double time, was voted down. Later, however, the payment of time and a half for overtime was submitted for time and a quarter, as in the bill.

Then Mr. Pugsley moved another amendment, making the bill apply to all public buildings undertaken by the Government by day labor. This was accepted, and the bill now stands for third reading.

The chief interest at the opening of the House yesterday was a motion by H. B. Ames of Montreal, for correspondence, etc., between the liquidators of the Charing Cross Bank and any member or official of the Government in respect to the affairs of Atlantic, Quebec and Western Railway, the Quebec Oriental Railway and the New Canadian Co., Ltd.

When the motion was reached, Sir Wilfrid said: "If my honorable friend (Mr. Ames) were present, I would tell him there was no such correspondence at all, but in his absence I will let the motion go."

The first bill to receive a third reading this session was H. H. Miller's bill to amend the Interest Act. It was allowed to pass the final stage without discussion.

Second readings were given to several railway and other bills, which were referred to the various select committees for consideration. Amongst these was Major Beattie's bill respecting the McClary Manufacturing Co.

The great growth of the fisheries industry of the Canadian Maritime Provinces during the last forty years is shown by a return which was tabled in the Commons yesterday. The value of the catch by Canadian fishermen in 1909-10 was $11,897,809. In 1870 the total catch was $3,285,702. There has been less increase in the catch of cod than in any other class of fish. There is not very much more cod taken today than there was forty years ago.

In 1870, the catch was in detail: Cod, $2,258,903; haddock, hake and pollock, $97,077; halibut, $3,528; mackerel, $92,213; herring, $252,481; lobsters, $591,500. Total, $3,285,702.

In the twelve months of 1909-10 the catch was: Cod, $3,898,738; haddock, $829,553; hake, $338,244; pollock, $325,533; halibut, $155,161; mackerel, $948,971; herring, $1,037,453; lobsters, canned, $2,721,478; lobsters in shell, $935,368. Total, $11,897,899.

Lobsters were a poor catch last year. Oysters were not included in the return.

WILL REGULATE ALL KIDNEY DISORDERS

Few Doses End the Most Severe Backache or Urinary Trouble

Kidney disease is the most dangerous, because the first symptoms are seen in other parts of the body before anything wrong is noticed with the kidneys themselves.

Some of the symptoms, though, cannot be mistaken; for instance, sick, unhealthy kidneys cause thick, cloudy, offensive urine, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding. The backaches constantly, or there is dull misery in the sides and loins, headaches and dizzy spells may occur, nervous twitchings, disturbed sleep, inflamed or puffy eyelids, weakness, bilious stomach, heart palpitations or the sufferer is often weighed down by a feeling of languor or fatigue.

The time to cure kidney trouble is while it is only a trouble — before it settles into Diabetes, Dropsy, Gravel or Bright's disease. The moment you suspect the slightest kidney, bladder or urinary disorder begin taking Pape's Diuretic as directed, with the knowledge that there is no other medicine, at any price, made anywhere else in the world, which will effect so prompt and thorough a cure.

Dont be miserable and remain in danger another moment because of a lame back or clogged, inactive kidneys or bladder or urinary misery; all this will surely go after you take Pape's Diuretic for a few days.

Your physician, pharmacist, banker or any mercantile agency will vouch for the responsibility of Pape, Thompson & Pape, of Cincinnati, Ohio, who prepare Pape's Diuretic — 50 cent treatment—sold by every druggist in the world.

TO ENTER UNDERGROUND.

C.N.R. Said to Be About to Tunnel Under Mount Royal.

Ottawa, Jan. 17.—Railway men in the city yesterday were discussing a mammoth scheme for entrance into the heart of Montreal by the C.N.R. It is stated as a fact that the Canadian Northern has now under contemplation a proposal to tunnel right through from the back of Mount Royal at Sault de Recollet, all the way below the mountain and down below the streets of the city to the Old Hope Coffee House on Craig street, where the terminus will be.

When doubts were expressed as to the feasibility of such a mammoth scheme, if only from the point of view of expense, it was stated that the C.N.R. had been unable to effect an entrance to Montreal on the level, and, even if they could do so, the expense would be so enormous as to make the vast project of tunnelling to the heart of the city comparatively inexpensive.

The Agent Resigned.

Ottawa, Jan. 17.—James O. Lewis, for many years Indian agent at Selkirk, has resigned. He was criticized last session in connection with the sale of the St. Peter's Indian reserve, though not directly accused of wrong doing. It is said his resignation is for personal reasons.

Shiloh's Cure

This Home-Made Cough Syrup will Surprise You

Stops Even Whooping Cough Quickly. A Family Supply at Small Cost.

Here is a home-made remedy that takes hold of a cough instantly and will usually cure the most stubborn case in 24 hours. This recipe makes sixteen ounces—a family supply. You couldn't buy as much or as good ready-made cough syrup for $2.50.

Mix two cups of granulated sugar with one cup of warm water, and stir 2 minutes. Put 2½ ounces of Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a 16 oz. bottle, and add the Sugar Syrup. This keeps perfectly and has a pleasant taste—children like it. Braces up the appetite and is slightly laxative, which helps end a cough.

You probably know the medical value of pine in treating asthma, bronchitis, and other throat troubles, sore lungs, etc. There is nothing better. Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, rich in guiacol and all the natural healing pine elements. Other preparations will not work in this formula.

The prompt results from this inexpensive remedy have made friends for it in thousands of homes in the United States and Canada, which explains why the plan has been imitated often, but never successfully.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

Companies Arrange With Hungary.

Budapest, Hungary, Jan. 17.—An arrangement to regulate emigrant traffic to America and to do away with some of the abuses now existing, has been concluded between the Hungarian Government and the Hamburg-American, North German Lloyd, Holland-American, Red Star and the French Line steamship companies.

The companies agree to close the private agencies maintained throughout the country, which have at times been charged with holding out spurious inducements to immigrants, and transact their business through the general offices at Budapest and the frontier stations. They also bind themselves to restrict the business of Hungary to Hungarians, thus shutting out large numbers of Russians and other Slavs who heretofore have utilized this route.

The steamship people further contract to undertake an arrangement with the Cunard Line, which is now carrying emigrants from Fiume, that will obviate the possibility of a rate war.

Law Unconstitutional.

New York, Jan. 17.—The Callan automobile law which provides that a person who runs down another with an automobile must stop and give his name and address, is unconstitutional, according to a ruling of Justice Crain made yesterday afternoon in dismissing the indictment against Edward T. Rosenheim, the young millionaire, who was charged with speeding away after he ran down and killed Miss Grace Hough on the night of Aug. 18 last. Rosenheim was tried and acquitted on a charge of murder but was promptly indicted again under the Callan law.

In his opinion, Justic Crain declares that this law is in violation of an articles of the state constitution, commonly called the "Bill of Rights," which provides among other things "that no person shall be compelled to be a witness against himself in any criminal case."

TREATY IS IN SIGHT

Progress is Being Made Towards Reciprocity—Cabinet Meeting To-day Causes Break in the Proceedings

MEET AGAIN TO-MORROW

Washington, Jan. 17.—The trade negotiations between Canada and the United States are rapidly nearing a conclusion. They were advanced a further stage yesterday in a three-hour conference, attended by Hon. Messrs. Fielding and Paterson, Secretary of State Knox and their respective assistants. It is evident to observers that progress is being made toward an amicable arrangement; in fact, there is no doubt that events are shaping toward the early announcement of a treaty. The Cabinet meeting to-day will give the negotiators a day off and time to consult higher authorities, and another meeting will be held on Wednesday morning to receive reports and make up for lost time. The calling of a forenoon sitting indicates a desire to push the work as rapidly as possible, and it also shows that both sides have their way well cleared and know whither they are steering.

There is naturally anxiety on the part of the U. S. Cabinet to get the subject before Congress soon. The present session must close six weeks hence, on March 3, and there is a lot of business to be done before the Republicans lay down their control of the House of Representatives. A third of the Senators must also go, and the new members might do more bodily harm to President Taft's freer trade child than the reactionaries of his own party. The Senate devoted some time yesterday to discussing how they can finish all the business that remains. It developed that one whole week out of the six will be devoted to paying tributes to deceased Senators. There are six names entitled to this honor, and each one under the custom has a day set apart.

FOR LADY READERS

The Secret of a Good Complexion

This is the season for evening parties, social events, etc. Why not look your best. Why let your complexion suffer by contrast with other ladies? Why not ensure a good complexion? You can do this on sound, natural lines by using Zam-Buk, Nature's herbal balm.

Zam-Buk is a skin food; and complexion is purely a matter of skin health. Zam-Buk smeared lightly over the face each night acts as a skin tonic. It stimulates the cells beneath the cuticle to healthy action, makes the capillaries and blood vessels work, and the vigorous circulation thus started carries away secreted impurities. Waxy, sallow deposits are thus removed. Hard, pimply growths are softened and disappear. That yellow tinge gives place to the pink of health and the white, velvety "look" and "feel" which healthy skin alone has.

Isnt this wiser than relying upon talcum powder and cosmetics? These only put on a "complexion" from the outside. It doesn't last. Zam-Buk helps nature to build up a complexion from blood and tissue. It lasts.

Zam-Buk also cures skin diseases, pimples, ulcers, abscesses, blood-poison, eruptions, cuts, burns, scalds, chapped places, scalp sores, piles, etc. 50c. box all druggists and stores, or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, but beware of harmful substitutes and imitations.

A Copper In His Throat.

Kingston, Jan. 17.—Gerald Leakey of Gananoque swallowed a cent, which stuck in his throat, and notwithstanding the efforts of the medical men in that town, could not be extracted. He was brought to the General Hospital here and the X-rays put on his neck, while one of the staff used a pair of forceps and got a grip on the copper. After the money had been secured the boy was able to go home.

Palpitation of The Heart.

When the heart begins to beat irregularly or intermittently, palpitate and throb, skip beats, beats fast for a time, then go slow as to seem almost to stop, it causes great anxiety and alarm.

The least excitement or exertion seems to affect it.

Many people are kept in a state of morbid fear of death, become weak, worn and miserable, through this unnatural action of the heart.

To all such sufferers Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills can give prompt and permanent relief.

Mrs. John Thompson, Mill Cove, N.B., writes:—"Just a few lines to let you know what Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have done for me. I have been troubled with weakness and palpitation of the heart; would have severe choking spells, and could scarcely lie down at all. I tried many remedies but got none to answer my case like your pills did. I can recommend them highly to all suffering with heart and nerve trouble."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c. per box or 3 boxes for $1.25 at all dealers or will be mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Electric Smelter Near Ottawa.

Ottawa, Jan. 17.—American and English capital has been interested in the establishment of an electric smelting plant at Chats' Falls, on the Ottawa River, about 20 miles west of Ottawa, and active work preparatory to the erection of the plant will begin early in the spring. The surrounding country on the Quebec side is rich in iron ore, the only difficulty being that of transportation. It is proposed to build an electric line from the falls to the mines. There is an enormous amount of water power awaiting development at Chats' Falls, and the spot is looked upon as almost ideal for electric smelting purposes.

Oh, Joseph!

Winnipeg, Jan. 17.—Hon. Joseph Martin, M.P. for East St. Pancras, in the Imperial Parliament, said in an interview here yesterday.

"In my opinion, Mr. Asquith is the poorest Parliamentary leader imaginable, except Mr. Balfour. Five-sixths of the present Liberal party consists of Radicals, and we are shedding Whigs at every election. While Mr. Asquith remains leader, he is still further away from the Radical point of view than he is from Mr. Balfour."

Invalidity Insurance.

New York, Jan. 17.—A special cable to The Tribune yesterday says: It is doubtful whether the British nation has yet recognized the vast importance of the Government's scheme of invalidity insurance. Before many weeks are over it is likely, says The Daily News, to be the chief subject of criticism and discussion through the country.

This is entirely separate from the system of old age pensions. Five shillings a week will start to be granted on a non-contributory basis to qualified persons over the age of 70, and there will be no overlapping contributions to invalidity insurance, which will begin at an age not lower than 16 and not higher than 18.

Washington, Jan. 17.—The United States army contemplates the installation of aeroplanes for mail carrying purposes to Alaska. It will be impossible, however, to put them into use until Congress makes an appropriation for their purchase, or increases the national amount of money set aside for the signal corps.

Belleville Team Has Defaulted No Game Here Thursday Night

Defeat of the Burrows' Aggregation in Cobourg Last Night Put Them Out of the Running and They Have Decided to Quit—Puts Peterborough in Better Shape.

HOW DOPE LOOKS

R. M. Glover, Secretary, Peterborough O.H.A. Team—

Belleville team defaults both our games to your Club.

C. R. BURROWS.

This laconic message, received this morning means a good many things.

In the first place it means that there will be no game here on Thursday night with Belleville.

It means also that Peterborough is in much better shape in the standing in this district.

In fact the dope shows Peterborough in the best position of any of the district clubs. Belleville's default leaves Peterborough with only two games to play, both at home, with Trenton and Cobourg. Trenton, on the other hand, has three more games, two of which are away from home. A defeat by Peterborough of Trenton here will mean that the locals will be tied for the district. If Trenton loses in Cobourg, a result that is far from being an impossibility, Peterborough would win the district.

Belleville's default, which was caused by last night's defeat at Cobourg, which put them out of the running, leaves the standing of the district as follows:

	Won	Lost	To P'ly
Trenton	3	0	3
Peterborough	3	1	2
Cobourg	1	2	3
Belleville	1	5	0

BERLIN BELLE AND TOM TARIFF WERE WINNERS

Of the First Day's Events at the Peterborough Ice Races ---Some Great Sport Was Seen Despite the Arctic Condition of the Weather.

The first day's racing under the auspices of the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition management, held yesterday, at the Driving Park, was most successful in spite of the extremely cold weather, which kept many spectators away. With the thermometer below zero at noon, and a piercing wind from the north west, it was a remarkable tribute to the drawing power of the harness horses that so many people braved the Arctic conditions to be present. Those who were there were well rewarded however, as they saw some exciting racing.

The track was very fast and every heat was a race. The two events on the card were the 2.18 class, captured by Berlin Belle, owned by J. Davy, Berlin, and the 2.35 class, won by C. Fife, of Keene with Tom Tariff. It required six heats to settle the 2.18 class event in which there were four entrants, Furioso, owned by J. Powell, Orillia, Forest Pointer, a bay stallion, the property of Arnold Bros. of Toronto; Harry Mac, D. McMahon, Reaboro, and the ultimate winner, Berlin Belle. The Orillia stallion looked like a winner al over at the start. Furioso captured the first two heats with Berlin Belle providing the opposition from second place. The third heat proved a surprise. Harry Mack, who had alternated between third and fourth places in the two previous heats, was first under the wire, Furioso in second place, and Berlin Belle third. The Berlin mare, however, showed her class by going out and capturing the fourth, fifth and sixth heats. Furioso seemed to have tired badly and failed to get closer than third place for the balance of the event.

Extra heats were needed to dispose of the 2.35 class, as well. M. Storey's Percy H. won the first heat, and J. Shepherd's Major Direct grabbed off the second heat. Tom Tariff came through nicely, however, and won the three final heats.

Following are the results:

2.18 Class

Berlin Belle, J. Davy, Berlin 2 2 3 1 1 1
Furioso, J. Powell, Orillia 1 1 2 4 4 4
Harry Mack, D. McMahon, Reaboro 3 4 1 2 2 3
Forester Pointer, Arnold Bros., Toronto 4 3 4 3 3 2
Time—2.23 3-4; 2.25; 2.24; 2.25; 2.30 2.31.

2.35 Class.

Tom Tariff, C. Fife, Keene 3 2 1 1 1
Major Direct, J. Shepherd, Toronto 2 1 2 2 2
Percy H., M. Storey, Peterborough 1 3 3 3 3
Time—2.27 3-4, 2.31, 2.36, 2.33, 2.35.

"Pneumonia"

Pneumonia is nothing more or less than "Lung Fever," or as it used to be called, "Inflammation of the Lungs" and the results come entirely from a local source such as taking a violent cold.

There is more or less difficulty in breathing: a cough, at first dry, but soon accompanied by raising a thick, sticky, rusty-colored matter, composed of a mixture of phlegm and blood.

There is only one way to prevent Pneumonia, and that is to cure the cold just as soon as it appears. Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup will do this quickly and effectively.

Mrs. G. W. Bowman, Pattullo, Ont., writes: "Three years ago I caught a cold which ended in a severe attack of Pneumonia. Since that time, at the beginning of each winter, I seem to catch cold very easily. I have been so hoarse that I was unable to speak loud enough to be heard across the room. Last winter, however, a friend advised me to try Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, saying it had helped her. I bought a bottle and before it was half used I was completely cured. I also find it a good medicine for the children when they have colds."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; the price 25 cents.

ALL ABOARD FOR LINDSAY 'BIG EXCURSION TO-NIGHT

Grillers Will Be Escorted by a Grand Crowd on Special Train---Midgets Are Stronger and Game Should be Well Worth Seeing.

All aboard for Lindsay. Everything points to a big exodus from Peterborough to-night when the Grillers will be escorted to Lindsay by a swarm of fans to play the return game in the Junior O. H. A. series with the Lindsay Midgets. Word has been received from Lindsay that they have a much stronger team and expect to win and also that the admission will be 25c to all parts of the rink. The game should, without a doubt, be well worth seeing, as the Lindsay team is always an awkward proposition on its own ice, and they wil give the Grillers a merry battle to-night. However, the local youngsters are in the best of shape and promise to make things interesting all through the engagement. The team will go up on the special train which leaves the G. T. R. station at 7.10 o'clock. The line-up will be as follows:

Goal—Patterson.
Point—Reynolds, (Captain).
Cover—Heffernan.
Rover—Coughlin.
Centre—Hall.
Spares—Anderson, Pratt.

The fare will be $1.05 for adults, and 55c for children.

Pill Pounders Won A Rough Game In The Mercantile League

The Pill-pounders defeated the Lock Works team by 6 goals to 1, in a Mercantile League last night, that was one of the roughest exhibitions of the season. The Lock Works team were the chief offenders in this respect. They were much bigger and heavier and used their weight to body the lighter Druggists into the boards, while they contributed a lot of slashing and tripping as well. However, the Pill-pounders were greatly the better team, as regards hockey. They had the speed and an effective combination and had little difficulty in beating their bigger opponents. They were in front 2 to 0 at the half, and were not scored on until a half-minute before the finish, when, with the score 6 to 0, in their favour, a long lift from centre glided into their nets and left the final 6 to 1. Many offenders were sent to the boards and at one stage the teams were playing four men a side.

The most exciting feature was a fight, in the second half, in which the spectators climbed over the boards and threatened to take a hand The teams were as follows:

CAMPBELLFORD CURLERS WON THE FIRST GAME

Preliminary Tankard Competition in This District is Being Held Here To-day—Locals Play Cannington.

FINAL TO-NIGHT

The preliminary tankard competition for this district is being held at the Charlotte street curling rink to-day, and there is a notable gathering of curlers, including the famous Lindsay rinks. This morning the draw called Campbellford and Port Hope together. The result was a nip and tuck game that was in doubt until the last stone was rolled. J. F. Smith, of Campbellford, had as his opponent Rev. Father O'Sullivan, of Port Hope, and succeeded in beating the reverend gentleman by 5 shots. They were needed, however, as W. J. Colville, of Port Hope, trounced his partner Dickson, of Campbellford by three shots, leaving Campbellford two up on the game. The scores and players follow:

Campbellford	Port Hope
R. H. Cole	N. McDermott
N. E. Carnahan	Jas. Caldwell
T. S. Tait	Wm. Oke
J. F. Smith	Father O'Sullivan
Skip 15	Skip 10
W. R. West	R. R. Thompson
W. J. Dorsee	G. F. Johnston
J. A. Stewart	Jas. H. Peacock
J. Duleson	W. J. Colville
Skip 15	Skip 18

This afternoon Peterborough is playing Cannington, while Campbellford, this morning's winners, are pitted against the Lindsay rinks. The final takes place this evening.

GETS SIX MONTHS FOR THE THEFT OF OVERCOAT

Harry Hall, a stranger to this city, pleaded guilty at the Police Court this morning, to stealing an eighty-five dollar fur coat from Barrie and Company's store last week. Hall appeared in court to-day, after a week's remand in jail. His Worship sentenced the prisoner to six months in the Central Prison. The accused was arrested at the C. P. R. Temperance House by P. C. Newhall. The coat was hanging outside and the extremely cold weather was apparently too much for the young man to withstand the temptation of making himself warmer by donning a fur coat that was so easily available

SOME HOCKEY HAPPENINGS

To-morrow night the Peterborough Grillers will be down with a large number of supporters to play the Lindsay Midgets. The Lindsay team has ben greatly strengthened, and stiff practice has improved them a lot, so that they will certainly make a strong effort to redeem the last defeat. Sorel, one of Peterborough's best juniors, has been taken for the intermediates, which will weaken the Grillers considerably. The citizens of Lindsay should turn out in large numbers, as the game will be a tight one, and the Midgets are confident that they can hold the visiting team down.—Lindsay Warder.

Cobourg won their first game in this district of the Intermediate O. H. A. last night by defeating Belleville at Cobourg 6 goals to 2. The defeat puts Belleville tied for third place, with Cobourg in the group standing.

"Doc" Gilbert, the Belleville defence man, is out of the game for the season, as the result of injuries in the recent Belleville-Trenton game, in which he had a number of ribs broken.

PLAYED TO A CROWDED HOUSE

The Murray-Mackey Stock Company made its initial bow to Peterborough people last night when they played the first of their week's offerings to a crowded house and created a most favourable impression. The company is one of the strongest stock organizations that has ever played in this city; strong alike in histrionic ability and in vaudeville features. The work of the principals—Florence J. Murray, J. M. Donavin and the other members of the cast was excellent throughout. The offering last night was "Beyond Pardon," a vehicle that allowed the Company many opportunities of displying their ability. The specialties were away above the average. The bill for the week is as follows:

Tuesday—"Dangers of a Great City".
Wednesday — "Under Sealed Orders".
Thursday—"Why he Divorced her."
Friday—"Thelma."
Saturday—"Younger Bros."
Matinee Wednesday and Saturday, commencing at 2.30.

STILL ANOTHER POSTMASTER TELLS

Why He Pins His Faith to Dodd's Kidney Pills

Doctors failed to cure his Bright's Disease, but he found relief in the Great Canadian Kidney Remedy.

Clam Point, Shelburne Co., N.S., Jan. 16.—(Special)—Joshua Nickerson, postmaster here, is among the many in this neighbourhood who tell of pains relieved and disease banished by Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"I am sixty-two years old," says the postmaster, "And I'll tell you why I think so highly of Dodd's Kidney Pills. Owing to a bad cold my Kidneys commenced to bother me, and the trouble developed into Backache, stiffness of the joints, and finally Bright's Disease.

"I was treated by a doctor, but that did not help me much, and it was six boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills that brought be relief."

Everywhere you go in Canada people tell you of the great work Dodd's Kidney Pills are doing, and everyone who tells you can give the reason why. That reason simply is that there is no case of Kidney Disease Dodd's Kidney Pills cannot cure. These people have tried them and proved this true. Backache, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Diabetes, Lumbago, Heart Disease and Bright's Disease are some of the more serious troubles that Dodd's Kidney Pills always cure, simply because these are all either Kidney diseases or are caused by diseased Kidneys.

The experience of Mr. O. Barber, Simcoe, Ont., is of interest to all who suffer from headaches. I then used six boxes of Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food and have not been troubled with headache since. That was eight months ago."

Boiler Explodes In Engine Cab And 3 Men Are Instantly Killed

Terrible Accident on the New York Central Railway This Morning, Just East of Buffalo—Men Were in Cab

Special Wire to the Examiner.

Buffalo, Jan. 18.—John F. Dawyer, engineer of Buffalo, Jaes Cook, fireman of Buffalo, Richard Frost, brakeman of Syracuse. The above casualties occurred this morning when the engine of a New York Central freight train exploded with terrifying force just east of this city this city this morning. All were in the cab and were killed instantly. The freight was made up of fifty cars westbound. Law water in the boiler was the cause.

STRICKEN WITH PARALYSIS WHILE ALONE IN HOUSE

Mrs. Wm. Wescott, Nearly Eighty Years of Age, is Found in a Half Frozen State and is in Nicholls Hospital in a Most Critical Condition.

Mrs. W. Wescott, widow of the late Wm. Wescott, 318 Burnham street, East City, was the victim of a paralytic stroke yesterday. The aged woman, who is nearly eighty years of age, has been living alone for the last ten or eleven years, in her little cottage on Burnham street, and has been earning her own livelihood. Yesterday afternoon a milk vendor called, as usual, about 1 o'clock in the afternoon, and failed to get any person to come to the door. Thinking that something might be wrong, he called some of the neighbours nearby and broke open the door. They entered her room and found her lying on the floor, half dressed, near her bed, where she had fallen, when she got up, about 7 o'clock, in the morning. She was in a paralyzed and unconscious condition, and nearly frozen. A doctor was called and she was later removed to Nicholls' Hospital, where she is now in a critical condition.

Mrs. Wescott has been a resident of this city for the last thirty-five years. Her husband died about 18 years ago, and she kept a boarder for a few years, when the latter took sick and died. After this Mrs. Wescott lived alone, without any person to look after her, and owing to this condition she was left in the unfortunate position above stated. She has no relations in this country, and was depending entirely upon her own earnings.

DEVELOPMENTS IN THE FARMERS' BANK CASE

Special to The Examiner:

Toronto, Ont., Jan. 18.—That Geo. Wishart is in Buffalo, that Dr. Beattie Nesbitt is just across the border some where, that Wm. J. Lindsay is in Winnipeg or thereabouts and that arrangements are pending between their friends and the Crown authorities for heavy bail if they come back and face the Farmers' Bank charges, this is the summmary of to-day's developments as told by a man well acquainted with the inside story of the cases. In meantime the liquidator Clarkson, is proceeding with the investigation into the bank books and there maybe more warrants any time. The deal regarding Keeley mine begins to enter more prominently into the case every day.

Did Not Direct Soldiers Or Police

London, Eng., Jan. 18.—Hon. Winston Churchill, the Home Secretary this morning at the Conner's inquest into the houndsditch anarchist affair, said that he neither directed nor advised the police as to their conduct of operations nor had anything to do with calling out the soldiers. This statement is important because the question will be brought up in the Commons shortly. The Jury returned a verdict of justifible Homicide in the death of the Anarchists and recommended a severe inspection of questionable immigrants.

Whose Optical Parlors are with the Nugent Drug Co., 380 George St., has from the first day of his opening up in the Optical Business in this city (nearly 7 years ago) recognized and adhered to the principles that every pair of eyes in need of glasses is entitled to specialized optical skill and care. To do this in a perfectly satisfactory manner it is absolutely necessary to give the professional side of the problem concentrated care and study. With this fact in mind we have given the mercantile side secondary consideration, and have devoted our entire time, thought and energy, to scientific eye examination and the making of quality glasses. Our equipment and service are perfect in every detail, so as to enable us to carefully and accurately determine whether glasses are needed or not, and we rightfully claim that ours are superior. "Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unparalleled"

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 18, 1911

ANY EXCUSE SERVES.

Certain Conservative journals show great ingenuity in their quest for excuses to attack Quebec and, incidentally excite racial prejudices, and antagonisms on the part of the other provinces of the Dominion against Quebec. The Toronto News the other day published long and elaborate calculations aimed at showing that Quebec was over-represented in Parliament as compared with the other provinces. It was asserted, by deduction from the figures inentioned, that, according to the recorded vote at the last general election, Quebec was responsible for the other provinces electing htirty-seven fewer representatives than the number of voters they contained, entitled them to return. It is asserted by the News that Quebec returns a member for every 6,379 voters, and that in the other provinces the number of electors, required to elect a member varies, the average being about 8,600.

Thus it is sought to be shown that Quebec is unduly favoured, which is by no means proven. The Fathers of Confederation made population, not the voters' lists, the basis of the unit of representation. The representation of Quebec was, by the British North American Act of 1867, fixed at 65 members, and it remains at that figure, whether it takes 100 or 100,000 voters to elect a member. The numerical representation of the other provinces is arrived at by dividing the population of Quebec, as ascertained by the decennial census, by 65. The result fixes the unit of representation. By dividing the population of each province by this unit the number of members each province is entitled to, is ascertained. At every census the representation is adjusted according to population. If any province shows a greater gain in population than Quebec its representation is proportionately increased; if a lesser gain, it is diminished. But no matter how much Quebec grows it can never have more than 65 members. There is no limit to the number of members other provinces may have if they have the population. This is representation by population, the principle established by the Confederation Act, and one absolutely fair to all the provinces. Each province will get all the members its population calls for.

The figures manipulated by the News are used to support the claim that the last census of Quebec was padded—because the voting unit of Quebec is asserted to be smaller than the unit of population. This is not fair argument. The census, which established the number of members due to each province, was taken nine years ago. In that time the population of some of the provinces has increased far more rapidly than that of Quebec and, after the next census, the latter will be given the additional members their population calls for. It may be that in the intervals between each census there develops some disparity of representation. But the system was devised by the originators of Confederation as a fair one, to all the provinces present or future. If any one has reason to complain it is Quebec; her membership in Parliament is fixed at 65 and stays at that forever, while at every census the representatives of the other provinces increase. At every census Quebec finds her voting power relatively weakened. At Confederation Quebec had 65 of the 181 members of Parliament; now she has 65 out of 220 members, and the disparity will be made greater after this year's census.

There does not seem to be much force in the contention of the News; but that matters little. As in the fable of the wolf and the lamb, any excuse will serve those who are determined, right or wrong, to work the racial cry and to separate Quebec, so far as harmonious citizenship is concerned, from the other provinces of the Dominion. These breeders of strife, for the sake of party advantage, are, in their way, working with the "Nationalists" in the segregation game, and they are aided and abetted by the movements of other elements, working in the interests of the Conservative party, to breed racial strife and religious rancour. All of these elements lose sight of the true motives that should influence the administration of national affairs in the interests of national advancement.

ROAD-MAKING OBJECT LESSON.

A feat has been accomplished, in the way of highway improvement in Iowa, that illustrates what can come of an appreciation of the iniquity of bad roads and the benefits of good roads, and from a cooperation founded upon conviction and organization. It will be of interest to present the story of how 380 miles of highway across a large state of the United States, was reconstructed and made as good as an earth road can be made, in the short space of one hour:

The people in Montgomery county, Kan., by volunteer work, built a modern highway twenty miles long. That record is outclassed by something that has been done by citizens of Iowa. The greatest piece of road-building on record was accomplished in that state recently when, in the space of one single hour, a line of road, 380 miles in length, and stretching entirely across the state, was put in the most perfect condition of any road west of the Mississippi river. Weeks and months were spent in preparation for the work, but not a pick or shovel was used until the designated second was ticked off. Then, as if by magic, 10,000 workmen swarmed out on to the roadway, and when they ceased work, 60 minutes later, Iowa had one of the finest long-distance roads in the entire west.

And not the least interesting thing in connection with the tremendous piece of work is the fact that not a man of the entire 10,000 engaged on the work received one cent of wages. Good will and patriotism alone are responsible for the splendid showing. Last winter the Iowa roads became so fearfully bad that traffic was practically killed, and farmers were simply compelled to remain in their homes. Finally, the matter became a political question, and both parties got behind the movement. Gov. Carroll called a "good roads" meeting at Des Moines, early last March, and out of this meeting was evolved the plan of a "river-to-river" road, stretching from Council Bluffs, on the Missouri river, to Davenport, on the Mississippi, a distance of 380 miles straight across the state from east to west. "Make the river-to-river road as near perfect as is possible to make just common dirt," was the sense of the good roads convention.

Instead of appointing new committees to handle the work, the regular Republican and Democratic committees in each county through which the road would pass, were appealed to. The chairman of the committee of each party was asked to get in the game and work for the road. Everybody agreed to do so, and soon a rivalry was created between Republicans and Democrats, each to see which party would have the most workmen "on the job" when the time for work arrived.

A Saturday was selected as the day and from 9 to 10 o'clock the hour of work. Every farmer along the way was personally seen and agreed to give the one hour that was asked for. Farmers were asked to bring their plows, scrapers and road drags, and an organization equal to those employed in professional railway building was worked out. In the weeks preceding the work all bridges and culverts along the road were repaired and put in first-class order, that no delay might come to the road builders when once this latter started working.

The result of the organization was shown on the appointed Saturday. Shortly before 9 o'clock in the morning farmers began getting out in the road. Hundreds and thousands of plows, picks, shovels, scrapers, road drags, grading machines, and other implements were brought along. Every farmer brought his team with him. Superintendents and overseers had been appointed in readiness, when, promptly at 9 o'clock the order was issued to "fall to". And 10,000 determined men "fell to." For an hour they continued, working with might and main. At 10 o'clock the job was finished, and the farmers went back to their fields, leaving Iowa the possessor of the finest piece of long-distance roadway in the West.

No excuse is needed for giving so much space to such a striking object lesson as the above account represents. The Examiner fully appreciates the benefit of good roads, and has often told farmers what they would know, if they took the trouble to think, that as a class they are losing thousands of dollars a year from bad roads—loss of time in going to and from market, and unnecessary wear and tear of horse flesh and vehicles. This loss, no doubt, amounts to more than ten per cent. on the cost of good, smooth, permanent and—profitable highways. It would be just as reasonable for a farmer to have rough, uneven meadows, with here and there loose stones or the passage of his mower, as it is to have rough roads for his vehicles. If the farmers of the province tilled their farms with the same lack of thrift, foresight and carelessness they apply to their road-making, they wouldn't raise enough to be worth taking to market. It is surprising that municipalities, as a rule, will not deal with the question of road and street building on business principles—build to last and build right. The city of Peterborough has, in her time, wasted tens of thousands of dollars more in make-shift work, treating street over and over again with patch work and careless repairs that are not repairs, than it would have cost to make good, permanent streets in the beginning, that would have given citizens the benefit of good smooth streets and avoided the waste of money made every year in scamping sloppy, make-between street work.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Mr. Clarkson, curator of the Farmers Bank liquidation, says there is little chance of the shareholders escaping the double liability. The present would be an unwholesome time to solicit share subscriptions for a new banking enterprise.

It is stated that the amendment of the Banking Act will be deferred till next session. The expiry of the charters of the banks, synchronizing with the amendment of the Act, will permit of their renewal with stronger safeguards of the public interest. For some time the moral influence of Mr. Travers' punishment will exercise a greater deterrent effect, in respect of carelessness or wrong doing, than the most drastic legislation. And when the dragnet shall have drawn in all culpably concerned in the Farmers Bank fiasco, the administrators of banking interests will have been provided with a lesson that will last them many a day—at least till the Banking Act is amended.

The letter written to the newspapers by Mr. John S. Ewart about the credit due to himself and the credit due to Sir Allan Ayelsworth over the fisheries affair, has, the Montreal Herald says, excited pretty much the same sort of comment from all quarters. There is a general recognition that financial reward is the full portion of the one who gets it, and public approval the portion of the one who doesn't. Thus, if Sir Alan Aylesworth was knighted for doing no more than selecting Mr. Ewart for the work he did and was paid for doing, the division of rewards would still be equal.

Mr. M. Y. McLean, Liberal member for South Huron, writing to his paper, The Seaforth Expositor, says:

Mr. Borden is a gentleman in every sense of the term. It is no personal profit to him to be in politics. He has ability to adorn his own profession, and were he to devote himself to that he would make five times more money than he received for being leader of the Opposition.

All this is very true, but unfortunately these qualifications do not fit him to be the leader of a great party. He shows incapacity for devising a large or consrtuctive policy, or for sticking to what he does devise. Mr. Borden does not come under the reproach of neglecting opportunity, indeed one of his weaknesses is his fondness for capitalizing opportunity as a political asset.

Curing Catarrh

Accept Our Advice and Try This Remedy at Our Risk

Catarrh is a disease of the mucous membrane. The mucous membrane is, one may say, the interior lining of the body. Catarrh therefore may exist in any part of the system.

When the catarrhal poison attacks the mucous membrane, inflammation and congestion are produced and nature fails to throw off the accumulated poisons. The organ which has been afflicted ceases to perform its proper function as nature intended it should. The result is, complication upon complication, which may lead to other even more serious afflictions.

We honestly believe Rexall Mucu-Tone will do wonders toward overcoming catarrh. It is made from the prescription of an eminent physician who ade a long study of catarrh, and his great success with this remedy was an enviable one.

We want you if you are a sufferer from catarrh in any form, to give Rexall Mucu-Tone a thorough trial. Use it with regularity and persistency for a reasonable time, then if you are not satisfied, come back and tell us, and without question or formality we will hand back to you every cent you paid us. This is certainly the fairest offer that any one could make and should attest our sincerity of purpose. It comes in two sizes, price 50 cents and $1.00. Remember you can obtain it only at McDermid and Jury, corner George and Charlotte Streets.

By John T. McIntyre. Copyrighted and All Rights Reserved

"My dear doctor," said Ashton-Kirk, soothingly, "it is not at all necessary that you do so. The fact is, to state it briefly there is a trifling matter for adjustment between Professor Locke and the commonwealth."

"The commonwealth!" cried the doctor, and he shook like a great mass of gelatine.

"Nothing less. So, you see, it will be as well for you to do as I suggest." Then, turning to Pendleton, Ashton-Kirk continued: "I think we had better walk the remainder of the way; otherwise we might get Locke's attention before it is advisable."

Pendleton jumped down, and without another word to Dr. Mercer, they set off toward the slate-roofed house by the roadside. However, after they had gone about fifty yards, Pendleton turned and looked back. He saw the small horse jogging away, while behind it, helplessly fat and hopelessly befogged, sat Dr. Mercer, swaying dispiritedly from side to side.

As Ashton-Kirk and Pendleton advanced upon the house, they bore in mind the possibility of Locke being on the watch; so they kept out of sight as much as possible.

"It's rather odd, I think, that he hangs on here, knowing that his part in the murder of Hume must now be known," said Pendleton. I rather expected an attempt at escape."

"That may come later," said the investigator, grimly. "The finish of a thing of this sort is always a matter for speculation. I have seen desperate criminals who surrendered like lambs; and I've seen the other sort give a platoon of police a good day's work in their taking."

"Do you think it possible that Locke is one of this latter type?"

"There is no knowing. But I am inclined to believe that he is."

Pendleton shook his head. It seemed impossible that this dapper little man with his peering, short-sighted eyes could be capable of any determined effort to escape the police when once driven into a corner. However, Pendleton had ample reason to respect Ashton-Kirk's judgment; and so when the latter deemed it necessary to approach with caution, he acted accordingly.

They paused in front of the house. It was now past ten o'clock and the sun was shining brightly; a little patch of garden, filled with early flowering plants lay between the house and the wood; all about the work-shop were the tall trees which they had noticed upon their previous visit.

"We had better not use the gate", suggested the investigator. "There might be an attachment of some sort that will give him warning."

So under cover of the trees they scaled the fence; then they carefully made their way toward the shop.

The windows and door of this were closed, nothing was stirring. Near the door was scattered some rubbish and loose paper. The place had an utterly deserted look.

"Do you think he is there?" asked Pendleton.

"I will know in a few minutes," replied the other. "Wait here."

Pendleton expected Ashton-Kirk to continue his cautious approach. But to his surprise the investigator with cool assurance stepped out from behind a tree and advanced toward the outbuilding; when he reached the door he opened it and calmly stepped inside.

The building was in one great room It had some windows at the side, but the greater part of its illumination came from a huge skylight. As he closed the door behind him, Ashton-Kirk had a vague impression of something huge, made of steel rods and with far-stretching wing-like projections at the sides. But he had no time to give the mechanism even a glance; of greater interest was the small figure which sat at a wide work-table upon which a litter of drawings was scattered.

It was Locke; and as the slight jar of the closing door reached him he lifted his eyes and saw the intruder. If Ashton-Kirk expected any display of fear of other emotion, he was disappointed; upon each of his previous meetings with Locke the latter had shown great trepidation; but now he simply nodded quietly, and seemed not at all surprised.

But as Ashton-Kirk made a step toward him, he rose and raised his hand in a gesture that was peremptory and unmistakable. The investigator paused; then Locke pointed to a chair directly before his bench, but some half-dozen yards away; and when Ashton-Kirk smilingly seated himself, Locke did likewise.

Then in heavy characters he scrawled upon the back of one of the blueprints.

"I was expecting a visitor and fancied that it might be you."

This he held up so that the investigator might read it. Ashton-Kirk nodded. Again the back of a plan came into service and this time the investigator read.

"What has occurred is most unfortunate. I had no hand in it, though, of course. I do not expect anyone to believe me."

Here Ashton-Kirk drew a note book from his pocket and was about to write but the other stopped him with a gesture. The the man once more wrote carefully, heavily, in order that the other might have no difficulty in reading it from the distance.

"Pardon me! But it is not necessary for you to go to any trouble. Moreover—I beg of you not to think me rude—your opinions in the matter have no interest for me."

Ashton-Kirk acknowledged this with a grave nod. The pencil was instantly at work again.

"As I have said, I expected a visitor; but I will now add that I did not expect to be here to receive him.

Ashton-Kirk looked swiftly into Locke's face as he read this; the expression was unmistakable, and the investigator leaped to his feet. But the mute uttered a strange parrot-like cry—evidently the same that Edyth heard that night in Christie Place—and Ashton-Kirk saw his hand go swiftly to a button at one side of the work-bench. Instantly the investigator paused; once more a gesture bade him be seated.

Slowly he obeyed; and once more Locke began to trace bold characters upon the stiff paper. This message read:

"You are a wise man. I had arranged everything before you came in, and sat down to make an end of it. This button of my hand once started an electric apparatus; but now it is connected with a quantity of an explosive—my own invention, and a terrible one. Believe me, one touch and everything in this building is in fragments."

Ashton-Kirk, when he had finished reading, nodded quietly. Again the mute began to write.

"I have no ill will toward you," the words ran, "you have two minutes to leave here, and get safely away."

When he saw that this had been read, Locke threw down the paper and took out his watch. Then he pointed toward the door and sat waiting.

It was strange to see the little man sitting there calmly with only the pressure of a finger between him and eternity. But Ashton-Kirk knew stern resolution too well to mistake the look on the mute's face. There was nothing to do but to obey. He waved his hand in a farewell. Locke returned the gesture. Then Ashton-Kirk walked to the door, opened it, and stepped out.

Pendleton, patiently watching among the trees, saw him emerge, and at once moved toward him; to his amazement the investigator took him by the arm and broke into a run.

"What the deuce is the matter now?" asked Pendleton, after they had passed the gate and were racing down the road.

"You'll know in a few moments," returned Ashton-Kirk grimly.

He permitted no pause until they reached the car, the engine of which had not been stopped.

"Quick for your lives," he ordered, as he leaped in.

Pendleton and Burgess followed instantly. The car had scarcely begun its plunge forward when a horrible rending shock staggered them. And as they sped away the debris of the deaf-mute's workshop was falling all about them.

The evening papers were glaring with the news from Cordova by the time the two friends were once more alone in Ashton-Kirk's library. Pendleton seemed to be pondering.

"I say," said he, at last, "was it Morris or Spatola who remained at Hume's the night of the murder?"

"I spoke to Spatola about that," answered Ashton-Kirk. "He said it was Morris who left first and whom Hume pursued by jeers through the open window. Morris had, according to his resolve, called at the place to demand the plans; but Hume was mad with liquor and was even worse in his manner than usual. Unable to bear it, Morris had rushed out. Spatola later made his way out by way of the scuttle and across the roof, as he frequently did.

"The thing which Spatola had carried under his coat that night was a diploma which he had received from a musical conservatory in Rome. It was in a frame and so made considerable bulk. Hume had denied that afternoon that Spatola had ever studied in this particular conservatory; frantic with rage, but knowing that he was a fool for doing it, the Italian had brought his diploma as proof.

"Morris, under the name of Crawford, occupied a room on the floor below Spatola; and as soon as the musician entered through the scuttle, he descended the stairs and went immediately to his friend's room to console and encourage him.

"Some time passed, and while they were still talking they heard a step upon the stairs leading to the attic. As no one lived there but himself, Spatola looked and in the semi-darkness saw two men descending. He called and asked why they were, and Sagon's voice replied that it was he and a friend. They had gone up to have a talk and smoke a cigar with him; but seeing that he was not in, they had come down at once. And now, as he was evidently engaged, they would not trouble him, and with that they disappeared within Sagon's room."

"Then," said Pendleton, "they had gone up through the attic, across the roofs, committed the deed, and returned while Spatola was with Morris?"

"It would seem so."

"But suppose that on reaching the attic, upon their return they had found Spatola there."

"Sagon had calculated it all very nicely. One night a week Spatola went to play with two compatriots at their rooms; with piano, harp and violin, they gave vent to the harmony that was in them. That was the night for the trio, and Sagon knew it. But in his rage and his desire to prove his standing to Hume, Spatola had forgotten it. When he descended to Morris' rooms, the two criminals thought he had gone to make his usual visit to his friends. Sagon says he almost lost his nerve when the Italian confronted them on the stairs."

Is This Your Boy

Who At Tender Age Must Face the Hard, Cold World Without Preparation or Protection.

No. You could not think of such a thing. And yet, would you neglect your health as you do if you waited to think of your family and how they would get along without you.

You have not the old-time vigour and energy. You go home tired and worn out, feel cross and irritable, lack the old-time smile and good cheer which brought sunshine into your home at your arrival.

You don't sleep well, the brain is not so clear and active, little things annoy and worry you. In short, the nervous system is exhausted. You know this, but do not want to consult a doctor, and scarcely know what to do.

Use Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. It cannot fail to do you good, for it is made up of the elements of which your run-down system is most in need. Through the medium of the blood it sends new energy and vigour to every organ of the human body.

You can feel yourself getting stronger every day. You can prove it by noting your increase in weight. You will sleep better, appetite and digestion will improve, and you will feel again the courage and energy which can only exist side by side with good health and steady nerves.

A National Enterprise.

Halifax, N.S., Jan. 18.—The Halifax Board of Trade yesterday unanimously passed a resolution asking the Government of Nova Scotia to confer with the City Council of Halifax in regard to granting assistance to the drydock company, to enable it to enlarge the dock at this port to 800 feet. It is now about 500 feet long, and the company proposes extending it to 650 feet, but the board is anxious for the greater extension. A move was also made to have Halifax harbor and its terminals placed in the hands of a federal commission, the present railway and spring shipping terminals being spoken of as antiquated and inadequate, not only for the requirements of the near future, but also for the present.

Six Members Ejected.

Melbourne, Australia, Jan. 18.—Extraordinary scenes have marked the progress of a redistribution bill introduced in the State Parliament of West Australia. The measure incurred the hostility of the Labor members of the House, and they resorted to obstructive tactics. For 20 hours they kept the House sitting, delivering speech after speech, and argument after argument until, from sheer exhaustion, they were obliged to give up.

During the progress of the sitting six members of the Labor party were ejected from the House, one of the Laborites showed fight, and the services of the police were requisitioned. Finally the Labor party withdrew in a body, and, progress having been made with the redistribution bill, the assembly arose.

The bill will be enacted into law in spite of the opposition of the Labor members.

Quebec's Program.

Quebec, Jan. 18.—The seventeenth annual meeting of the Quebe Board of Trade was held yesterday afternoon, when the officers for the past year were re-elected as follows: President, G. A. Vandry; vice-presidents, Wm. A. Marsh and J. Picard; treasurer, A. E. Scott. The board is in a flourishing condition.

The program of the board for the coming year includes immediate construction of grain elevators and additional steamship berths to handle the grain trade of the west; the construction without further delay of a graving dock at Lewis, to accommodate the largest steamers reaching the St. Lawrence; the necessity for a faster and more frequent Atlantic mail service, and the promotion of steel shipbuilding in Quebec, in connection with the construction of naval vessels.

Will Hold Investigation.

Winnipeg, Jan. 18—Heavy fire losses in this city's wholesale district have at last aroused concern in civic circles, and an investigation is likely to be made. A meeting of the City Council has been called for to-day, and the business will probably consist of the appointment of a commission to make full enquiry into the recent fires.

In spite of the installation of an expensive high-pressure water works plant and the purchase of much modern equipment for the fire brigade, little advance is to be seen in the results attained in efforts to check fires in large buildings. Insurance men are reported as saying that the losses sustained represent seven times the amount of the premiums received on that class of business.

Looks Like Incendiarism.

Halifax, N.S., Jan. 18.—Yarmouth had a three-alarm fire last night in the heart of the town, but it was reached in time, and the damage will not amount to more than $2,500. It was in the large building, formerly the Yarmouth Hotel, which is now occupied by Jews. At the time of the fire almost all the Jews were attending a Jewish wedding.

Flames were first noticed in the rooms of Samuel Lynch. When the fire was out it was found his stock, valued at $2,000, had disappeared and that the fire had started in a case containing rags saturated with kerosene. The bottle was still there. The police are investigating.

A child and a young Jewess were taken out by the firemen, almost suffocated.

To Become Branch of G.T.R.

Ottawa, Jan. 18.—"The Grand Trunk Railway owns a controlling part of the of the stock of the Rideau Valley and Brockville Railway now, and it is altogether likely that the line will finally become a branch of the Grand Trunk Railway," said D. H. McLean, vice-president of the company that proposes to build between here and Brockville.

Crashed Into Bridge.

St. Catharines, Jan. 18.—As the result of a coasting accident which occurred at Thorold, Vincent Battle, son of Matthew Battle of that town, is at the General Hospital suffering from serious internal injuries. He, together with his cousin, Miss Tillie Battle and Miss Alice Dooley of Buffalo, and Leonard Battle, were coasting on the hill, which is quite steep, and had gained good speed, and when a wagon was noticed approaching, the sleigh ran out of its course and crashed into the side of the canal bridge. Battle, who was steering, was rendered unconscious. Miss Dooley sustained a sprained ankle.

Wants Home-Built Ships.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 18.—The Minister of Commerce has proposed a bill to encourage the shipbuilding industry. The bill provides for the payment of the premiums for vessels built in Russia of Russian materials, and for the cessation of the free import of foreign-built ships.

St. Stephen, N.B., Jan. 18.—Quartermaster Sergt. Leongills of the R.C.R., Fredericton, who had been detailed to instruct the public school teachers in the newly-introduced physical training, ended his life here last night by shooting.

No cause is given for the act. He was discovered lying upon the bed in his room. A Colt revolver of 45 calibre was clasped in his right hand, the bullet having entered the roof of his mouth and torn its way through the skull, lodging in the wall at the head of his bed. He remains are to be sent to Fredericton.

SPLENDID LECTURE ON INJURIOUS TAX METHODS

Mr. A. B. Farmer, B.A., Secretary of the League for Taxation Reform, Addressed the Members of the Brotherhood of St. Paul in St. Paul's Church Last Night.

A fund of illuminating information on injurious systems of taxation was furnished last evening by Mr. A. B. Farmer, B.A., of Toronto, the Secretary of the League for Taxation Reform, at the meeting of the Brotherhood of St. Paul in St. Paul's Church. Mr. Farmer showed that all over the world there is unrest with the systems of taxation that are commonly in vogue and claimed that this is due to the fact that it is practically all based on an unjust principle. He claimed that this dissatisfaction would continue as long as men are penalised for every improvement they make. The imposition of a heavy tax on bachelors tended to make them marry, a heavy tax on dogs leads to less dogs being kept, a tax on a frame or rough cast building resulted in less of such buildings being erected and for exactly and improvements led to less buildings being erected and improvements being made. There were municipalithe same reasons taxes on buildings were so high men refrained from erecting such buildings.

Mr. Farmer then showed that there is a fundamental difference between a building and the land on which it is standing. The former was constructed by man and can be destroyed at the whim of its owner. Land was created by God and cannot be destroyed. No individual can increase the value of land no matter what they might do to it. Its value was increased solely by the demand for that land and this demand was in proportion to the number of people living in the community. Therefore, as long as men had the power to hold land idle in sections where the population was increasing they would have the right to appropriate the increased value given to it by the community.

Mr. Farmer claimed that the best system of taxation was to tax land according to its value. In Vancouver where this system is in force it had been found that the removal of the tax on buildings had so encouraged the building trade it had led to a greater demand for land, with some other districts where it is being taxed more than formerly, it was in even greater demand. The success the principle is meeting with in some oth erdistricts where it is being tried was mentioned. It was shown that many of the foremost public men in the world are strong advocates of this system.

The subject proved very interesting to those present, so much so, that a number remained afterward and discussed the matter more fully with Mr. Farmer. The next speaker for the Brotherhood of St. Paul will be Dr. Shearer, the Secretary of the Social and Moral Committee of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, who has recently been through the big fight in Winnipeg.

TORONTO VAGRANTS IN THE LOCAL POLICE COURT

Were Ordered to Get Out of Town but Only Went Six Miles and Came Back—Before the Magistrate Again To-day.

Geo. Lillie and John Newton were arraigned before Magistrate Dumble in the Police Court this morning on a charge of vagrancy. Both young men have been in the cells for the last few days and came to this city from Toronto. They stated that they had lived in Toronto all their lives. Chief Thompson gave them a chance to get out of town on Sunday, which they accepted, but returned later after going out about six miles. The chief recommended that they be remanded for a week, in order that he could communicate with the authorities in Toronto and find out something about their past character.

This was accordingly done and they will remain in the cells until then.

Oscar Hallihan, a local bartender, was charged with assaulting Robt. L. Anderson, on December 31st last. He pleaded not guilty. Anderson took the box and gave evidence to the effect that he was at the hotel and was drinking on that date although he was only 18 years of age. He asked Hallihan for more liquor, after he had received three or four glasses, and the latter refused him. He then swore at the bartender and called him names with the result that the defendant hit him in the eye.

Fred Anderson, brother of the witness gave corroborating evidence. His Worship, Magistrate Dumble then said that he felt that he was not justified in imposing a fine on the defendant as he had been called obnoxious names., when he was endeavoring to do what was right. He then issued an order putting Anderson on the Blacklist.

Another charge was laid against Anderson to which he pleaded not guilty. The Chief was not ready to go on with the case so it was adjourned until Monday afternoon at Two o'clock.

USUALLY ONE DOSE ENDS INDIGESTION

Dyspepsia, Heartburn, Gas and All Stomach Distress Vanishes

If your meals don't fit comfortably, or you feel bloated after eating, and you believe it is the food which fills you; if what little you eat lies like a lump of lead on your stomach; if there is difficulty in breathing after eating, eructations of sour, undigested food and acid, heartburn, brash or a belching of gas, you can make up your mind that you need something to stop food fermentation and cure Indigestion.

To make every bite of food you eat aid in the nourishment and strength of your body, you must rid your Stomach of poisons, excessive acid and stomach gas, which sours your entire meal—interferes with digestion and causes so many sufferers of Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Biliousness, Constipation, Griping, etc. Your case is no different—you are a stomach sufferer, though you may call it by some other name; your real and only trouble is that which you eat does not digest, but quickly ferments and sours, producing almost any unhealthy condition.

A case of Pape's Diapepsin will cost fifty cents at any Pharmacy here, and will convince any stomach sufferer five minutes after taking a single dose that Fermentation and Sour Stomach is causing the misery of Indigestion.

No matter if you call your trouble Catarrh of the Stomach, Nervousness or Gastritis, or by any other name—always remember that a certain cure is waiting at any drug store the moment you decide to begin its use.

Pape's Diapepsin will regulate any out-of-order Stomach within five minutes, and digest promptly, without any fuss or discomfort, all or any kind of food you eat.

A MONSTER HOG

One Purchased by Mr. John Mervin Weighs 625 Pounds

One of the biggest hogs ever brought into Peterborough has been purchased by Mr. John Mervin, the Hunter street butcher, from Wm. Gill of Smith, who raised the animal, which tipped the scales at exactly 625 pounds. The hog is the heaviest in Mr. Mervin's recollection, and has only been exceeded once in the past seventeen years in the memory of the older resident butchers. Seventeen years ago Mr. J. J. Howden purchased a hog from the late Wm. Carr for many years caretaker of the Little Lake bridge, that weighed 715 pounds.

Family Cured of Eczema By Cuticura Remedies

"The Cuticura treatment has absolutely cured me and family of eczema which I, my wife and two-year-old child had for eight months. It started with small pimples on the head of my child which gradually broke out in sores, and it was not long before I and my wife got the same. Our heads were one mass of sores, we could not sleep and the itching was terrible. We suffered for eight months. We tried different kinds of ointments and medicine but it did us no good and soon it began to break out on our bodies until a friend who had the same trouble told me about Cuticura of which I used two sets of Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Resolvent, and I was surprised. After the first few days our heads began to heal and in two months we were absolutely cured of this terrible eczema."

(Signed) EUGENE POTTHOFF,

No stronger evidence than this could be given of the success and economy of the Cuticura Remedies in the treatment of torturing, disfiguring humors of the skin and scalp, of infants, children and adults. LAID UP FIVE YEARS

Until Half a Bottle of Father Morrisey's Liniment Cured His Shoulder.

Mr. Jos. J. Roy, a prominent tinsmith of Bathurst, N.B., july 16, 1909:

"I cannot let this opportunity pass without letting you know what benefit I received from your Liniment. For five years I had a sore shoulder, which prevented me from working or from sleeping at night. I had tried everything possible and still could find no relief, until I was advised to try a bottle of your liniment, which I purchased without delay. I only used one half of the bottle when I was completely cured, and now I feel as if I never had a sore shoulder. I would advise anyone suffering from Rheumatic pains to give your liniment a trial, for I cannot praise it too highly."

A liniment that will do that is the liniment you want. It is equally good for sore throat or chest, backache, toothache, ear ache, sprains, sore muscles, cuts, bruises, burns, frost-bites, chapped hands or chilblains. Rub it in, and the pain comes out. 25c per bottle at your dealer's, or from Father Morrisey Medicine Co. Ltd., Chatham, N.B. 6d

EXPECT TO SOLVE THE BIG MYSTERY

Special to The Examiner:

CUMBERLAND, MD., JAN. 17.—State's Attorney Robb, hot on the trail trying to find some conclusive evidence in the mysterious Elosser-Twigg double tragedy, is talking now with more confidence. He firmly believes the mystery will be solved and maybe in less than a week. The police, who have not been taken into the case, but who have been watching keenly, state that the State is acting on some clues that have awakened confidence.

The detectives in the case are busy. Their work calls for much correspondence, and typewriters are on the constant click in their rooms at the Windsor Hotel. The detectives have been questioning drug clerks, but it is said have gotten nothing from this source. Some of the drug clerks here have confessed ignorance as to cyanide. They say the tragedy has brought to light a poison for which they had never had a call and about which they knew nothing.

J. C. Mckown, manager of the peach orchards of the Millers, denies that he ever sold Twigg cyanide of potassium, but his books show that he sold to the Twigg Orchard Co., of which Twigg was half owner, arsenate of lead. Mr. McKown said that the Twigg Company may have purchased cyanide from the Keyser camp. Despite the positive statements of the brothers of Twigg that his orchard company never used cyanide in spraying, the fact is that Twigg had knowledge of the use of the poison in his business. This is admitted by persons who knew. All other orchardists hereabout have used the poison for spraying purposes. While persons claim to have heard Mr. McKown say he sold Twigg cyanide for commercial purposes. McKown positively denies that he ever made such a sale.

Mr. Robb has been deluged with letters offering suggestions as to how the case may be solved.

In the Elosser home all is again commonsure. May Elosser has returned to her duties as teacher in the primary department of the Chapel Hill School. She had no intention of resigning, despite report. This is her chosen work, although persons who saw her on the witness stand at the inquest declare she would have made a great actress. She was a study. From a school teacher, whose work is such as to require no brilliant effort, and from a quiet home which had no social pretense, a girl comparatively unknown in her own town, sprung into the limelight, and in successfully repelling the grilling she displayed remarkable powers.

The Elossers have had a number of callers during the week and all have been received with friendliness. The pang has worn off somewhat, and the family has resumed the composure of "simple folk."

Eight-year-old Harlan Benjamin Norris is still a highly-credited witness in public opinion. What the boy said he saw, dovetails with what Mr. and Mrs. Elosser saw, in so far as the position of the bodies is concerned.

WATCHED FOR 25 YEARS

Mr. D. M. Waters, the popular druggist, Belleville, Ont., sold his first box of Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills a quarter of a century ago and since then has noted many remarkable cures, as this medicine grew in popularity. The latest cure coming to his attention is that of Mrs. Jack Ottrey, Bay Side, Ont., who was cured of wrinkles disappear, and the glow of health returns to the cheeks.

BODIES LOST THIRTEEN YEARS

SEATTLE, WASH., JAN. 17.—A special from Valdez, Alaska, says:

Five hundred feet down a crevasse in the great Valdez glacier have been discovered the bodies of six burros, making up the pack-train of a party of Eastern prospectors who started for the Copper River country from this port thirteen years ago and were lost.

W. H. Crary, travelling over the glacier, made the discovery. The depths of the crevasse were momentarily illuminated by the sun as Crary crossed it and he caught sight of the burros.

With the aid of his binoculars he saw the bodies in a perfect state of preservation, equipped with packsaddles and packs. He could not discover any human bodies, but it is believed the owners of the pack-train also perished in the crevasse, and an attempt will be made, as soon as the weather moderates, to learn whether such was the case.

BROKEN NECK WAS RE-SET

YORK, PA., JAN. 17.—Nature reset, as though by magic, the neck which Edward Brooks, of Rennoll's Mill, broke in May, 1898, as the man slept last night, and medical men marvelled a second over the case when he presented himself before them to-day, recovered.

Brooks, who had been a man of astonishing escapes all his sixty-eight years of life, fell fifteen feet from a cherry tree, and, realising that his neck was broken and that an attempt to carry him into the house meant death, directed his helpers to securely bind his head in the position in which it rested against his shoulder, after which they then assisted him to walk in.

Doctors held out no hopes for his recovery, and under medical treatment his neck became rigidly fixed in its unnatural position, permitting him to go about his duties with little discomfort. This recovery was considered very remarkable until the other night, as he slept, the great wonder ensued.

With his neck again in normal position, Brooks came to York and called upon Dr. Sieling, who confirmed the amazing recovery.

WEDDING BELLS

STARK—MILLER.

A very pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Miller, of Otonabee, on Wednesday evening, Jan. 11, when their daughter, Frances Mabel, was united in marriage to William E. Stark of Otonabee, in the presence of about sixty guests. The ceremony was performed by Rev. D. D. MacDonald, pastor of the Presbyterian church, Keene. At seven o'clock the bride entered the parlour leaning on the arm of her father, to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, played very artistically by Miss Lilian Campbell, cousin of the bride, and took her place beside the groom under an arch of evergreens. The bride looked charming dressed in a very becoming gown of aeroplane Duchess Satin, prettily trimmed with embroidered chiffon and crystal, and wearing the customary bridal veil. The only ornament the bride wore was a beautiful sunburst of pearls, which, with a handsome bouquet of white roses, were gifts of the groom. Miss Mary Armstrong, cousin of the bride, assisted as flower-girl, and looked very pretty in a dress of white mulle and carrying white and pink carnations.

After the congratulations had been received the bride led the way to the dining-room, where a sumptuous wedding dinner was served. The tables were artistically decorated with white and pink carnations, and smilax. A beautiful silver candelabra was in the centre of the table.

The bride was the recipient of many beautiful and costly presents testifying to the high esteem in which she was held, among them was a handsome fur-lined coat, the gift of her parents. The groom's gift to the flower-girl was a pretty gol dbracelet and to the pianist a dainty star and crescent of pearls.

Guests were present from Port Hope, Peterborough, Norwood, Bensfort and Keene.

After the evening had been pleasantly spent, the happy couple left for their future home in Otonabee, amid a shower of confetti and good wishes.

POST CARD COLUMN

Sporting Editor of the Examiner,—

On reading the sporting news of your paper last night, I see that some person who has cold feet has taken the authority for saying that the Lock Work boys were the chief offenders in the hockey game they played on Monday night against the Pill-pounders in the Mercantile League. All I have to say is that we can prove that the Pill-pounders were the chief agitators of the affair, and got what they were looking for. I might further say that we didn't go out of our factory to pick our team, which is more than we can say for the Pill-pounders.

LOCK WORKS MANAGER.

The report in question was written by the Examiner sporting editor, who saw the game from start to finish, and has no apologies to make. Neither it might be mentioned, are his pedal extremities in a chilled condition.

THE WEATHER

Last night the thermometer was down to 9 degrees below zero, the same figure as yesterday morning. More moderate conditions are now likely.—W. P.

The Canadian Club has succeeded in securing Sir Geo. C. Gibbons, president of the International Waterways Commission to address the Club early in February.

INTERESTING DEBATE BY ST. ANDREW'S Y. M. GUILD

The regular monthly meeting of St. Andrew's Young Mens Guild was held last evening in the Guild Room. A large number of young people were present. After the business of the meeting was disposed of a short programme wass rendered as follows:—

Duet—Misss Girvin and Miss Shearer.

Reading—Miss Billings.

Instrumental—Mrs. P. A. Kerr and Miss King.

After which a debate, resolved that organized labor has been a benefit to the classes it represents was ably handled by Messrs. McDonald and Richardson for the affirmative and Mr. Campbell and Langford for the negative. Mr. Langford took Mr. P. A. Kerr's place at the last minute owing to Mr. Kerr's being unable to attend.

After hearing the arguments put forward by both sides the audience voted in favor of the affirmative.

Refreshments were served by the Daughters of Erin. The Guild of St. Andrews is again in a flourishing condition and the benefits of the monthly meetings are looked upon to bring numbers of young men together.

Mr. W. Langford, the President, occupied the chair and Rev. Mr. Rollins, the pastor, who was present pronounced the benediction.

Ben Dusty Goes To Brantford With Pete Charlton's New Team

Toronto, Jan. 18.—Manager Pete Charlton, late of the Picton pros., went through Toronto to-day en route to Brantford, where a hand-picked Brantford team will play its first game with Berlin to-night, and after the game a new schedule for the league will be drawn up.

Charlton puts in a vigorous denial to the statement made by Harry Burgoyne of the Picton team that the players had backed him and Buck Irving into a corner and made them pay up.

"We were losing money in Picton so we decided to chuck it," said Charlton. "I called the players together and gave them their choice of their salaries in full or the franchise out flat and $50. They accepted the latter and assisted by the ring management will continue."

Charlton's team for Brantford is as follows:

Goal—Cross, of Belleville, formerly of Waterloo and Ingersoll.

Point—Dubeau, of Trenton, who was with Berlin for two years. He also played with Montreal Shamrocks.

Cover—Charlton himself. He is too well known to require introduction.

The sitting Charlton gave eBlleville, Picton and Trenton makes it look as if Port Hope is to be left all alone in her glory in the Lake Shore Legaue.

TAKEN TO BERLIN

Eight children, wards of the Children's Aid Society were taken to Berlin yesterday where they will be placed in good homes and where they will receive proper care and training. They were sent to Lindsay in the morning where they were met by Rev. Mr. Miller, an officer of the Society, who will have charge of them to Berlin. Five of these are the Davis children who were brought to the local shelter from Havelock at the time of the investigation in December. The other three are named Cook. They originally belonged to Peterborough County but until the other day when they were brought here, they were living in Cobourg.

THE ROBBING OF MARTHA

A Short Story

In a room of scrupulous neatness, with its luxuriously comfortable chairs as immutable, in their stiff positions, as if chalk marks at which to place their feet were visible on the soft tinted Oriental rugs, and with the unshaded electric lights, illuminating harshly the ancestral paintings that hung at regular intervals on the dun colored walls, sat a woman in white, busily writing at a commodious, old-fashioned mahogany desk.

At the first glance one would be led to say: "A buxom middle-aged woman," but on closer scrutiny, one was forced to admit that only the young can be so trig, yet so compact at one and the same time.

She wrote slowly, forming her letters painstakingly into a delicate, Spenserian handwriting. The letter ran as follows:

"Dear Margaret,

"For several days I have been meaning to write, ever since, in fact, you told me of your success in the making of orange marmalade. I knew that if you followed my recipe carefully it could not fail to come out right. The measurements are exactly correct. I have tested them many times. Father complains that the flavor is monotonous, but he, as you must remember, is always making fun of what he terms my old-maidish precision of character.

"I have set the twelfth of June as the day on which I shall become Mrs. Josiah Burlingame. I have made a water-color sketch of your bridesmaid dress, and will send it under a separate cover.

"Mother is much pleased with the way I have managed to finish everything so long beforehand. I dislike hurry and confusion and untidiness of every kind too much to be dilatory about such an important matter as my marriage.

"But to affairs of greater moment. We are having an excitement. Three houses on the lower road have been robbed of jewellery in the past month. I used to tremble every time I looked at my diamonds. There are three large ones in my own engagment ring, in addition to them, there is grandmother's solitaire that I always wear on the same finger.

"I have made all my plans as to what I should do, if an attempt were made to rob me. First I should"—— and with pen poised in air Martha Green hesitated a moment and murmured:

"First I should"——

She stopped abruptly. A man stood by her side. One dirty hand gripped her shoulder. Water dripped from every corner of his rain-soaked ulster. He looked young and was clean shaven. His forehead was low. His ears seemed to reach from the bottom of his plaid cap to the top of his coat collar.

"Cut out the hollers, lady. I knows you're alone in the house.

"Off"——

"Yes," she interrupted him, "yes, off my shoulder with your dirty, wet hand. Can not you see that you are soiling my"——

He removed his hand and spluttered out in a harsh guttural tone:

"Cut it out, lady. Cut it out and off"——

Again she was too quick for him. Getting up and moving a step away from him, shook her forefinger imperiously at him and said:

"Yes, off of that pink Turkish rug immediately! Cannot you see that you are ruining it? Stand on the hearth and drip where it can easily be cleaned up. Now, talk to me as a gentleman should, or I shall be forced to call the police."

He obeyed her peremptory command as if accustomed to military discipline, but at the word "police" his face became dark with malevolence.

"If you try to get out, I'll puncture you. 'Talk like a gentleman,' you say," and he swore. "What I——"

"Stop using such unseemly language," she interjected. "I have no intention of jumping from the window. To begin with, it is much too far. Then it is very muddy down therein the garden, and I have on a new pair of evening slippers that I am breaking in."

Had he been a friend she would have added "for my trousseau."

She stood squarely planted, a short distance from him, every fold of her stiffly starched, tailor-made looking white dress in place. She looked evenly and near sightedly at him out of her brown eyes like a ruminant cow. Her hands were folded neatly in front of her and from the third finger of her left hand shone out four brilliant diamonds.

The thief's eyes rested covetously on the jewels. Shaking with impatience, he shouted:

"Cutting out all this gentleman business, by your leave, what I says and what I means, too, is: Off with them diminds, quick."

"You are mistaken. These are not diamonds." She spoke tolerantly and looked down at her hand critically. "They are imitations. You are wasting your time here and dirtying things up to no purpose. You have already done irretrievable damage to the rug and"——

"Cut it out, lady," he reiterated, savagely. "Off with them diminds, immejitt. I'm bein' perlite now like a gentleman to please you, but in just a minit ther'll be somethin' doin'."

He drew a large knife from the hip pocket and started to open it.

She looked at the knife unflinchingly. Slowly she drew off the rings of her hands trembled. She set her mouth firm. Deliberate determination showed in every motion she made.

"My own engagement ring!" she said, as if bidding it good-bye. "My dear grandmother's engagement ring!"

Before she had time to hand them to him, he grabbed at them. Tossing them lightly into the air in quick succession he said as he caught them:

WANT FULL PROBE INTO BANK'S AFFAIRS

Two Warrants Issued in Farmers' Bank Tangle—W. J. Lindsay, a Toronto Promoter, and Geo. Wishard, a New York Broker, are Sought by Police for Conspiracy —No Word of Dr. Beattie Nesbitt.

[illegible], Jan. 18.—[illegible] that the now dead Farmers' Bank was based upon a fraud even before the granting of its charter from the Dominion Government, and, that even that charter was obtained by a fraud, two more warrants are now known to be issued against those who had to do with the institution of the bank. Two new names are introduced and two further charges against Dr. Beattie Nesbitt are unearthed.

One warrant charges:

That George Wishart of New York, promoter; Dr. Beattie Nesbitt and W. R. Travers, did conspire, confederate and agree to steal from the Farmers' Bank of Canada the sum of $300,000.

The other charges:

That William J. Lindsay, with others, did in the year 1907 conspire, confederate and agree together to obtain the certificate of the Treasury Board under the Bank Act of Canada permitting the Farmers' Bank of Canada to commence banking in Canada.

The "others" mentioned in the last-mentioned warrant is said to refer to Dr. Beattie Nesbitt and W. R. Travers. The first warrant was issued on Saturday last, when the other warrant charging the doctor with signing false returns to the Government was issued. The warrant against Lindsay was issued upon information supplied by Travers after his last arraignment before he pleaded guilty on Tuesday, Jan. 10. It was sworn out the following day. This Lindsay warrant, following on the curator's announcement that the whole bank was founded upon fraud from its inception, is portentious.

Lindsay was the man who was the prime agent in the sale of the subscription stock. At the, organization meeting of the directors it was found that certain persons supposed to be actively connected with the formation of the bank withdrew, and this left the subscription list deficient in amount.

"To overcome this," says Curator Clarkson, "it is said that certain subscriptions were added to the list, particularly one of $50,000 and dated ahead so as to make this subscription list appear regular and permit the obtaining of the certificate to do business."

A further explanation of the method by which the $250,000 cash from subscriptions and $500,000 subscriptions to stock, which is necessary for the granting of the certificate of the Treasury Board was obtained, follows, as made by the curator:

The sum of $211,000 was collected by subscriptions, $41,000 was forthwith paid out for expenses, leaving just $170,000. The sum of $80,000 was then borrowed upon subscription notes handed to Travers, and the $250,000 cash necessary was then complete. This sum was turned over to the receiver-general, and, as is the custom, $245,000 was later returned. The sum was deposited in the Traders' Bank to the credit, and $80,000 was then drawn out by check and transferred to the Trusts & Guarantee Co. on deposit for the Farmers' Banks. This was turned over to the Trusts & Guarantee Co. by three checks and the notes upon which the money had been advanced by the trust company were then returned to the bank. This left the bank with $170,000, and the subscribers' notes as its original capital.

Dr. Beattie Nesbitt still evades pursuit. If rumor had virtue the doctor would be a modern "Flying Dutchman," for he has been reported as being in widely different points both in Canada and the United States. It was said yesterday that Inspector of Detectives Walter Duncan had gone to Buffalo in search of him. But the inspector, when seen at his office, would not tell where he had been during the day nor would he make any statement as to the crown's action in the pursuit of the doctor or others.

It is known that Lindsay left his apartments in the Elliott House Annex and his office in the Canada Life Building very shortly after the suspension of the bank, and the police at first hoped to locate him in western Canada. This effort failed, and it is now thought that he is across the line.

Lindsay has been well-known in the city for a number of years. Some years ago he was associated with Herbert Capewell, recent mayoralty candidate, in a business in Church street, but that connection was severed long ago. Mrs. Lindsay is still in the city.

Lindsay is described by the police as from 40 to 45 years of age, 5 feet 8 or 9 inches tall, 180 pounds in weight, fresh or florid complexion, clean shaven, drooping mouth, round full face, slightly bald, square shoulders and a flashy dresser.

At the present time Lindsay has entered action against the bank for $10,000 and against Travers for $2,000 under the agreement by which he was provisional directors to sell the stock of the bank. It was begun by his solicitor, J. R. L. Starr.

The usual quiet of the Farmers' Bank building was disturbed yesterday morning by the gathering of the creditors of the now defunct financial institution. The meeting was called for 11 a.m., but long before that time many creditors from all parts of Ontario, were present to obtain, if possible, some light in connection with the moneys they had placed in the bank.

The creditors listened attentively to the various items in the curator's lengthy interim report.

When Mr. Clarkson had concluded his statement, Mr. Hamilton Cassels moved "that the court be recommended to appoint Mr. Geoffrey Clarkson as permanent liquidator."

Mr. J. W. Gilmore, representing Elgin County creditors, seconded the motion, which carried unanimously.

The naming of a liquidator being the sole object of the meeting, a motion of adjournment was put and carried.

At a meeting of the Farmers' Bank shareholders yesterday afternoon, William Laidlaw, K.C., renewed his proposal made at the creditors' meeting in the morning, that a petition be sent to the Dominion Government, asking the appointment of a royal commission to investigate the bank's affairs.

It was decided to send Mr. Laidlaw and Mr. Elliott to Ottawa with the petition. The members of Parliament in the districts where there are branches of the bank will co-operate. In the meantime copies of the petition will be forwarded to each branch to obtain signatures.

Messrs. Laidlaw and Elliott refused to accept any money for expenses.

The sentiment of the meeting, which was well attended, seemed to be in favor of operating the Keeley mine, but no vote was taken.

Mr. Clarkson, who has been curator of the bank since its suspension, was appointed liquidator by unanimous vote of the shareholders. The statement of the bank's operations since its inception was again presented, but no discussion of its items occurred.

MERCHANT MISSING

Bloodstained Hat and Horse the Only Trace of W. F. Pope, Well Known Business Man of Bramptonville

HAD $500 ON HIM

Sherbrooke, Que., Jan. 18.—There is great excitement here over the mysterious disappearance of W. F. Pope, a well-known merchant of Bramptonville, a small town six miles away. Pope left his house at seven o'clock Monday night to drive to Stoke, where he was going to collect some money. He never reached his destination, and at 10 o'clock at night his horse, cut and bleeding, was found on the lower Brompton road, near Sherbrooke.

Search was made yesterday morning by the local police, but no trace of Pope's body has been found. Last evening at a bend in the road just out of Bramptonville, his hat was found, saturated with blood, and there were indications that a terrible fight had taken place.

Pope took an active part in the municipal elections for mayor this year, supporting Fred Alger, who unsuccessfully opposed O. Lambert. He was known to have had nearly $500 in his possession, also a watch and other valuables. From the nature of a cut in his hat, it is thought he was struck with a club, and, not losing his senses, made a fight for life. He intended leaving for Boston to-day, where he was to open a branch office for the shipment of hay and grain.

Mutiny on Italian Ship.

Pensacola, Fla., Jan. 18.—Mutiny reigned aboard the Italian ship Chili in Pensacola harbor from Monday noon until two o'clock yesterday afternoon, when peace was restored. It was reported that one of the officers was killed, but this was later denied. An Italian sailor, however, is known to have suffered a fractured skull, and several others were less seriously injured. The mutiny resulted from efforts of the first mate to stop a free for all fight among the sailors. Hatchets and belaying pins were used freely.

WANTS A REDUCTION IN RATES

W. F. MacLean, M.P., Launches His Propaganda in the House but is the Only One to Vote For It

MR. GRAHAM'S REPLY

Ottawa, Jan. 18.—W. F. Maclean of South York has fired the first gun in his artillery of radicalism, of the mounting of which he gave the House of Commons due warning last week. Mr. Maclean selected the Canadian Pacific Railway as his initial target, and availed himself of a Government proposal to go into supply to launch a resolution, under which the House declared its intention of "taking steps to ascertain the rights of the public to a general reduction of tariff, because of the provisions in the act ratifying the agreement with the company, or in any other act."

Mr. Maclean adduced evidence to establish the fact that the company was in a prosperous financial condition, and declared the present tariffs relative to freight, express, telegraph, telephone, electrical power, water charges on steamers, fares on sleepers, parlor cars and diners—a cosmopolitan arraignment—"a gross injustice to the people of Canada, and a reflection on the honor of the House."

Mr. Maclean argued for an enforcement of public rights under Federal law. "It is the duty of this Parliament to enforce its own laws," was his dictum.

The response of Hon. Mr. Graham, having complimented the mover on his energy, industry and force, reviewed the history of the railway, its association with the Government and the public, the various contracts and arrangements which had been concluded from time to time, and directed attention to the fact that the Government had created the Railway Commission and bestowed upon it the widest powers to investigate and deal with cash charges as should be made. The Minister referred to the investigation made into the express rates, and the important public work being done by the commission. "This board," said he, "is composed of able men. No part of the Government does greater credit to it, and I do not believe Parliament would be well advised to take out of its hands any part of the complete jurisdiction we have given them."

"The Minister is right. Anyone can go to the Railway Commission with complaints and have them thoroughly investigated," was the comment of Hon. John Haggart, former Minister of Railways.

In submitting his resolution anent the C.P.R. tariffs Mr. Maclean pointed out that in the original agreement with the Government it was provided in recognition of concessions granted that when the income of the road exceeded 10 per cent. of the money invested in the undertaking the Government should have the right to obtain a reduction in rates.

The debate was continued at night. R. L. Borden in the course of his address pointed out that while the railway in question was at present subject to the jurisdiction of the Railway Board, it was a voluntary subjection, and the railway had, through its solicitors, reserved the right to withdraw.

Mr. Borden failed to understand why the mover of the resolution had singled out only one railway. There was no information to show that its rates were higher than those of other lines. In concluding Mr. Borden said he desired to serve notice on the Government that unless immediate action were taken along the lines he suggested he would submit a resolution calling upon Parliament to place upon the statute books legislation imposing upon the Government the obligation of seeing that all Federal laws passed for the benefit and advantage of the whole country, such as that of last session dealing with combines, are enforced in the interest of the public.

"Thank heaven I have made one convert," observed Mr. Maclean amid laughter, commenting on Mr. Borden's speech.

Mr. Maclean rejected the suggestion of Mr. E. M. Macdonald to withdraw his resolution at the conclusion of the debate, and the vote was taken. The member for South York alone voted aye.

DISCUSSION ON DIVORCE

Featured Yesterday's Session of the Senate—Senator Power Favours the Present System in Canada.

OTHERS DISSENT

Ottawa, Jan. 18.—A discussion upon divorce was the feature of the sitting of the Senate yesterday. On a motion for returns respecting divorce Senator Power said everyone, no doubt, felt that the ideal state of society would be one where there was no divorce, and all would agree that the less divorce the better. Prince Edward Island had never had a divorce, and the reason was that the divorce courts of that province was really the lieutenant-governor in council, and less accessible than the ordinary court, which some persons wished to have established throughout Canada.

Courts multiplied divorces. In England there had been great increase in divorce since 1857, when the divorce court was established. In the United States the increase had been phenomenal, so there was now one divorce for every 12 marriages, and at the present rate the proportion would soon be one to six. In France, since the establishment of divorce courts the increase had been so rapid that it looks as though the record of the United States would be exceeded.

No one would want Canadians to travel the same road and at the same speed as the United States and France, but that would follow the establishment of divorce courts throughout Canada.

In the provinces where there were divorce courts, divorces were more numerous in proportion to the population on the whole than in provinces which had to resort to Parliament for divorce.

There was a certain amount of deliberation in regard to approaching Parliament for divorce which gave sober second thought an opportunity to assert itself with people who felt aggrieved with each other. Perhaps the expense had something to do with it, though the cost of presenting a case to the Senate was not much more expensive than the process before a court.

Senator Cloran commended the views expressed by Senator Power. No question more affected the welfare of a nation than this question of the separation of man and wife, the breaking up of home, and the making of children orphans before their time. In his opinion the more difficult divorce was made the better. He advocated an enactment which would prevent the remarriage of the offending one of a divorce pair.

Senator Ross of Halifax criticized the Senate divorce committee as a rich man's court, where the cost of obtaining an act of Parliament prohibited the poor man from seeking relief. In the first place, there was a fee of $200, and that was only the beginning of the expense. The divorce judge of Nova Scotia had informed him that divorces had been obtained in that province at so low a cost as $80, and the cost had never been over $150.

Senator Wilson did not agree with Senator Ross, he did not think it a good policy to cheapen the process of obtaining divorce, and thereby make them more numerous.

Aids Nature

The great success of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery in curing weak stomachs, wasted bodies, weak lungs, and obstinate and lingering coughs, is based on the recognition of the fundamental truth that "Golden Medical Discovery" supplies Nature with body-building, tissue-repairing, muscle-making materials, in condensed and concentrated form. With this help Nature supplies the necessary strength to the stomach to digest food, build up the body and thereby throw off lingering obstinate coughs. The "Discovery" re-establishes the digestive and nutritive organs in sound health, purifies and enriches the blood, and nourishes the nerves—in short establishes sound vigorous health.

If your dealer offers something "just as good," it is probably better FOR HIM—it pays better. But you are thinking of the cure not the profit, so there's nothing "just as good" for you. Say so.

GRILLERS BEATEN IN A LIGHTNING FAST JUNIOR O. H. A. GAME AT LINDSAY

Final Score Was 7-5 With the Midgets at the Long End ---Lindsay's Close, Hard Checking Assisted by the Small Rink Gave Them a Victory over the Blue and White Team in the Return Engagement---One of the Big Hockey Surprises of the Season.

THE LINDSAY SEVEN PLAYED LIKE A NEW TEAM

Lindsay, 7; Peterborough, 5.

These figures tell in the briefest possible form the story of one of the greatest hockey surprises of the season. The Lindsay Midgets outclassed by the Peterborough Grillers in the Junior O. H. A. series here the week before last, and sent home with a 17-3 score against them surprised themselves, their supporters and the Peterborough team by turning the tables on the blue and white seven in last night's O. H. A. fixture at Lindsay. Surprising as it was the victory was merited. The game was featured by the most startling reversal of form—not on the part of the Grillers, who, considering the cramped ice conditions, played very nearly up to their Peterborough standard, but in the Midgets, who tonight were an entirely different team. Lethargic in checking back in Peterborough, the Lindsay forwards last night came back like fiends. Never were the Grillers allowed to come down on the Lindsay defence without being subject to interference from behind by the Midget advance guard. Their checking could hardly have been improved on, and to this feature their victory may undoubtedly be credited. It is true that they may have out-lucked the Petes in the matter of shooting, but then luck in scoring is an element that must always be taken into consideration in a hockey game, and it detracts nothing from the victory of the Midgets that a couple of their goals looked lucky, while on the other hand, the Petes missed chances when close in.

It was a grand of hockey between two evenly matched teams who fought every second of the hour with every ounce of strength that was in them. The pace from the initial face until the moment when the timers climbed over on the ice to stop the game was lightning fast with not a second's relaxation. Now the forward line of one team would come down together only to have the rubber snatched away from them by the opposing defence to be followed by a counter-rush. The forward lines checked back consistently and effectively, sticking to their checks like glue and it was a nip and tuck, hammer and tongs engagement with little to choose between the teams Lindsay's big improvement in form was undoubtedly the feature. They had three new men on the linup Primeau in goal, Begg at right wing and Dennison in centre. All were an improvement on the men they replaced but Dennison was especially prominent. Why the Lindsay management did not use this player earlier in the season is hard to see as he was undoubtedly the star of the team and played the most effective game of any of the fourteen men on the ice. Peterborough fans who saw the Midgets play in Peterborough would not have recognized them last night. In Peterborough they lacked speed and were decidedly shy on condition. Last night thye skated like demons and except for a few moments at the end of the first half did not seem to tire. It was not because the Grillers were off colour that they lost; it was rather that the Midgets played a dashing, hard-checking game that earned them a win, although the margin between the teams was hardly two goals.

The small rink handicapped the Grillers; this was evident after the firsts few minutes of play. The blue and white players bunched and got in each other's way on the cramped ice, interfering with their combination to a considerable extent and also bothering the fast skating defence in their rushes. However, the Grillers played sterling hockey, never letting up for a minute and the Midgets were quite glad to quit when the final gong came. The Petes stayed on the ice and worked away faithfully at combination work, in spite of the difficulty in carrying through that line of play on a small rink and against such systematic checking. They got going nicely at times and four of their goals were the result of pdetty pieces of combination, most of the two man variety.

Patterson played an effective cool game in goal despite the fact that he was disabled right on the go-in by a wicked shot which hit him on the end of the thumb. He cleared nicely and stopped a host of shots. Capt. Reynolds was generally in the limelight, checking beautifully and his rushes were always timely and usually dangerous. In the second half when the Petes were behind the sturdy little point man kept tearing down the ice at top speed to help out his jaunts kept the Lindsay defence busy. Heffernan played an almost similiar style of game at cover, his checking being magnificent all through and his rushing brilliant although not as effective as it would have been on a rink where he had more searoom. All the forwards worked heroically but the palf for effectiveness was carried off by Matthews who kept tearing up and down his wing for the full hour without a let-up, figuring in nearly every attack and then coming back unfailingly to the relief of his defence. Hall was checked by two men all through and was not given the same opportunity to score as he had in the Peterborough game but played fine hockey in spite of the way in which he was watched. He and Matthews break away well together. Coughlin played a brilliant individual game but marred his effectiveness by an inclination to hang on to the rubber too long when there was a chance to pass. McMartin, who took Sorel's place at right wing made a creditable showing in his first O.H.A. game, although the small ice bothered him probably more than the others. For Lindsay the bright shining lights were beyond a doubt Norton at point and Dennison at centre. The big point man, stopped shot after shot and rush after rush, and tore off any number of excursions on his account that were hard to stop. Dennison was easily the pick of the forward line playing a dashing brilliant game that was coupled with the Midgets' checking, a big factor in the Lindsay victory. He was always in his place for a shot and drove them at Patterson from any old angle with deadly accuracy and great speed, getting no less than six of the Lindsay counters while a dozen other times he shot dead on, Patterson's quickness alone averting a counter. The two wings worked hard and Callaghan checked back without a letup Primeau in goal was good, especially on shots from close in.

F. H. Sproule of Toronto referred the game satisfactorily with an eagle eye towards off-sides and a decided discilination for methods that were not according to Hoyle.

The teams lined up as follows:—

	LINDSAY
	Primeau
	Norton
	Henley
	Callaghan
Begg	Dennison	McConnell
Matthews	Hall	McMartin
	Coughlin
	Heffernan
	Reynolds
	Patterson
	Peterborough

Play was lightning fast right from the start. Both teams opened at top speed and the excitement never relaxed for a moment. Peterborough were first to gain any advantage after a half minute's play in centre ice. Hall and Matthews broke away together nicely, but Norton was in the way. The big fellow broke up the rush and countered with a nice jaunt on his own, winding up with a ferocious drive that went wide only by inches. Both sides were very anxious and showed it by the frequent off-sides, few of which escaped Referee Sproule. Matthews and Hall broke away together and Matthews found the nets, but the last pass was off-side, and the rubber was called back. Begg drew a two-minute penalty for slashing, but the odd-man advantage did not favour Peterborough. An offside occurred twenty feet out from the Grillers' nets and Denison jumped a surprise on the defence by lifting a goal from the face-off, putting Lindsay one to the good. Lindsay 1, Peterborough 0.

The goal against them did not seem to bother the Petes, and they went in as hard as ever. The checking was desperately close and both sides found it almost impossible to break away clean. The forward lines checked back like demons and the pace never relaxed. Hall nearly scored on a pass from McMartin, but Norton was in the way and relieved nicely. Both goals were threatened in turn and Primeau and Patterson each pulled off a couple of spectacular slaves that earned the applause they received. McMartin tripped McConnell and retired from the scene for two minutes. A Lindsay forward sustained a fracture of his suspenders and the game was held up until he repaired this highly essential detail of his costume. The next few minutes of play were featured by a spectacular rush by Reynolds, the Peterborough captain, going nearly the length of the rink in clever fashion. His shot was headed off, however. Henley was benched for tripping McMartin and the Peterborough wing player followed a few minutes afterwards for the same offence. Coughlin broke away with a pretty rush, which was wrecked when it came to Norton, who grabbed the puck and came tearing down centre like a wild thing, shooting from well out, but without accuracy. For twenty-two minutes the teams battled with the honours practically even. Finally, McConnell and Dennison came down together with a beautiful rush, which carried them through the defence, and a neat pass to Dennison at the mouth of the net resulted in another Lindsay score. Lindsay 2, Peterborough 0.

Peterborough were two down now, but they kept hammering along grimly. Patterson headed off a dangerous drive from Dennison's stick and then the tide of battle rolled the other way. Coughlin got the rubber at centre, and slipped up the boards, beating Primeau with a beautiful waist-high shot from well out. Lindsay 2, Peterborough 1.

The Grillers supporters heaved a big sigh of relief. Everything was all right now. The Petes had found their stride and Lindsay would fade. The dope of the Peterborough contingent was to the bad, however, as in ninety seconds after Coughlin's effort Dennison took a pass from the wing, by Begg, and scored neatly, putting Lindsay once more two to the good. Lindsay 3, Peterborough 1.

There was only a few minutes until half-time and it looked as if Lindsay would be in the lead at the breathing spell. Then the Grillers took a brace and until the half had decidedly the edge on the Midgets. Hall and Coughlin combined for a nice rush, which landed Hall right in the net. Primeau, however, blocked his shot but Matthews was there to poke the rubber through before he could clear and the Peterborough supporters expressed their joy in no uncertain manner.

Lindsay 3, Peterborough 2.

The Grillers looked the better team decidedly at this stage. With only a minute left until half time they were having the better of the going. They evened things up when Matthews secured the rubber at his own goal, tore down with a nice rush, passed to Coughlin, who returned, when Norton was reached, and the Grillers' left wing slipped one past Primeau on a neat shot from well in.

Peterborough, 3; Lindsay, 3.

The only feature of the remaining seconds of the half was a beautiful stop by Patterson of Dennison's vicious drive, dead-on and from well in.

Half-Time.

With the teams on an even footing when they started the second half there was not the slightest sign of a let-up in the desperate pace inaugurated at the go-in. It was hammer and tongs up and down the rink, with both teams going the speed limit. The Petes had a grand chance at the start of the second period, when Begg was ruled off for slashing, followed a moment after by Dennison for the same offence. With two Lindsay players in the punishment corall it looked like a golden opportunity, but even the two-man advantage failed to give the Grillers a score.

They were well in on several occasions, but Primeau made a brilliant stop once and another chance was thrown away by over-anxiety. Dennison and Begg returned to the ice with the score unchanged. McMartin was hurt and there was a short delay until he resumed. Finally, after five minutes hard playing, Dennison went in all alone and scored nicely, putting the Midgets in the lead again. Lindsay, 4; Peterborough 3.

Reynolds was benched for tripping and soon after Begg was sent away for holding McMartin. Lindsay were having a little the better of the argument at this stage, but there was little to choose and either team looked a good bet. Lindsay's stock went up, however, when Dennison took a pass close in and scored, the goal being one of the most exciting of the night. The Lindsay centre knocked Patterson off his feet as he shot, and the Grillers' goal-keeper pulled him down with him. Dennison hit Patterson viciously with his stick, but Referee Sproule saw the offence and imposed a three-minute penalty upon the Lindsay player. Lindsay 5, Peterborough 3.

Playing six against seven, however, it was Lindsay who scored the next goal. Peterborough rushed from the face-off, but Norton secured, and, rushing splendidly, netted the puck on a pretty shot from the side in thirty seconds.

Lindsay 6, Peterborough 3.

Three goals to the bad, the Grillers showed their mettle by another desperate rally. Every man on the team worked like a hero, but Lindsay was not backing up any, but on the other hand, played a stubborn, effective, checking game, that was very hard to get away from. Finally the Grillers pierced their defence. Reynolds tearing down the boards with a beautiful rush and centring neatly to Coughlin, who pushed one past Primeau from a yard out. Lindsay 6, Peterborough 4.

At this stage Peterborough had another splendid opportunity when Norton and Begg was penalized almost simultaneously for slashing. The remaining Lindsay players, however checked desperately and successfully until they were back. Norton escaped before his time was up, but was sent away to finish his term. The Petes, however, could not solve the puzzle of scoring. Callaghan was the next to fall under the axe of the bell-ringer and he had hardly climbed out into the scene of hostilities when Henley was sent to keep the penitent bench warm, for tripping. Peterborough were working their heads off to pull the game out of the fire, and their chances looked rosy, when Hall and Hefernan combined for a neat goal by the former. Lindsay 6, Peterborough 5.

The excitement was torrid enough to thaw the ice at this stage. Ten minutes to play, a goal needed to tie the score, and both teams apparently as fresh and willing as when the game opened. It was no wonder that the crowd was carried off its feet. Nothing but a continuous roar could be heard from the side as the two teams battled fiercely for the final ten minutes. Even at that stage there were few Lindsay people who would have cared to bet that their team would win out. Both sides had a number of opportunities but the game was decided a few minutes before time was up, when a pass from behind the goal out in front to Dennison and a neat shot, put Lindsay two goals to the front. A two-goal lead at that juncture was as big as a house, but even then the Grillers did not let up, even when McMartin was rail-roaded for tripping. The defence men kept bringing the puck down with dashing rushes and the forwards worked like beavers to fight a way through to a scoring range, but Lindsay checked them like leeches, and they were given few opportunities to shoot unimpeded. The shots that went straight were well taken care of by Norton and Primeau, and although Lindsay were forced back on the defensive for the last three or four minutes, they succeeded in holding their lead and a great game came to an end with the score unchanged.

1—Lindsay, Dennison, 1.10 min.

LINDSAY WINS TANKARD PRELIMINARY ROUND

Met Local Rinks in the Group Final and Won a Hard Fought Game by Four Shots—The Veteran Flavelle Was Down Four Shots But Skip Little Carried Him Through to Victory by Trimming Skip Foote Badly.

The old curling rivals, Peterborough and Lindsay, met in the finals in this group of the Tankard competition at the Charlotte Street rink last night, and when it was all over, victory for the 'steenth time had perched on the banners of the Lindsay Club, the bunch from Sougogville being four up all around. Lindsay had beaten Campbellford, the conquerors of Port Hope, in the afternoon, while Peterborough was disposing of the Cannington Club. The night battle was interesting all the way, and was watched by a large gallery of spectators. The veteran skip, [illegible], with his well-seasoned rink was drawn against Skip Fitzgerald, and the Peterborough skip succeeded in administering a decisive trimming to the dean of the roarin' game by [illegible] to 9, while Foote [illegible] smile so brightly on the other Peterborough rink, skipped by Harry Foote, and they fell before the prowess of Geo. Little's quartette to the tune of 20 to 9, giving Lindsay the group honours by four shots. The rinks and scores were as follows:

Peterborough	Lindsay
Geo. Hall	R. Butler
C. N. Brown	R. H. Cuthbert
T. Brightman	L. V. O'Connor
J. K. A. Fitzgerald	J. D. Flavelle.
Skip 22	Skip 15
Dr. Wightman	W. E. Reeson
R. Neil	F. Carew
R. Waddell	T. Burke
H. Foote	W. A. Little
Skip 9	Skip 20

YESTERDAY'S RACES WERE IN STRAIGHT HEATS

Although yesterday's races at the winter meet under the auspices of the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition were won in straight heats, they provided some decidedly interesting sport. A feature was caused by Lulu Chimes in the second heat of the free-for-all upsetting her driver at the first turn and then running away for a mile and a half driverless. The dash did not do the mare any good, and she was fourth in the third heat.

There were four starters in the free-for-all—Hal Direct, McHee of Toronto, Orillio Belle, Montgomery of Toronto, Lulu Chimes, Jones, Peterborough, and Holland Boy, Dr. Leach, Peterborough. Hal Direct won in straight heats, the opposition in the first heat coming from Lulu hChimes ,and in the last two from Orillia Belle.

Three horses started in the 2.28 class, which was captured in three heats by Lou Jean, owned by Powell of Orillia. Following is the summary:

FREE-FOR-ALL.

Hal Direct, McPhee, Toronto, 1 1 1.
Orillia Belle, Montgomery, Toronto, 3 2 2.
Lulu Chimes, Jones, Peterborough, 2 x 4.
Holland Boy, Leach, Peterborough, 4 3 3.
Time—22.9, 2.30, 2.30¼.

2.28 CLASS

Lou Jean, Powell, Orillia, 1 1 1.
Tom Tariff, Fife, Keene, 2 2 2.
Major Direct, Shepherd, Toronto, 3 3 3.
Time—2.30, 2.34, 2.36.

SOME HOCKEY HAPPENINGS

It is with a distinct sigh of relief that the Grillers are saying "It is a good thing we did not need that game last night". And there is still more relief in being able to say: "It is a good thing we beat Cobourg on their own ice.

The Peterborough Intermediates will practise at Brock Street rink tomorrow night in preparation for next Tuesday's big game with Trenton. A full turn-out is expected. There will be no practise to-night.

It will be good news to the fans that Fred Denison will be available for the game against Trenton here next week.

The championship of this district in the junior O. H. A. depends upon the result of the game here with Cobourg on Jan. 30. Last night's game has really little effect as Peterborough had to beat Cobourg here in any event to win the group honours. The standing of the district is as follows:

	Won	Lost	T.	P.	Gs. for	Ag.
Peterbor'h.	2	1	1	27	13
Cobourg	1	1	2	10	9
Lindsay	1	2	1	14	29

Games to be played—Lindsay at Cobourg, Cobourg at Peterborough.

The solid East will back Kingston Frontenacts against anything junior wearig skates. They are no more afraid of 'Varsity Juniors, Peterborough Grillers, the Preston Dutch, or the Woodstock Home Brews than they are of a choclate eclair.—Toronto Star.

That good Trenton intermediate team is about to lose Fletcher. Fletcher is going to Cobalt.—Toronto Star.

Belleville Juniors, if they do not get stage fright, will give Kingston more than a workout to-night in Kingston. They are improving steadily.—Toronto Star.

McIntosh Selects Bill Lang

Special Wire to the Examiner.

San Francisco, Jan. 17.—So that the quest for a "white man's hope" may be world-wide in its scope, Hugh D. McIntosh of London and Australia has joined in the hunt. For that matter McIntosh believes that his search ended almost as soon as it began. He had picked Bill Lang, conqueror of Bob Fitzsimons, Bill Squires and Jack Burns as the man to relieve Jack Johnson of his laurels:

In a letter just received he writes from London as follows:

"I have just matched Sam Langford and Bill Lang, and I will endeavour to match the winner against Johnson. I will give it as my opinion now that Lang is the man who is destined to meet Johnson for the championship of the world, and you can place me on record that Bill Lang of Australia will be the next world's champion. I feel certain of this. He has improved out of all recognition. He now weighs in condition 225 pounds, and is perfectly strong and well, and the able tuition he received from Corbett, Fitzsimmons, McCoy and Burns has placed him in a position to-day to be able to absolutely guarantee to be capable of contesting with any man living.

The above was written before the contest between Jack Burns and Lang took place, so that it goes without saying that McIntosh is surer than ever of the bright future he has predicted for the Australian heavyweight. Whether McIntosh's opinion of Lang is shared to any extent, the writer has no means of knowing—but one thing is certain, if Lang defeats Langford, as McIntosh seems to think he will, a match between Lang and Johnson will have a much more even look than it bears at present.

McIntosh says that Lang weighs 22 5pounds "in condition." This is hard to understand. When Lang first loomed up in this country the experts figured him to be between 180 and 190 pounds in weight. If he has increased to the tune of thirty-five or forty pounds since he went to England, the only thing that can be said is that the British climate has done wonders for him.

If McIntosh can induce Johnson to fight in England, whether it be with Langford or Lang, the affair will take place in London during Coronation week, next June. McIntosh's new boxing arena at Olympia will be the scene of the championship event, and with the crowds that will throng the British capital for the Coronation ceremonies it is a conclusion that the old pavilion will be packed to its capacity.

Even at that the crowd will not be a big one, as crowds go, for it is admitted that the seating capacity of Olympia is only 8,000.

Your Danger From Kidney Troubles

BEGINS WHEN YOUR BACK ACHES.

Backache is the first and the sure sign of kidney disease.

When the back aches or becomes weak it is a warning that the kidneys are affected in some way.

Next to the heart, the kidneys are perhaps the most important organs in the body. It is no wonder then that if the kidneys are affected the whole system must be.

On the first sign of backache Doan's Kidney Pills should be taken. They go right to the seat of the trouble, heal the delicate membranes of the kidneys, make their action regular and natural.

Mr. E. J. Saulnier, Lake Ainslie, N.S., writes:—"I take a great deal of pleasure in telling you the benefit I have received from the use of Doan's Kidney Pills. I was troubled with my kidneys for several years; my back was weak, I had terrible headaches, and was so restless I could not sleep at night. I commenced using Doan's Kidney Pills and in a very short time I was right and fit again."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c per box or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The Doan Kidney Pill Co., Toronto, Ont.

ARRESTED ON CHARGE OF MURDER

Examiner Special.

Richmond, Ky., Jan. 17.—John M. Hamlin, better known as John Maynard, of Tazewell, Tenn., was arrested by Deputy Jailer F. B. Gilbert here on a charge of killing a man by the name of Arthur Johnson, near Clearfield, Tenn, about four years ago.

Following the murder Maynard, it is alleged, broke gaol at Tazewell and since then has been at large. He came here about one year ago and was employed to take charge of the dairy farm of Mrs. Ellen Gibson, mother of the well-known horseman John R. Gibson, one of the wealthiest and best known women of this place. Maynard made an excellent manager and had many friends here.

The arrest is due to the clever work of Gilbert. A few days after his arrival here his suspicion was aroused at sight of Maynard, whom he saw on the streets at various occasions. He took up the case with the Tazewell officers and learned that $200 reward was yet awaiting the arrest of Maynard. Being satisfied that he had the right man under watch, Gilbert stopped the dairy waggon which Maynard was driving and placed him under arrest.

Maynard offered no protest and when seen in gaol he acknowledged the killing, but said it was in self-defence. He confessed that he made a mistake in leaving the gaol, but said he did not care to remain there alone, as all the other prisoners escaped at the same time, more than twenty in all. All were recaptured immediately afterwards with the exception of Maynard.

Maynard's father, who lives near Clearfield, is known to be worth $75,000 and has two brothers equally as wealthy. Maynard said that he had received several letters from his father, pleading that he return, surrender and stand trial, but said he hated to leave the Blue Grass and Hugh Collier, ex-sheriff, have presented a long letter of recommendations, signed by many influential citizens regarding the good conduct of Maynard since living here, which they will forward to the officers at Tazewell. Maynard has been married eight years. His wife will remain here for the present.

DIES ON HER WAY TO A PARTY
TRAGIC DEATH OF A YOUNG LADY WHO IS WELL KNOWN IN THE CITY

Miss Anastasia Murphy, a Niece of Mrs. J. A. Sharpe, Homewood Avenue, Dead From Heart Trouble.

FREQUENT VISITOR

The following despatch from Hamilton will bring grief to many people in Peterborough. Miss Murphy was a very frequent visitor in this city and made a host of friends who will be shocked to learn of her sudden death. She was a niece of Mrs. J. A. Sharpe, Homewood avenue, city:

HAMILTON, JAN. 18. — A light-hearted, happy gathering of fun-loving people was cast under a cloud of sadness last evening, when death, in all its mysteriousness, summoned Miss Anastasia Murphy, a popular young lady residing with her aged mother at 210 Emerald street north. Prepared to spend an evening of enjoyment with a large number of her friends at the residence of J. W. McDonald, 131 Catherine street north, Miss Murphy cheerful and happy, left her home shortly before 8 o'clock. Fifteen minutes later she was dead.

On leaving her residence, she walked briskly up Emerald street to Cannon street, along which she went until near the corner of Ferguson avenue. Suddenly pressing her hands to her heart, she was seen to stagger, and the next moment fell into the arms of Miss Hawkins, 191 Mary street north, a passerby.

"Oh! I am going to faint. Take me somewhere," she cried.

Miss Hawkins immediately assisted the stricken woman to the corner of Cannon and Mary street where, with the help of Miss Kennedy, 107 Mary street, she carried her into Dr. Hopkin's residence.

"Oh! please hurry; I am dying," she pitifully gasped, as they reached the doorsteps, and almost superhumanly the two ladies lifted her into the doctor's office.

Dr. Hopkins immediately responded. "Oh! loosen my clothing; I am dying," she faintly cried, and the two ladies at once did so.

The doctor gave her a stimulant and had an ambulance summoned while he rendered other assistance.

"What is your name?" he asked the dying woman, whose friends he wished to summon.

"Murphy," she gasped, in a hardly audible voice, and the next moment she was dead.

When the ambulance arrived with Constables English and Wood, she was taken to the City Hospital, where for two hours she remained unidentified. In the meantime the police were endeavouring to find relatives and address, and finally succeeded by communicating with the house of Controller Cooper. Mrs. Cooper consulted with a neighbour, and the description tallied with that of the unfortunate woman.

When the sad news was conveyed to the family, it was with difficulty that the aged mother was restrained from rushing to the morgue. Besides the one parent she leaves a sister, Elizabeth and a brother, Joseph.

The deceased lady, was a forelady in R. McKay & Co.'s, and was popular among all the employees of the firm. She also possessed a wide range of acquaintances throughout the city and her untimely death is felt by many.

Dr. Baugh, coroner, was consulted in reference to the advisability of holding an inquest. He satisfied himself that death was due to heart trouble.

Dr. Hopkins, speaking of the case, said: "She acted like one who had acute oedema of the lungs, caused by a dilatation of the heart," explained the doctor.

While assisting the dying woman, Miss Hawkins understood her to say that she wanted to go to 151 Catharine street. The number and street were spoken in a half audible tone, and apparently she wished to give the address of her destination, 131 Catharine street north.

SWORD PIERCED THE SKULL OF SPECTATOR

Extraordinary Accident During Performance of Imperial Russian Ballet in the Grand Opera House at Hamilton Last Night.

Examiner Special.

HAMILTON, ONT., JAN. 18.—To pay $2.50 for the privilege of sitting in the Grand Opera House to witness a high-class production and shortly afterwards to be put on the operating table for a fracture of the skull was the unusual and unpleasant experience of Robert Shiverick, 164 James Street south, this evening. The production in question was Mlle. Anna Pavlowa and Mikail Mordkin, assisted by the Imperial Russian ballet and orchestra, in dancing and pantomime. Shiverick was sitting in the second row in the orchestra enjoying the spectacle. The last portion of the first act consists of several soldiers dancing in a fencing scene. They used long swords, and to the tune of stirring music the blades were clashing and ringing merrily, when a strange accident happened. One of the blades became loosened and, leaving the handle grasped in the dancer's hand, flew over the footlights. The end of the sword which had previously been in the handle struck Shiverick square in the centre of the forehead a short distance above the eyes. It penetrated his skull and it remained in that position. Blood poured down the unfortunate man's face and three ladies and two or three men who were sitting close to Shiverick fainted. A panic was narrowly averted.

The sword remained in the man's forehead and it was necessary for another man to hold him braced against the seat; while a third wrenched the weapon from the skull.

Immediately after the weapon had been removed Shiverick jumped from his seat and ran up the side aisle to the lobby, where it was quickly seen that he was seriously injured. The ambulance was summoned and he was hurriedly removed to St. Joseph's Hospital, where he was at once placed on the operating table. Drs. Olmsted and Park performed the operation and discovered that the end of the sword had penetrated Shiverick's skull. At 11 o'clock he was still under the effects of the chloroform, but the opinion was expressed that he would probably recover.

Set Fire to Stage.

While the strange accident caused excitement in the audience the actors did not escape a bad attack of nerves. Although the dance went on uninterruptedly the dancers were nervous, and one of them managed to knock over a jar containing burning incense. That set fire to the stage, and one of the soldiers used his sword to transfer the burning incense to its former receptacle. About that time the curtain descended and any further trouble was averted, the fire on the stage being easily quenched.

Shiverick is the son of an American millionaire, who is interested in the ownership of the Right House. He was attending Harvard University, but recently because of weak eyes was taken away from college and was sent to Hamilton, where he was connected with the store in which his father was interested. He was boarding with Dr. Park, the James Street south eye specialist.

HAMILTON, JAN. 19.—Robt. Shiverick, whose skull was pierced by an actor's spear during the performance at the Grand Opera House last night, is reported improving this morning.

NEW WING TO BE ADDED TO NICHOLLS HOSPITAL BUILDINGS

The Examiner learns on authority considered to be reliable, that a new wing, to cost in the neighbourhood of $30,000.00 is to be added to Nicholls Hospital buildings during the present year. This is important, as showing that nothing reasonable is to be left undone to make this hospital all that its generous founder, who so liberally endowed it, expected that it should be made.

Mr. Richard Hall, one of the trustees of the Nicholls estate, and chairman of the Hospital Board, has, in the past, earned a large degree of credit for the time and intelligent interest he has expended upon the hospital. He has provided excellent management, and the funds placed at his disposal by Mrs. Nicholls' bequest have been judiciously husbanded and expended. The proposed new wing is a further evidence of the determination to keep the Nicholls Hospital in the matter of structural and other equipment up to the high standard to which it has already been brought.

THE CANADIAN CLUB.

The Peterborough Canadian Club has its heavy oratorical artillery in effective commission, and is firing big guns at a great rate. Falconer, Sifton and Symonds in a row is something as unusual, as it is delightful. To-night Rev. Dr. Symonds, of Christ church, Montreal, will address the members of the club at its regular dinner at the Hotel National. The subject of Dr. Symond's address is not definitely announced, but it will probably be "The Unity of the Human Race." But whatever the subject may be, we who know Dr. Symonds so well—his oratorical guts, his clear enunciation of clear conceptions, bred of a habit of deep thinking, of a big mind—can remain assured that his message, will be well worth hearing; informing, as well as stimulant of thinking on our own account.

INDISPENSABLE.

"Heaton's Hand Book of Canada" has always been up to the high-water mark of excellence, but the seventh year edition represents a still further advance in excellence of an indispensable equipment of the country-house sanctum and library. The new features this year consist of the requirements (fees, examinations, terms of service, etc.) for each province, something not to be found in any other publication. The Annual continues to be the standard authority on the Canadian Customs Tariff. This year's edition contains the French Treaty and the special import duties arrangement with Belgium, the Netherlands and with Italy. In fact, concise and encyclopedic information on almost any subject of Canadian interest, that is reducible in statistical tabulation, is to be found in Heatons Annual which is literally full (500 pages) of information bearing upon Canada as an egg is full of meat. Only a careful inspection of this indispensable and finely-printed book can give the least idea of the extent and value of its contents, well arranged and elaborately and intelligently indexed—Toronto; Heaton's agency.

TEACHERS AND ANNUITIES.

The teachers in the public schools must, as a rule, themselves provide against the day when their age or infirmities will demand their retirement from their profession, and many, it is understood, are alive to this fact and are taking advantage of the provisions of the Government annuities scheme to secure a competency for later years. The number doing so is erhaps small in proportion to the large number engaged in teaching, but it must be borne in mind that the annuities idea is new, and that the attention of the school teachers has only been recently especially directed to it.

Many might follow the example of a woman in one of our cities. She was 43 years of age, had no heirs, and her salary over and above her weekly expenditures was laid away to keep her in the days when the shadows began to lengthen. She had saved $1,000. It was drawing 3 per cent. compound interest, or increasing at a little better than $30 a year. She heard of the Government annuities scheme, and she immediately transferred her $1,000 to the Government on account of the purchase of an annuity payable at the age of 60. Having no heirs she purchased on Plan "B," and the annuity which a payment of $1,000 secured for her at 60 was $222.60. But shortly after her $1,000 had been paid to the Government she became an invalid and was totally incapacitated from performing her duties. Her case came under the provision of the Act which provides that if invalidity or disablement occurs a person, if he or she has paid in sufficient to draw an annuity of not less than $50, may draw the annuity though then under 55 years of age. The payment which she had made gives her an annuity of $69.07 as long as she may live. If the period before she became disabled, had been five years she would have had an annuity of $88.50, and at 55 she could have had her contract converted into an immediate annuity of $147.50. It will, therefore, be seen that if she could avail herself of the provisions of the Act at any time after her $1,000 had been paid, she would have had an income over twice as large as she would have received had she left the money in the savings bank. This illustrates the advantage of persons who have been laying up for their old age transferring their savings, or a portion of them, to the Government on account of the purchase of an annuity.

If teachers generally would investigate the splendid system of government annuities they would become converts to the doctrine of thrift, not only with distinct advantage to themselves, but they would have a new sympathy with the principle of penny saving banks for school children. This is something capable of providing children with the most important possible educational equipment, the principle and practice of thrift and saving, equivalent to a knowledge of how to turn to practical and beneficient advantage all other knowledge gained in the schools. General education may help a child in after life to make money; but the most important part is to teach the child how to make the best use of money. It is surprising that our enterprising Board of Education does not realize their evident duty in this regard.

FROM ONE THING TO ANOTHER.

If the fate of the late Manager of the late Farmers Bank is a warning to bank officials to avoid departure from fidelity to their trust, the fate that has befallen the City of Toronto should operate as a warning to the City of Peterborough. A grand jury has found a "true bill" against the City of Toronto, in respect of a charge of maintaining "a common nuisance"—the Court Street Police Station, which is declared to be in an unsanitary condition—"endangering the lives, safety and health of the public, contrary to the Criminal code."

If Toronto is subjected to a "true bill" for maintaining a common nuisance, in the form of an unsanitary police station, Peterborough seems to be in similar danger, on a similar count. The only thing that may save Peterborough will be a technicality. There is little danger of this city being indicted for maintaining a "common" nuisance—such a charge would fail on a technicality; our police cells are not a "common," but an "uncommon," nuisance—uncommonly, and even indecently, bad; unsanitary and dangerous to the health and even life, of the unfortunate and unwilling occupants.

The indictment of the City of Toronto arose from a complaint lodged with Mr Justice Riddell, regarding the cells of the Court Street Police Station, which pointed out that men untried, and, under British law, presumably innocent, were confined in cells four by seven feet, in one corner of which was a water closet. Here men were compelled to remain probably 24 hours. His Lordship, in giving the case to the jury, remarked that a man, no matter what his alleged crime, was "entitled to decent treatment," and the jury found that "No. 1 Police Station was on Jan. 12, 1911, and still is, in an unhealthy condition, to the great danger and discomfort of His Majesty's liege subjects detained therein," who have to remain in an atmosphere of foul and unsavory smells, repulsive to the senses and a menace to health.

We have somewhat similar conditions in Peterborough. The bare, small police court cells, unheated, and repulsive, are made to confine, not only criminals, but possibly, innocent persons, charged with trivial or serious offences. The only bed is a bare platform of planking, and the only convenience a filthy, open commode, with which the unfortunate prisoner is shut up all night. There is no connection from the cells with the sewer—only the most primitive conditions of nastiness, peculiar to a stable. These gloomy and foul cells are close to the rooms occupied by the police force—by some of them day and night. They are exposed to the foul atmosphere, generated in the cells—in a little, cramped, dingy ill-lighted room, some 10 x 12 feet in size. "The finest" in the way of a force, and "the foulest" in the way of quarters, are incompatible.

The police court room above, is not much better; for the narrow, steep, ladder-like stairs lead direct from the corridor on which the cells open to the court-room above; and His Worship, the Clerk, the lawyers, the witnesses, the persons on trial, and the public in attendance get pretty full benefit of the fragrance of the odourous slop-buckets in the cells below.

The entire police accommodation in Peterborough is an indecently frowsy apology for the "halls of justice" a city of our size and importance should have. They are, however, pretty well in keeping with the general dingy and antiquated housing Peterborough provides for all its civic departments. We are proud of many things in Peterborough, but we have little reason to be proud of our city buildings, unless we wish to regard them as curios, as relices of the dark ages.

The "city buildings" have been replanned, remodelled, tinkered, and "improved" till they are beyond any improvement, except being swept off the face of the earth. That is if they are to be regarded in the light of what a beautiful, progressive and progressing city like Peterborough should have—if it wants something it is not ashamed of and not ashamed to point out to a stranger as "our city buildings."

What Peterborough wants is a new city hall, on a new site. The present site is as unsuitable as the buildings themselves. Our market square, including the site of the city buildings, is too valuable for commercial uses, to be allowed to lie fallow, as is now being done. What the Examiner has heretofore proposed, or something equivalent, should be speedily done.

Remove the market from its present situation on the square to the reclaimed lands along the river at the foot of Charlotte street. Convert the present market square and the city property, now encumbered with "city buildings," into building sites for shops, etc. The returns from sites, if sold, or for rentals, if leased, would provide funds, more than enough, to erect splendid city buildings worthy of a live and beautiful city, on a suitable site. A good site for new city buildings would be on the east side of George street, between the Public Library buildings and Murray street. If another site were found preferable, it should be secured, but, in any event, we should have new and decent city buildings. We could have by the plan proposed, these needed new buildings, without costing the ratepayers a cent, and doubtless with a profit, especially in having public buildings we are not ashamed of, and a new market to boot.

Will our city fathers face the situation and show that they have a mind to higher things than collecting so many thousands of dollars in taxes, and spending them? There are many big Peterborough problems presenting themselves for solution but not one more important and more easy of handling than the enterprise of providing the city with new City Buildings.

A Review Of The Scope And Work Of Labour Department

In an address delivered at London, a few evenings ago Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, the Minister of Labour, gave a most interesting review of the work in which his department has been engaged.

Mr. King alluded with pleasure to the efforts which are being made to conserve the natural resources of the country, but he claimed that of resources human life was the greatest and next to human life, human health, which was hardly separated from it. He referred to statistics which had been gathered on the loss of life in Canada through industrial accidents. Careful records have been kept from day to day by the department for a period now of over five years. They were inevitably incomplete, as in the case of industrial accidents generally the parties interested sought to avoid publicity, and in a country the size of Canada the sources of information were necessarily limited. The records, however, went to show that of accidents reported in the press alone there had been of workingmen killed outright in the course of their employment an average of some 300 a year. If to this number were added those whose deaths were not reported, or which occurred subsequent to an accident, it would be found that the number of wealth producers of Canada who were killed outright in the course of their work averaged at least 2,000 a year, or in other words, 20,000 in a period of ten years. If to this number were added a number five times as great to include those who through loss of limb or other permanent impairment to industrial efficiency, were unable to work, the losses in the field of industry for a short period of years would be found to bear comparison with the numbers killed or wounded in some of the greatest battles that history has recorded. Statistics of his kind pointed the need of legislation which would reduce the loss of life. They also showed wherein a consideration of such questions as government annuities, workmen's insurance and the like, are of importance. They served, too, to illustrate wherein the interests of capital and labour and the community are one, for not only is the family of the workingman a loser by his death or injury, but capital is by that much handicapped in its supply of labour, and the community generally suffered an economic loss.

Not less important than the prevention of accidents was the conservation of health. In this connection the minister spoke of what had been accomplished by the government in the way of the abolition of the sweating system in connection with government contract work, and the protection of labour in construction camps. He also spoke of the bill he has introduced in parliament for the prohibition of white phosphorus in match-making. It was not, as some interested journals had sought to make it appear, a consequence of any action on the part of the match trust in the United States, but rather a much-needed measure for the purpose of saving the life and health of the men, women and young people who were employed where white phosphorus was used in the making of matches. He described the dread disease known as necrosis, a sort of decomposition of the teeth and jaws, to which workers in this industry were liable, and pointed out that evils similar to this which had arisen in the countries of Europe and which had been legislated against those, were arising here.

The evils of overcrowding and the growth of slums was another danger threatening many towns and cities of Canada. While the Federal Government could not legislate as to the class of dwelling which people should occupy, or the amount of air space and light required to make sanitary surroundings in a home. Mr. King thought the government might by investigation, do much in the way of reporting conditions as they were, and pointing the way to an effective remedy by the municipality or other responsible body. This was a class of work which, in the immediate future, he hoped the department would be in a position to undertake.

In a consideration of the nation's development and progress industrial waste was hardly less important than industrial loss or impairment of industrial efficiency. In one particular the department had been able to gather valuable information and to enact legislation of far-reaching importance. This was in connection with the loss occasioned by strikes and lockouts. The statistics compiled for a period of ten years went to show that during that time there had been altogether over 1100 strikes and lockouts in Canada, that the number of workingmen affected by these industrial disputes had been over 254,000, and that the number of working days lost in consequence had been about 5,950,000. Assuming an average wage of $2.00 per day, this would mean a loss of wages alone of $11,900,000. Assumig that an employer's profits averaged 5 per cent. of the cost of the labour employed, this would mean a loss in profits to employers of $595,000.

The most serious of all strikes were those which occurred on industries in the nature of public utilities. There the public suffered because of their immediate dependence upon the prosecution of the industry, because of their own and the dependence of other industries upon the continued operation of a public utility. To aid in the prevention of strikes of this kind, the Government had in March, 1907, passed what is known as the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, whereby both workingmen and employers were entitled to have a thorough investigation of any grievances before a board on which they were represented, the parties being restrained until such inquiry had been held, from ordering a strike.

The real yellow peril lay in the competition of the Orient; if Canada were to be able to compete effectively in the future it would only be by her industries being technically the most proficient and her working population well trained industrially. It was a recognition of this fact which has led the government to endeavour to arouse the public of Canada to the importance of this question, and to assist the provinces in proceeding along the most enlightened lines, by establishing a royal commission on technical education.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

If our guileless contemporary, the Review is not in for a swinging libsuit, then the Celtic blood of Mr. Macdonald, the editor of the Globe has lost its fire. In yesterday's impression the Review prints an alleged portrait of Henri Bourassa, the so-called "Nationalist" leader. As a matter of fact it is a portrait of the editor of the Globe. It is bad enough for a man to be libelled in the form of a ghastly newspaper cut, but it is adding insult to injury to present the caricature of a political free-booter for that of a staid, sonsie, responsible, patriotic citizen. Nothing but sackcloth and ashes will prevent the overflow of the cup of wrath.

By John T. McIntyre. Copyrighted and All Rights Reserved

"But here's a thing I've not been able to puzzle out. According to your notion—and you may have proved it since, for all I know—Locke was not in the showroom during or after the murder. And yet it should have been he who dropped the little particle from the railroad ticket upon the desk."

"It would seem that way," admitted Ashton-Kirk, "but the fact is that Sagon visited Locke at the Institute and rode to the city with him that afternoon. The particle may be accounted for in that way."

"Yes," mused the other, "that's so. But, one thing more. I should have asked this of Morris himself if he had not been in such a confoundedly miserable way. Why did he take to hiding immediately after the murder?"

"He spent the night in his lodgings at Christie Place; next day the papers told him that he was suspected. He knew that if he appeared he'd be arrested; and as he desired to recover the plans before the murderers escaped with them, he felt that this would be fatal to his chances. Of course, I am not sure of this; but I think it more than likely."

"Speaking of taking chances on the plans," said Pendleton, "you were willing enough to take pretty long ones on them last night. Why, Sagon actually had them in his hands."

Ashton-Kirk drew a flat packet from his pocket. Opening it he showed that it contained nothing but blank paper.

"This is what Sagon found behind the portrait," said he, with a smile. "The real papers I was very careful to remove two days ago. One moment—that's the telephone."

Pendleton sat rolling a cigarette and wondering, while Ashton-Kirk took down the receiver.

"Well?" said he. Then in a moment his expression changed. "Oh, is it you. Well, how are you after your exciting experience?"

Here Pendleton dropped the completed cigarette and listened.

"You may consider yourself very fortunate to escape with a slight headache," said Ashton-Kirk. Then there was a pause, and he said, apparently in answer to a question: "Oh, yes, he's with me now. Will you speak to him?"

Pendleton arose and took a step toward the stand. But he halted as if shot when his friend continued in the transmitter:

"No?" Pause. "Oh, very well. Good-bye."

Ashton-Kirk hung up the receiver and turned to his friend.

"So," said Pendleton, in a queer sort of voice, "she doesn't wish to speak to me."

"Not over the wire—no. But she wants you to come to her—at once. She desires to hear all about what he calls the wonderful way we have handled this case, and she wants to hear it—from you." Ashton-Kirk looked at his watch. "It is now 10.45. You can get there by eleven if you rush."

"Do you call doing that little distance in fifteen minutes rushing?" The young man's face was radiant, and he was making for the door as he spoke. "If I don't do it in half that time, I'm a duffer."

Then the door slapped behind him, and Ashton-Kirk heard him bounding down the stairs.

THE END.

THE ROBBING OF MARTHA

A Short Story

"Baubles, lady; bad for you," and added with a sentimentalized imitation of her precision of speech:

"My own engagement ring! My dear grandmother's engagement ring! To look at you, lady, I should judge that your grandmother must have been an old maid. So long!"

He started to leave the room. The door bell rang and immediately afterward the front door opened.

"Josiah," said Martha trembling violently, "Josiah!"

Her voice sounded as though she were trying to call but had not the strength.

The thief was at her instantly. Grabbing her roughly, he said:

"If you let on, I'll blow this block off!"

Then go quickly. I dislike a mess."

He laughed boisterously.

"You're a tender, loving one I feel for Josiah.

His soggy boots made an unpleasant sucking sound as he crossed the room to the open window.

"As soon as you leave the house I shall telephone to the police."

"Do, lady," he answered derisively. "Tell 'em I am doin' fine."

He vaulted lightly over the window ledge.

Josiah stood in the doorway.

"Company, Martha? Shall I wait in the other room?"

"No, Josiah."

He looked around puzzled.

"I distinctly heard voices when I came in," he said suspiciously.

She nodded an affirmation.

"Ah," thought Josiah, "a former lover. She did not expect me tonight. I must show my disapproval," and he assumed a sullen air.

She will miss his loving clinging dependence, and I can forgive. Really she is so undemonstrative."

He had fallen in love with her because of her adequate management of everything and everybody, himself included. He felt that her conquest of him was a gauge of her capability. Was he not heir to and manager of the largest department store in town?

He called himself a plain, straightforward business man.

The world called him a stupid pigheaded bore.

"What a match," the gay old gossips said when they heard of his engagement to Martha Green. "The children will be dummies for his show windows."

He was eminently satisfied with himself, and satisfied, too, with Martha, but like all prosaic people he secretly longed for a passionate romance and figured himself as a Launcelot.

Now was his chance to show the truly great side of his character. He would be stern. She would confess. He would magnanimously forgive. She would throw herself into his arms, weeping. He would tenderly comfort her and she would know him to be a hero.

He waited expectant.

She walked by him quickly, went to the telephone and took down the receiver.

"Hello, Exchange," she said. "Police Headquarters, please."

There was a brief pause.

"Hello, Police Headquarters! This is number three six two Sheldon Street. Send police immediately. A jewellery thief has just left the house. He has two diamond rings in his left hand coat pocket. He is wearing a long ulster, has on a plaid cap, is young, good-looking, with large ears, and is very wet and dirty. I am Martha Green. He is carrying a very large knife and a loaded revolver, too, I think. I saw the knife. He threatened to use the revolver. Good-bye."

"Josiah," she said, turning to where he had been.

"Josiah!" but he was gone.

She went into the hall and saw him opening the front door.

"Josiah," she called, "come here quickly."

In a tone of considerable irritation he called back,

"I must catch him, Martha. I must catch him. Your diamonds, you say? Do you realise what they are worth? Fifteen hundred dollars; not a cent more or less. Don't stop me. I must catch him."

"But the revolver, Josiah, think of the revolver—and the knife. He will kill you. Come back. Please come back. It is such a disgraceful, untidy way to die."

At the word "revolver" and "knife" he hesitated.

"The police will doubtless manage to catch him," he said.

Then the thought of the loss of fifteen hundred dollars' worth of diamonds burst on him afresh.

"Why didn't you call me, Martha?" he said accusingly. "I could have overpowered him. You lost your head completely, and I have prided myself up to now, that my future wife would rise adequately to any emergency. At the first real test she has failed."

Martha regarded him pityingly. With her words so clearly articulated as to make them sound like pebbles dropping into a metal box, and with the demeanor entirely unruffled, she said pleasantly:

"Josiah, you are cruelly misjudging me. You are totally ignorant in this matter. Let me explain. The thief came in unannounced. I had not expected you to-night. He threatened to kill you. I was left in charge of the house, and a scrimmage such as you speak of, was entirely out of the question in these rooms. As to my rings, my real diamonds are buried in the coalbin. Did you suppose that I were them? The ones the thief took I bought at a most reasonable price at your store. Come, let me put on my work apron and I will show you the real ones."

She turned to go, but Josiah caught her rapturously in his arms and exclaimed:

"My beloved!"

Disengaging herself, she stood a moment thoughtful.

"He was a most obedient man," she said reflectively. "He stood exactly where I told him to. If trained to greater neatness he would make a nice husband for some one. I was writing to Margery when he came in. Do you suppose she would suit him, Josiah?"

More Deadly Than The Plague

The Common Cold is Held Responsible For a Multitude of Human Ills.

Colds kill more people than plagues. When not avoided they can often be hurried from the system by keeping the filtering and excretory organs active.

Many write us that nothing helps them to so quickly get rid of a cold as Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills. This is because these pills act directly on the liver, kidneys and bowels, and promptly arouse their activity.

The poisonous matter which collects with every cold is quickly removed from the system before it has time to cause trouble or give rise to other derangements.

If misfortune in the form of a cold should overtake you do not give it a chance to attack the lungs or to settle on the kidneys. Get rid of it quickly by using Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills.

Mr. J. H. Gibbard, Mission City, B. C., writes: "We have used Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills for the last year, and think they are just the thing as a family medicine. My wife had been sick for nearly two years with torpid liver and kidney complaint. Sometimes she was so bad she had to go to bed for two or three weeks at a time, and she suffered dreadfully.

Reading of Dr. Chase's Kidney and Liver Pills, she decided to use them and has been improving ever since. She is never sick a day now, so we do not call the cure permanent. I have been greatly benefitted myself by this treatment for kidney trouble."

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

HE tried to do too much."

I overheard those words on a trolley car to-day and it suddenly came over me that a very common epitaph they would be if we used them whenever we had reason to.

An epitaph not only for people, but also for business failures and very many other things.

For instance—surely somewhere in your memory is a Christmas — like as not the December 25th, just passed—over whose unhappy memory might well be written "I tried to do too much."

You tried to give more presents than you really and honestly had time and strength and finances for.

You were flurried and fussed and hurried about getting them done up and off in time.

You went in town the day before Christmas to get some ornaments for the tree which had been overlooked until then. Oh, yes, you might easily have gotten something that would have done at the little corner store, but it wouldn't have been just what you had set your heart on, so you went in town and wore yourself out, body and mind and soul by contending with that wearying, confusing crowd of last minute shoppers.

And Christmas Eve you sat up until nearly midnight to finish that sofa pillow that had so much more work on it than you realized.

And Christmas morning you had to get up early because you were going to have all the relatives and have a very elaborate dinner.

And as an absolutely inevitable consequence of all this, on the day when "Peace and Good Will" should have reigned in your heart, you were cross and tired and hardly able to keep from bursting into tears. You didn't somehow take much pleasure in the gifts you received and it seemed to you that no one really liked what you gave.

All because you tried to do too much.

And surely there is some vacation holiday in your life that was spoiled in this way. You wanted to have just so many new gowns. You wanted to do just as much shopping. You wanted to have everything just so spic and span. You had a dozen little last things that simply had to be done, and so you went away tired and nervous and incapable of receiving the benefit from your vacation that you should have gotten.

All because—you tried to do too much.

Again and again in business life I meet men and women—especially the latter, whose minds and manners are confused, who rush from one thing to another without giving any one due attention, who follow up no subject thoroughly, who end in failure or with but half the success that might have been theirs because—they try to do too much.

There is an inelegant expression for this method of dissipating our powers which I like for its forcefulness.

It is "Biting off more than one can chew."

I think this insane inclination to "bite off more than one can chew" is a disease of the generation—especially with the women.

To have the clearness of mind; to estimate one's ability and the strength of mind to live within it—surely these are capacities worth the having.

Are they yours?

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE Y. M. C. A. MARKED BY ENCOURAGING REPORTS

Financial Statement Presented---Resume of the Good Work That Has Been Accomplished During the Past Year.

NEW DIRECTORS CHOSEN

In this report the General Secretary summarized the aims of the association to be:—1 To organize and concentrate the efforts of the Christian young men of the city for the winning of young men and boys to Christ, and to bring the Word of God into vital contact with the hearts and the minds of those young men and boys who are indifferent to its value and claims. 2. To bring to those who have a need for further education and appreciation of their need and to give them an opportunity to correct deficiencies. 3. To enable men to recognise the importance of good health and to give them an opportunity under expert direction to correct defects and to build the body scientifically to its utmost capacity. To centralize the social life of the men of Peterborough with the object of elevating social influences. He mentioned the work being carried on in three of the large shops of the city. Bible study classes are held in these shops and the life of Jesus is taught to about 60 men every week.

With a very encouraging outlook ahead and with reason to feel grateful and cheered by the past, the Peterborough Young Men's Christian Association has started upon another year of service to the City of Peterborough.

Mr. J. C. Shook, the retiring President, was in the chair last evening when the members met in their annual meeting and heard the various reports of work done during 1910.

The meeting was opened in the usual way with the reading of a scripture lesson, after which Mr. F. G. Hazzard led in prayer.

CONSIDERABLE BUILDING.

The Property Committee reported, through the chairman, Mr. A. McFarlane, that there had been considerable work done on the building during the past year, with the object of making the place more attractive and to better adapt the building to the needs of the work. All this work had been done by the officers of the Association doring their spare time, thus saving the Association a large expense at a time when the saving was appreciated. There still remains a good deal of repair work to be done before the building is in the condition which it ought to be to carry on an effective work. This committee also reported the purchase of 100 new lockers, this making a total of 200 lockers in two locker rooms.

MANY NEW MEMBERS.

The membership committee reported a year of progress in membership work. The roll at the first of the year was 396, while at the close of the year there were 496 paid up members on the roll. Of this number 226 are full privilege members and 84 are limited, with 185 boy members. There are 114 active members and 197 associate seniors.

GREAT ACTIVITY HERE.

The Physical Department made a very extensive report in which the various activities were enlarged upon and which revealed a work which is second to none in Canada.

The report commenced by paying tribute to the Leaders' Corps, which has rendered such valuable help in the conducting of the gymnasium work. Without this corps of men it would have been quite impossible to carry on the work. Then the Tennis Club was mentioned as one of the live branches of the Physical Department. Not only had this club carried off the coveted "Kerr" cup, the token of City Championship, but some of the members of the club had won honors in the city singles. The Penman games were mentioned, the Bowden and Eastwood Trophies Athletic Competitions, the Early Morning Swimming Club, the swimming classes, Basketball Leagues, wrestling class, First Aid class and bowling alley competitions. Thanks were tendered to Messrs. Wm. Lech, Sandford Hall, J. I. Allin and John Laing, for trophies which they had presented for competitions.

BOYS' DEPARTMENT.

Dr. Middleton gave the report of Boys' Department. He referred to the improvements which had been made early on the year to the rooms, and the addition of new furniture, making the Boys' Department more attractive for the boys. A banquet held early in the year had been a great success, the camp had been the most satisfactory ever held. Hikes and outdoor athletics for boys had been well patronized, while the Bible classes and boys' meetings had also been well attended by the boys. The Scouts came in for mention and satisfaction expressed at the growth and satisfactory adjustment of the Scout movement in the city, which had been brought about by the fusion of all the forces into one Peterborough Boys' Scouts. The boys had done good service at Christmas in collecting and distributing presents to the poor and in selling stamps to aid the Muskoka Free Hospital.

GENERAL SECRETARY'S REPORT.

The General Secretary's report showed a splendid representation of members in all the departments for the men and boys.

DEFICIT WIPED OUT.

After he had read the report the treasurer made the gratifying announcement that with the help of the friends of the association, led by Mr. J. W. Bennet, the deficit had been cleared off. Mr. Bennet had given $100 on the condition that the balance be raised before the night of the annual meeting. This had been done, and much of the credit was due Mr. Bennet for his help.

The directors elected for the purpose of filling vacancies on the Board are as follows—Messrs. C. A. Gillespie, Dr. Scott, J. J. Hartley, R. J. Saden and R. F. Downie.

The usual votes of thanks were passed.

Mr. J. W. Bennet was again elected by a standing vote, to be the honorary president of the association.

WHEN ONCE THEY KNOW US.

Orillia (110 miles by rail) has sent us 17 students this year, although they have their own colleges teaching Pitman. Why? On January 3rd, 1910, Jas. Beaton, son of the late Dr. Beaton, of Orillia enrolled with us and on February 10th he returned to his home a competent stenographer. He might yet doubt 30-day stenography only that he spent his holidays in Toronto and learned that Mr. Ingram, son of the vice-chairman of the Ontario Railway and Municipal Board was an enthusiastic Moon College student. EDWARD TERRY HAS PLAYED 4,000 TIMES IN ONE PART

Famous English Actor Is Coming to the Grand Next Week in Pinero's Famous Old Comedy "Sweet Lavender"

A LONG TOUR

The very first year that Edward Terry became his own manager, and owned his own theatre, the year 1887, he produced one of Pinero's comedies, "Sweet Lavender."

On the occasion of its first run, he played the part of Richard Phenyl, Esq., in this play, 670 times. In the intervening years he has revived this splendid comedy a dozen times in London, he has played it in every town that possesses a first-class theatre in the British Isles, he has toured America in it and has played it in South Africa and Australia. He is now on his way to a second Australian tour, during which "Sweet Lavender" will be one of the main constituents of his repertoire.

All told, Terry has played old Dick Phenyl a good 4,000 times. It is a part admirably calculated to show his quaint humour off to the best advantage. Poor Richard Phenyl, of the Inner Temple, is a barrister, briefless, bankrupt in purse and reputation, a slave to the whiskey bottle, yet with it all so frank, so tender hearted, so unselfish, so witty, so whimsical, that he is absolutely irresistible.

Phenyl's short cut to our heart is the fact that he is so pathetically conscious of his own weakness. He is so humourous in excusing his frequent lapses, and the surfaces, sparkling with a whimsical wit, only hides a depth of self-contempt that is almost tragic.

"Sweet Lavender' is one of those charming comedies Pinero wrote before he turned his attention to the psychological drama. It has been described as a rainbow drama, an April day of smiles and tears from end to end. It's written in the author's brightest vein, with a simpler note of pathos than is usual.

The wonder of it all is that Terry after having played the part so many times, can still feel it, and invest it with his finished artistry. Four thousand times is a wonderful record for a service in a single part. It means at least twelve solid seasons in one play—in this instance large parts of eighteen or nineteen seasons. To understand the significance or the original run of 670 consecutive nights in London, it is only necessary to compare it with the record achieved by the most successful play of recent years in America, "The Man From Home.' "The Man From Home" ran for 520 times in New York, 342 times in Chicago and 225 times in Boston. That totals 1087 performances, in America's three leading cities. Terry has played "Sweet Lavender" half again as often in London alone.

Terry has now been before the public for almost fifty years. He was born in 1844, so that he one of the grand old men of the stage. His present tour may be the last chance American audiences will have to see him.

GRATEFUL MOTHERS

What Zam-Buk Did For Their Little Ones

Thousands of mothers in Canada owe a debt of gratitude to Zam-Buk for its cure of their children, and hundreds of them are not slow to recognize the claim.

Mrs. J. Quiding, of Ninette, Man., says: "My little boy was suffering very badly from a form of skin disease over his eye. I applied Zam-Buk to the affected part, and in a very short time, I am pleased to say, the sores were completely healed."

Mrs. F. Miners, of 311 Suffolk St., Guelph, Ont., says: "My litle daughter Lorinda (6), contracted a skin disease. This first broke out like tiny water blisters, afterwards taking the form of dry scabs. These would disappear for a short time, and then reappear worse than ever. We tried Zam-Buk, and with each application the irritation and soreness were greatly relieved and the child rested easier. Perseverance with Zam-Buk worked a complete cure."

All druggists and stores sell Zam-Buk at 50c. box or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, upon receipt of price.

MR. RYERSON RITCHIE TO LECTURE IN DENVER

WHAT HE HAS DONE

Mr. Ryerson Ritchie, late of Boston, but now a resident of his native city, Peterborough, has gone to Denver, by invitation of the Chamber of Commerce of that city to give an address on "The building of a great Chamber of Commerce," at the banquet to celebrate the opening of Denver's new Chamber of Commerce building. The occasion is one of almost national interest, as nearly all of the great American Chambers of Commerce and Boards of Trade will be represented by deputations.

Mr. Ritchie has been engaged in organization work since he went to the States, nearly 30 years ago. He started in Cincinnati, and was secretary of the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association, and rose to the highest attainable position in the country as expert. In 1886 Mr. Ritchie removed from Cincinnatti to become secretary of the Commercial Club in Kansas City. In 1892 he was selected from the country at large, and became the Secretary of the Cleveland Board of Trade. Under his guidance the Board was reorganized as the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce, and became a model of efficiency and influence. Upon his retirement to become president of the American Trust Company he was also elected President of the Chamber of Commerce. In 1903 the business men of Detroit took advantage of Mr. Ritchie's reputation for organization work and induced him to take charge and remove to consolidate the several associations in that city. The now famous Detroit Board of Commerce is the result of his efforts. Detroit has triplicated its industrial strength and almost doubled its population since the Board of Commerce was established in 1893. While resident in Detroit Mr. Ritchie planned the construction and laid out the work of the new Chicago Association of Commerce, but he declined to accept the tender of a permanent position with it. In 1908 Boston sought the services of Mr. Ritchie, and he undertook to unite the Board of Trade Merchants' Association, Chamber of Commerce and other trade bodies into one institution, the Boston Chamber of Commerce, the largest and locally the most influential body in the United States. After effecting consolidation Mr. iRtchie retired from solidation Mr. Ritchie retired from settled in Peterborough, where he intends to spend a large part of his time. It is an interesting inference that the five most efficient and notable commercial organizations in the United States are those with which Mr. Ritchie has been identified officially, the Boston Chamber of Commerce, Chicago Association of Commerce, and the Commercial Club, of Kansas City.

AN APPRECIATION OF BARBARA TENNANT

Tribute to Mrs. Harold Wadeley Who is to Give a Recital in the Grand Opera House.

CHARMING PERSONALITY

MONTREAL, JAN. 17. — The well-known English woman writer whose nom-de-plume "STELLA" is a household name, in describing Miss Barbara Tennant (Mrs. Harold Wadely) who appears in a recital at Peterborough on Feb. 7, says in part:

Barbara Tennant, since she came to Canada, has certainly endorsed the reputation she had made for herself in England. We, who have been allowed the privilege of studying her and her work, know Miss Tennant to be a truly great artist, and as she tours Canada, critics will write of her as such, and the triumphs she will gain will be deserved. Her aim is to make the best use of the great gifts nature endowed her with—to educate—and her efforts in this respect certainly do elevate and make one forget the everyday cares of life. Her beautiful voice is always restful.

But it is of Miss Tennant, the woman—not the actress—I would speak, for recently I had the opportunity of studying this lady for a few days—having her entirely to myself. I had thought, from previous descriptions, that there must be something more than cleverness in this gift, to hold her audiences so enraptured and carried quite away, and I was glad of the privilege of being able to know her myself, and I speedily found out what that something was—character. She has great personal charms, but character is the word. It may be that her acting influences her character, or vice-versa, but whichever way it is, I found in Barbara Tennant, one of the sweetest girls it has been my lot to meet—quite unspoiled by previous victories and unselfish; shy and retiring disposition, and ever ready to give credit to others. I use the word unselfish advisedly for many men and women I know, upon reaching the pinnacle of fame to which they have attained, have become selfish and expecting—not altogether their fault — probably through the homage of the public, but this girl is utterly incapable of this failing. One trait in her character which struck me more than any other was the reverence she has for all things spiritual, and this I take to be the keynote of her public work, as it certainly permeates her private life, for she has an absolute disgust for anything irreverent, either in expression or action. Her sense of humour is keen and delightful and her kindly disposition makes her laugh with, not at one.

Her early training was strict, which no doubt was a great factor in the moulding of Miss Tennant. The English home with its strictest teachings on the one hand, and on the other the hard work of the theatre, have helped to build up a splendid personality, with a character which will do much to elevate our life in the Dominion. I can safely predict for Barbara Tennant as great a career in Canada as she had ever in England, depending entirely for my verdict upon the capabilities of the Canadian people to discriminate and apreciate true greatness. To me, however, Miss Tennant will always be the sweet English girl whose presence brightened for a short seven days my little home.

INDIGESTION

An Interesting Statement

Portland, Me.—"I suffered so long with indigestion and stomach trouble that I lost flesh rapidly—I had used all kinds of remedies without help. Vinol was recommended and I decided to try it.

"I soon commenced to feel better, my stomach trouble disappeared and I can eat heartily without the slightest distress. My experience leads me to believe that no other medicine equals Vinol for stomach troubles and indigestion. It tones up the stomach, increases the appetite and creates strength." W. E. Waterhouse. (We guarantee this testimonial to be genuine.)

Vinol seldom fails to strengthen and tone up the tired, overtaxed and weakened nerves of the digestive organs, and remove the cause of indigestion and soon enables the sufferer to digest with ease the foods that once caused distress. Moreover Vinol is delicious to the taste, contains no oil and does not upset weak stomachs, as do old fashioned cod liver oil and emulsions.

Try a bottle of Vinol with the understanding that your money will be returned if it does not help you. McDermid and Jury, corner George and Charlotte streets; also Payne's drug store, corner George and Simcoe streets.

Examiner Special:

HAVELOCK, JAN. 17.—The death occurred on Sunday morning of one more of Havelock's most respected and esteemed citizens, Mrs. Wm. Matheson who resided in this village for many years, her huband, Mr. W. Matheson, having been born here. Deceased has for the past three or four years been in ill-health, but only the past few days had been thought serious, so that the news of her death came as a great shock to the people, who feel deeply grieved. She leaves to mourn her loss her husband, Mr. Wm. Matheson, two daughters, Mrs. Davidson of West Toronto, and Beatrice, at home, and four sons, William of West Toronto, George and Harold, in the West, and Archie, at home. CONSTRUCTION COMPANY SAY THE DESIGN WAS FAULTY

The Blame for Leaking Roof at Pump House is Not Due to Bad Workmanship They Claim.

COMMISSIONERS MET

The City Water Commissioners held a meeting yesterday afternoon with all the members present.

The secretary was instructed to write to Mr. Kennedy for particulars of an item in the Bishop Construction Company's account of $1832.14 for lumber.

A report from Dr. McPherson, the Medical Health Officer was read in regard to the condition of the water during November and December, showing that the water was free from infection during those months.

A letter was read from R. B. Rice and Sons, offering for sale the residence of the late John Carnegie adjoining the power house. The secretary was instructed to enquire as to the price.

The Bishop Construction Company wrote in answer to a complaint from the commissioners in regard to the roof of the power house leaking that the trouble lay in the design and not in the workmanship. They advised that the tar parapet be flashed with metal.

The following accounts were presented and ordered to be paid:

G. N. W. Telegraph Co.	$ 0.83

STOCK AND SEED JUDGING COURSE TO BE HELD HERE

The stock and seed judging course to be held in this city on Jan. 24, 25 and 26 promises to be much superior to the one that proved so popular last year. The seed judging session will be conducted in the Market Hall on Tuesday morning by Mr. C. R. Klinck, B.S.A., of the Ontario Agricultural College. Mr. Klinck, who is one of Professor Zavitz's most capable associates, is bringing specially prepared samples of grain. Those who attended last year will not soon forget the experience they had in judging oats, and it may be safely predicted that those farmers will bring many others with them to receive instructions from Mr. Klinck.

The judging of dairy cattle (all stock will be judged in the Armouries) on Tuesday afternoon will be in charge of C. F. Bailey, of the Department of Agriculture and Mr. F. R. Mallory of Frankford. Mr. MacRae of the Live Stock Department of Agriculture, Ottawa will conduct the horse judging classes on Wednesday. Roadsters, single, 15.2 and under, and carriage, single, over 15.3 will be shown on the halter in the morning. Heavy horses, consisting of brood mares, two year old mare gelding, will be placed before the farmers for judging in the afternoon.

A class of Cotswold sheep illustrating the long wools, and a class of Shropshires, representing the short wools, will be in the judging ring on Thursday morning. Great interest is now being taken in the sheep industry and Mr. MacRae will undoubtedly make this particular session exceedingly valuable. For the beef cattle on Thursday afternoon, a class of Aberdeen-Angus, in addition to Shorthorns is expected.

Many farmers drove long distances into the city last year and remained for every session. Each session will be too valuable to miss and no one should neglect the opportunity to take advantage of the excellent free training that may be obtained.

STOCK COMPANY PROVES VERY STRONG ATTRACTION

The favourable impression made by the Murray-Mackey Stock Company in their opening offering at the Grand Opera House on Monday night has been deepened by the succeeding plays they have given. The company is undoubtedly one of the strongest of its kind that has ever appeared here. Certainly no ten, twenty, or thirty cent show that has been seen here has offered such a splendid cast, such sumptuous scenic effects or such clever vaudeville. The stirring comedy drama "Under Sealed Orders" was given artistic representation last night while the matinee offering "In the Shadow of the Cross" was received with every indication of approval. The specialties are an outstanding feature of the bill that earn hearty applause. To-night the play is "Why He Divorced Her" to-morrow night, "Thelma," Saturday night "The Younger Brothers" and Saturday matinee "The Exile"

AN EVIDENTLY GRATUITOUS AND SLANDEROUS CONCOCTION

A local paper this morning purports to print the tenor of a reply by Rev. Father McColl, to an invitation sent him by Rev. J. C. Davidson to attend a dinner given by the latter to the ministers and clergy of the city. The article referred to says that instead of accepting the invitation, the worthy priest "came back at him" in a letter, in which it is asserted that "among other things Rev. Faather McColl said, "There can be no compromise between the men in the church and those outside of it. The warefare between the two will be one also in which kid gloves will play no part."

The article referred to seemed so absurdly improbable in its statement that Rev. Mr. Davidson was asked in reference to the nature of the letter he is alleged to have received from Rev. Father McColl.

Rev. Mr. Davidson's reply was, in effect, that he recently received a letter from Rev. Father McColl, and that it was couched in the most courteous and kindly terms, and he (Mr. Davidson) added that there was nothing in the letter in word or meaning that could for a moment justify what was reported in the article referred to, of which he had been told, but which he had not seen, and had no wish to see if it was of the nature described.

SHOULDER FRACTURED

Little Ellen McBride, the six-year-old daughter of Mr. McBride, of the Peterborough Fire Department, was yesterday the victim of a very painful accident. She was out sleighriding with a number of other children, when one of the others collided with her, with the result that she received a very badly fractured shoulder. The little one was taken to her home at 607 Union street, and the fracture reduced. She is now resting easily, and doing as well as can be expected.

CANADA EXCITED

TORONTO, JAN. 19.—The whole of Canada to-day from the Atlantic to the Pacific, is much excited about the report from Washington that wheat will be put on the free list by the Trade Treaty, which is in the course of preparation in Washington to-day. The report is not definite, but rumour, sufficiently verified, set the Dominion talking. The free entry of Canadian wheat into the United States was one of the big things asked by the farmers' delegation the other day. The Canadian millers, on the other hand, are not favourable, on the whole, although Robert Meighan of the Lake of the Woods Manufacturing Co., was reported from Montreal this morning as saying that Canada's milling interest was too big to suffer from reciprocity in wheat. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, seen this morning, said all the power was in the hands of Messrs. Fielding and Patterson, in Washington.

WEDDING BELLS

On Tuesday, Jan. 17th, a quiet wedding was solemnized at St. Luke's church, Downeyville, when Miss Agnes, daughter of Eugene Shyne was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Mr. Michael Dorgan, son of Martin Dorgan, of King's Wharf.

The bride wore a most becoming suit of heliotrope with hat to match and a handsome mink fur. The bridesmaid, Miss Theresa Shyne, wore a pretty blue suit. Mr. Jas. Lucas acted as groomsman.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Fr. McGuire and the wedding march was played by Miss Mollie O'Brien, organist.

Mr. and Mrs. Dorgan will reside at Downeyville. Their many friends join in wishing them a long and happy wedded life.

A LETTER OF THANKS

From the Salvation Army Band to Citizens of Peterborough

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—With your kind permission I wish to express to the citizens of Peterborough the most sincere thanks of the Salvation Army Band, for their generous response in connection with our Christmas serenading. When the few remaining donations reach us, the total amount received will considerably exceed the returns from any previous year's serenading, and the Band boys are naturally elated over this practical mark of appreciation of their efforts on the part of our friends and well-wishers. It will certainly be a great encouragement to the Band, as well as to the corps in general, and a strong incentive to renewed energy in the work in which we are engaged.

While thanking our friends, I must not omit a word of appreciation of the hearty co-operation accorded us by the Examiner and its evening contemporary. The press of this city are certainly kind and generous in the support given by them to our work, and we gratefully acknowledge same as a strong factor in our success.

Respectfully yours,
J. H MERRETT, Ensign.

ENJOYABLE EVENING

A very enjoyable evening was experienced at the home of Miss Olive Letellier last night, when she had an at home in honour of Miss McGrath, of Seneca Falls, N.Y., who will be her guest for a few weeks.

WILL BE A GREAT SHOW

T. A. S. Minstrels Will Attract A Big Crowd.

The minstrel performance under the auspices of St. Peter's T. A. S., which will be held in St. Peter's School on Thursday and Friday, Jan. 26th and 27th, promises to be one of the most enjoyable events of the season. The large and capable company has been rehearsing for a long time, under the skilful direction of Mr. Geo. Lynch and those who have been permitted to be present at the rehearsals say that the production will be one of the best amateur performances ever given in this city. The musical numbers will be exceptionally good, up-to-the-second songs by some of the city's most accomplished vocalists being a feature. That there will be a liberal patronage accorded the presentation is assured.

SHIPPING CATTLE

Messrs. Morris & Brown shipped three carloads of fat cattle to Montreal to-day, two by G.T.R. and one by C. P. R. Mr. Brown stated to the Examiner to-day that all these cattle had been purchased in the surrounding country and that there were numerous herds left. This would make it appear that the farmers in the vicinity of Peterborough are going in more for stock raising and truck farming, than grain growing. This change has been gradually taking place in the past few years and the movement is being quickened, owing to the fact that the farmers find this sort of farming far more profitable. As the city grows, the demand for vegetables will increase, and it is owing to this fact the change before mentioned, is gradually being brought about.

BABY'S SKIN TROUBLES
"My baby boy while nursing broke out with running, watery sores all over his head and behind his ears," writes Mrs. Oscar Vancott, St. Antoine, Sask. "Many salves were prescribed to no effect. The child's head became a mass of scabs and he suffered untold agony from the dreadful itching. Dr. Chase's Ointment soon made a lasting cure, and also cured an older son of eczema."

WON MANY PRIZES AT LINDSAY

Word received from Mr. Frank Head indicates that the Peterborough poultry fancier has been very successful at the Lindsay Poultry Show which comes to an end to-night. Mr. Head has succeeded in winning the following prizes against the keenest possible competition: First, cock, second cock, third pullet and first, second and third for hen in Barred Rocks and first gander and second for two geese in the Toulouse geese class.

MURDERER FAMILIAR WITH THE HOUSE

Lobinski's Slayer Knew the Surroundings---Developments in the Case of Farmer Murdered at Wellesley Village are Promised in a Few Days.

Berlin, Jan. 19.—The inquest on the body of Franz Lobinski, murdered last week in his little cottage near the village of Wellesley, was not finished yesterday. While it is resumed on Monday, Jan. 30, there are likely to be developments of a sensational nature, as a result of the work of Detective Boyd and High Constable Huber. The officers are at work on important clues, and so informed Coroner Ghaister at yesterday's session.

In the meantime the feeling in the neighborhood is that the crime was committed by persons sufficiently well known to the old miser as to gain admittance to his house on a friendly call. It seems more than likely that they asked the loan of some money, and a quarrel followed the old man's refusal. It is known that the hammer with which the deed was done was kept ordinarily in a cupboard in the house.

Dr. Marty of New Hamburg and Dr. McEachren of Linwood, the physicians who conducted the post-mortem on Monday, agreed in testifying that Lobinski's skull was fractured by the hammer found at the rear of the house. Three wounds were deep enough to penetrate the brain, any one of which would have caused instant death.

Rudy Leis, the neighbor who discovered the body, swore that the old man had shown him what money he had in the house. There was $130 in gold in the little tin box which was later found with the hammer and bottle containing paris green. He testified also that Lobinski carried $100 in bills in his possession. The deceased had told the witness that he possessed $1,200 in addition to his other property.

Simon Huber, a neighbor, swore that on last Wednesday evening, between eight and nine o'clock, he heard a sleigh going past his place down the lane towards Lobinski's, and he said he heard the bells as far as Lobinski's house, and then did not hear them any more.

YESTERDAY IN HOUSE

Low Tariff on Implements Was Discussed—Yesterday Was Westerner's Day

NO DIVISION MADE

Ottawa Jan. 19.—The decisionless discussion — decisionless because the Commons succeeded in talking it out till adjournment without a division—on the resolution of Mr. Arthur Meighen, calling for "a substantial reduction in the import duties on agricultural implements," was not without its embarrassments. Its sponsor, the Conservative member for Portage la Prairie, found his position a delicate one. He was met by lack of enthusiasm on the part of his eastern political associates. Moreover, it fell to his lot to advance a new interpretation to the National Protective Policy, to which he still declared his adherence. Notwithstanding these disadvantages, for two hours he argued in support of his contention and secured support from his western associates.

Likewise the position of Mr. W. E. Knowles, the only Liberal to participate in the debate, was somewhat anomalous. Last session the Moose Jaw man fathered a similar resolution, which found a place on the order paper, but did not secure further record in the proceeding. The pending fiscal negotiations at Washington did not encourage extravagance in statement, and Mr. Knowles was content to emphatically enunciate his own free trade views and condemn in a general way the economic fallacies of a high protective tariff.

In his opening sentences Mr. Meighen said there was no member on either side of the House who would not be compelled to admit the necessity for a sane protective scheme in Canada. The one exception, he remarked facetiously, was the member for Red Deer, Dr. Michael Clarke, an exotic plant, who by assiduous care was able to keep alive his free trade beliefs.

After referring to the policy of the Government on trade matters, Mr. Meighen said: "The gravest charge which I will always hold against this Government is that they preach a doctrine in which they have no real belief."

A second charge was that in attempting to continue the national policy, they had overlooked the guiding principle that, as the manufacturing industries developed and acquired a hold on the home market, it was essential that duties should be reduced in order to meet changed conditions. The Government, he thought, had become a slave to those who placed it in power and maintained it there.

Taking history for witness Mr. Meighen quoted from speeches of Sir John Macdonald and Hon. Geo. E. Foster to show that it was the intention of the founders of the national policy to give Canadian manufacturers a reasonable hold upon the home market before reducing the tariff. When in 1894 the tariff on agricultural implements was reduced from 35 to 20 per cent., Mr. Foster contended that the intention of the then Government was to create a condition that would tax the ingenuity of the manufacturers to retain the home market.

Mr. Meighen contended that one reason for the reduction of duties was that the manufacturers of agricultural implements were in a unique position, the exports being five to one, compared with the imports, and with one exception the exports exceeded the imports of any industry in Canada.

Proceeding, Mr. Meighen showed that the tariff on agricultural implements was not a revenue tariff. The revenue from that source was trifling in relation to the total customs revenue, and to that collected on other and much less important manufactures, it being only $983,685, or if plows were excepted, which represented the largest import item of agricultural implements, the duty under this head was only $92,974. Then, if the relation of imports to exports was the same throughout, the revenue from customs from this class, instead of being $81,000,000, would be under $19,000,000, which was obviously no tariff for revenue.

W. E. Knowles (Lib., Moose Jaw), replied to Mr. Meighen. He advanced the argument that binders, for instance, had increased in value since 1896, which accounted for the increased valuation.

Mr. Knowles said that, like Sir Wilfrid Laurier, he was a believer in free trade ideas as they have it in England. It would be impossible to have such a policy in Canada. He preferred the Government's policy in regard to the tariff to that of the Opposition. He had no quarrel with the present resolution, but why did Mr. Meighen ask for a reduction on duties on all commodities which the agriculturists required?

He then proceeded to deal with the question generally. It was about time, he said, that the infant industries of the country were able to stand by themselves. One of the infant industries was able to go to the United States and spend three million dollars in the purchase of a factory. This would indicate that the time had arrived when they should be able to go out and meet the competition of the world. But the manufacturers seemed to regard protection as a divine right.

Mr. Knowles, continuing, believed that the best policy for Canada at the present time was a tariff for revenue. A lower tariff would bring a larger revenue. The Government in the past had made considerable reductions in the tariff, and he hoped for further reductions in the future.

R. S. Lake (Qu'Appelle) said that, while Mr. Knowles had made a free trade speech, he had been careful to refrain from saying that he would support Mr. Meighen's motion.

It was almost six o'clock, but John Herron (Macleod) was able to place himself on record in favor of the resolution. He would have been pleased if it had gone farther, because he was of the opinion that the time had arrived when all the duty should be taken off binders, mowers and such articles, which are successfully sold in foreign countries against competition.

The Quickest, Simplest Cough Cure

Easily and Cheaply Made at Home. Saves You $2.

This recipe makes 16 ounces of cough syrup—enough to last a family a long time. You couldn't buy as much or as good cough syrup for $2.50.

Simple as it is, it gives almost instant relief and usually stops the most obstinate cough in 24 hours. This is partly due to the fact that it is slightly laxative, stimulates the appetite and has an excellent tonic effect. It is pleasant to take—children like it. An excellent remedy, too, for whooping cough, sore lungs, asthma, throat troubles, etc.

Mix 2 cups of granulated sugar with with one cup of warm water and stir for 2 minutes. Put 2½ ounces of Pinex (50 cents' worth) in a 16 oz. bottle and add the Sugar Syrup. It keeps perfectly. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

Pine is one of the oldest and best known remedial agents for the throat membranes. Pinex is the most valuable concentrated compound of Norway white pine extract, and is rich in guiaicol and all the other natural healing elements. Other preparations will not work in this formula.

The prompt results from this recipe have endeared it to thousands of housewives in the United States and Canada, which explains why the plan has been imitated often, but never successfully.

A guarantee of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

FIRE AND FOREST

Discussed by Hon. Clifford Sifton at the Forestry Convention---Many Notable Speakers Present

QUEBEC GATHERING

Quebec, Jan. 19.—Hon. Clifford Sifton, whose work as the head of the Conservation Commission has aroused such widespread interest, delivered an excellent address at the afternoon session of the Forestry Association. He chose for his subject the question of "Forestry Problems and Forest Fires." At the outset he pointed out the early difficulties which beset the pioneers in forestry work. Despite the indifference on the part of the public, Mr. Sifton contended that no movement in modern times had made such genuine progress as the conservation of our forests. He told of the early struggles he had to obtain a vote of $15,000 for the establishment of a forestry school in connection with the Department of the Interior. Since the establishment of that school no less than 15,000,000 trees had been planted in the western provinces.

His Excellency, Earl Grey, in opening the meeting dwelt on the beneficial results which had flowed from previous conventions and from the establishment of the Commision of Conservation and from the work of the Canadian Forestry Association. Earl Grey held that as pioneer conditions were now past, wasteful methods of handling forests which were allowable in early times should now be changed; that effort should now be directed to protection of existing forests and to the reproduction of desirable species of trees on lands cut or burned over.

He urged Canadians to be up and doing in order to save this great national heritage. He drew from his own observations in various parts of the world a picture of the dangers which confronted Canada if deforestation was allowed to go on unchecked, while on the other hand he pointed to some of the older countries which are now deriving a permanent and increasing revenue from their forests.

Addresses of welcome were delivered by Sir Lomer Gouin, Premier of Quebec, and Mayor Drouin. Other addresses were delivered by representatives of the various provinces, the United States, the churches, universities, chambers of commerce, manufacturers, etc.

Hon. Clifford Sifton, in his address in his usual vigorous style, said the time for talking was past and that now there should be action. He referred particularly to the loss from fires and the danger of waterpowers being alienated from the people. He pressed for the extending of the fire protection system throughout Canada, and told what had been done in various provinces in this respect.

Hon. Jules Allard, Minister of Lands and Forests for Quebec, dealt with the improvements made in the regulations in the last few years, which had resulted both in increased area of the forest and increased revenue. He took occasion to refute a statement going about that the developed waterpowers of Quebec did not exceed 50,000 horse-power, and showed how large an asset the waterpowers of Quebec were.

R. H. Campbell, Dominion superintendent of forestry, who has charge of all the forest land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and in the 40-mile belt along the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway in British Columbia, told of the areas and purposes of the forest reserves in providing timber and fuel for settlers and in protecting the headwaters of streams. This latter was the main purpose of the great reserve formed last year covering the eastern slope of the Rockies. He emphasized the point that the aim was to conserve the benefits of the reserves for all the people, and to this end he said it was necessary to reserve timber lands from settlement, so that the timber might be managed for the benefit of the people generally, and that a permanent policy of management might be carried out.

At the last moment H. S. Graves, chief forester of the United States, was unable to come, but sent one of his lieutenants, J. G. Peters, to take his place.

A letter of regret was also received from Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines for Ontario, spoke of the present conditions in regard to lumbering in Ontario and the change in the methods of sale from the bonus system to the plan of selling at so much per thousand feet on the stump. He also spoke of the reorganization of the fire-fighting service of the province and what had been done in regard to making permanent forest reserves and in extending Algonquin National Park.

Hon. A. K. Maclean, Attorney-General and Commissioner of Lands of Nova Scotia, dealt chiefly with the results of the forest survey of the province during the past two years under the direction of Dr. B. E. Fernow, dean of the faculty of forestry of Toronto University. The purpose of this survey is to show just where the province stands, that measures may be taken to conserve what is left.

Hon. W. C. H. Grimmer, Surveyor-General of New Brunswick, told of the importance of the forests as revenue-producers and the measures that are being taken to protect them, especially from fire.

In the evening the delegates were banqueted by the Government.

Four Children Burned.

Halifax, Jan. 19.—A disastrous fire, in which four of Gabriel Levy's children met their doom, took place on Tuesday on Little Tussock Island, near the eastern boundary of Halifax County. Little Tussock is inhabited solely by fishermen, the entire population consisting of about twenty families. At the time of the outbreak the thermometer registered 12 below zero, and as there is no fire brigade in the village, or adequate appliances for fighting the flames, the rescue party, which gathered from the neighboring cottages, experienced great difficulty in their efforts to assist the sufferers.

Lucky Orphans.

Kingston, Jan. 19.—While hundreds lost money through the failure of the Farmers' Bank, there are those who have been fortunate enough to draw money beforehand. A citizen quotes the instance of two orphans in Sharbot Lake, who had $1,100 on deposit. They drew the money ten days before the bank closed its doors.

Noted Explorer Dead.

London, Jan. 19.—Sir Francis Galton, the noted explorer and writer, died Tuesday night. He was born in 1822, and knighted in 1909. He explored Damaraland and South Ovamboland, Africa, in 1850-52. For many years he was on the council of the Royal Geographical Society.

WOULD VERY OFTEN FAINT AWAY.

Doctor Said That Sometime He Would Never Come Out of One.

Many people may be unaware of having anything wrong with their heart till some little excitement, overwork, or confinement in an overheated or overcrowded room or public building makes them feel faint or dizzy.

If you neglect the warning the slight feeling of dizziness gives you, and fail to take treatment, there will be a gradual progression to something more serious.

There is no reason you should wait till your case becomes desperate before you avail yourself of a perfect cure by using Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

Mr. F. S. Chute, Wheatley, Ont. writes:—"It is with gratitude I tell how your Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills benefited me. I was very weak and run down, and had headache, nearly every day and would very often faint away.

"In fact, my doctor said that sometime I would never come out of one of them. After taking three boxes of your pills I am glad to relate that it has been a number of years since I have had a fainting spell and scarcely have had a headache. Too much cannot be said in praise of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills for in me they have effected a perfect cure."

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

THE GAME OF THE SEASON HERE ON TUESDAY NEXT

District Title Practically Depends Upon the Battle Between the Peterborough and Trenton Intermediates---Peterborough Confident of Reversing the Conditions.

The tit-bit of the local hockey season is in sight.

Next Tuesday night at Brock St. Rink the Trenton and Peterborough Intermediates will meet in what should prove the grandest game of hockey seen here in years. It is the crucial game of the district, inasmuch as a win for Trenton would practically give them the district, while, on the other hand, a Peterborough victory would mean that the two teams would be tied for the honours; that is if Trenton is equal to the task of trimming Cobourg in the latter town. Trenton has to win two games away from home to cinch the district. On the other haud Peterborough has to win at home to tie up the group.

That it will be a classy exhibition can be accepted without the slightest doubt. The Trenton team is neither to be over-rated or under-rated. That is they are not to be picked as easy winners of the game because they ran up a big score against a crippled Peterborough team o ntheir own over-grown rink.. Nor, on the other hand, are they to be looked upon as easy for Peterborough in the Brock Street Rink. They are a wonderfully fast team, clever skaters, neat shots, and an all-round capable aggregation who will take a lot of beating even if the comparatively small ice surface here interferes with their effectiveness. They will, however, not find in the seven that will meet them here the team that they walloped so badly last week. Denison will be on hand to strengthen the Peterborough defence and there may be other changes in the line-up. At all events the local seven will be in much better shape than they were in Trenton, and the team from the mouth of the Canal will find somewhat of a surprise package awaiting them here. It will be some game all the way.

LINDSAY PEOPLE EXPECTED THE GRILLERS TO WIN

And Were Correspondingly Pleased When the Tide of Battle Turned the Other Way---Say That They Will Take Cobourg Into Camp Now---Lindsay Press on the Game.

The Lindsay Warder says:

Lindsay 7, Peterborough 5.

Such was the result of the brilliant and fast game of hockey played at the rink last night. It was a big surprise to Lindsay, as well as to Peterborough fans—especially to the latter—but it was demonstrated that Lindsay juniors are yet not to be overlooked in the junior race: that Lindsay juniors, providing they play as well as they did last night, will give Cobourg a chase for honours on Cobourg ice. It was a game full of exciting moments, and one well calculated to bristle the hair, a game worth while. Best of all, the game resulted with the local juniors having the long end of the score. Joy in Scugogville reigns supreme, and shattered hopes have been stimulated. Hurrah for the youngster Midgets. Keep up the good work

A crowd of about 120 hockey fans from Peterborough took advantage of the special and came to Lindsay with their Grillers, filled with confidence that without the least trouble Lindsay would be taken into camp, and by a good margin. Just to show the crowd that Lindsay can still produce a bunch of hockey players, the management wisely changed their forward line, and trotted out a team last night, that had the same men played against Cobourg, would have given them a trimming. Of course the management were a little doubtful as to the team's ability, and this was likely the cause of there being no restoratives in the way of oranges, lemons or liniment at half-time. The boys went to the room at the interval, after a hard fight to be rubbed with nothing until the the necessaries were sent for. First half ended 3-3, and oh, how the Grillers did work in the final period, with their supporters howling for more goals that were not forthcoming.

The Lindsay Post says:

Peterborough's much-tooted Grillers journeyed to Lindsay last night with a 17- 3record chalked up to their credit, and firmly confident that they could pretty nearly duplicate the trick against the Midgets on local ice.

They were accompanied by a goodly crowd of rooters who were willing to back their favourites to the last cent.

The Peterborough papers had lauded the achievements of their juniors sky-wards, in fact the abbreviated sporting editor of the Review had blossomed out as a second Walt Mason in his poetic laudations of the Grillers, but, as poet Burns said:

"The best laid plans of men and mice,

and the custard which the visitors thought they had in the local septette turned out to be a very unpalatable dish.

Lindsay St. rink contained a big crowd of enthusiasts, with a goodly number of Quaker Oats rooters, who made themselves prominent by their vociferous cheering whenever their favourites scintillated. Many local enthusiasts failed to take in the match, as they felt that the inexperienced Midgets would be no match for a team that was in the pink of condition. They are sorry this morning that they missed it.

The local management put on the ice the strongest line-up of the season and exercised good judgment in giving Denison a place on the team. This youngster uncorked a brand of hockey that electrified the crowd and brought dismay and consternation to the visitors. He scored four of the seven goals notched.

Was the result a surprise? Ask the vanquished and their supporters, whose faces depicted the chagrin they experienced. Moreover, this surprise was shared in by the local supporters, who expected nothing better than a close game, with the scoring in favour of the visitors.

"It was one of the fastest and most exciting games of hockey ever played on local ice," said an old veteran, and that opinion was shared in by everyone. The locals showed splendid form, and their playing was a revelation to their most sanguine supporters. It was a different brand of hockey altogether than that dished up in the Cobourg game, as the boys displayed splendid combination and checked like veterans.

Referee Sproule, of Toronto, made a most capable official, and his work pleased the crowd immensely. The game was not a rough one, when everything is considered. There were a few "love taps" administered, but this occure in the best regulated families.

The Grillers are a speedy septette and are not to be sneezed at. The team is composed of a speedy aggregation of hockeyists and they displayed excellent form. Every man knows the game, and the team has been excellently coached. However, they were beaten by a superior aggregation last night.

A LINDSAY VIEW OF THE TANKARD GAMES

One of the Most Sensational Curling Games Ever Played in Peterborough, Says the Warder in Reviewing the Match.

LITTLE'S GOOD WORK

In the evening Lindsay and Peterborough curled the final game and it was one of the most sensational games ever curled on Peterborough ice. For many years these two clubs have met in the finals for the district honours, but none were more exciting than last night's game. Peterborough presented their two crack district cup skips, Harry Foote and Jack Fitzgerald, and they are both good curlers. It was a hard-fought victory, Lindsay winning by four shots. Skip Flavelle drew Jack Fitzgerald and for the first ten ends things were easy for Flavelle, and his rink, who were six up, scoring four threes and a one, the score being 13-7. That "13" certainly was a hoodoo, for Skip Flavelle never touched the chalk for the next six ends, the score being a tie, and to make matters worse Fitzgerald counted a big six on the sixteenth end, and cinched the game, the final score being 22-15. While all this sensational curling was going on, Skip Little was administering to Harry Foote and his crew the worst defeat in their curling career, allowing the crack Peterborough skip to score only 9 shots in 18 ends, including three on the last end. Skip Little and his men curled the game of their lives, being nine up on the fifth end and at one stage were 14 shots to the good. At no time in the game did Peterborough appear to have a chance to win, except on the last end, when they counted three, the final score being 35-31.

The ice was in perfect condition,

WANDERERS WON FROM CANADIENS

Johnston's Rush Four Minutes Before the End Settled the Matter

MONTREAL, JAN. 18.—Wanderers defeated Canadiens by 5 to 4 tonight after a most vigorous and closely contested game. Three minutes from the end the score stood four all, when Johnson, the Wanderers' coverpoint, scored the winning point, after a brilliant piece of individual play. The Canadiens had a margin of two goals at the end of the first period. The Wanderers came back in the second twenty minutes and made the count three all. Inside a minute after starting the final period Russell put the Wanderers ahead. The Canadiens were still going strong and playing a forcing game, managed to equalize. Then the teams fought desperately for the supremacy and it looked at one time as if victory would rest with the Canadiens until Johnson won the match for the Stanley Cup holders. The Canadiens were most certainly handicapped by the loss of two players for fouls during the last two minutes' play. Otherwise it is quite possible they would have put on another point and again brought the scores level. The lineup:

Referee, Bob Meldrum; assistant, Dr. Geo. Cameron.

Kingston's Big Score

Champions Beat Belleville 24 Goals to 2 Last Night

KINGSTON, JAN. 18.—The Frontenacs, junior Canadian hockey champions, made a light lunch of the Belleville juniors here to-night in their O.H.A. scheduled game. At Belleville on New eYar's night the locals defeated Belleville by 9 to 0. To-night the "Speed Boys" developed a great scoring streak, and tallied 24 goals to Belleville's 2. About 1,200 spectators were on hand, and saw some spectacular stick work and speedy combination on the part of the Frontenacs.

Belleville played a hard, steady game and are a good bunch of boys, who will be heard from next year. Marchand, in goal, Davidson at point and McCammon at cover, worked like a well-drilled corps. On the forward line Hunt, Brouse, Millan and Boyer played like veterans. The teams:

Referee, George Van Horne, Kingston.

Belleville Outlook Is Gloomy

BELLEVILLE, JAN. 18.—Buck Irving's professional hockeyists will not play any more hockey this season. They went to Trenton last night and played a tie game, after which they left for the west, where they will be scattered among other teams. Picton and Port Hope may retain their teams. Local O. H. A. teams are not likely to play any more this year.

Two of the Intermediates' best men have been put out of business by injuries received in matches, and the juniors will probably be out of the running in to-night's match in Kingston. A movement is on foot to have Trenton's professional team transferred to this city.

SOME HOCKEY HAPPENINGS

The Grillers could hardly realise that their team were beaten.

With two Midgets off the Griller supporters were heard to say, "Two short, get busy Heffernan."

Sproule will stand for no roughness; 31 minutes were given the players for minor offences.

The lights grew dim shortly after the game started, but brightened up again shortly.

And Lindsay won from Peterborough curlers by four shots, at the latter town while the Grillers were losing.

The next game is with Cobourg at the lake shore town. Watch the result.—Lindsay Warder.

Rushes were made by both teams in a vain attempt to change the score on the tally card, but all in vain. The remaining minute saw some very exciting hockey, the Midgets on the defence, and six Peterboroughs boring in in a desperate struggle for victory, as all thought of how the people at home would take the news of a defeat by their pets and in Lindsay, too.—Lindsay Warder.

The games in the Bank League are being characterized by their closeness, and yesterday's match between the Montreal team and the Royal Commerce amalgamation was no exception to the rule. When it was all over the combination team were in front two goals to nil. Neither team had scored at half-time, and the play was remarkably even and a little strenuous. In the second half the Royal-Commerce team had the better of the argument. After repeated attempts they batted one through Sawers' legs in a scrimmage, and followed this success up by a combination rush from the face-off that netted them another goal, and put the game on ice.

Charlie Curtis refereed the game satisfactorily.

The Prudential Insurance Company hereby challenge the Pill-Pounders' hockey team to an exhibition match to be played at Brock Street rink some night next week, Graeco-Roman or Marquis of Queensbury rules to predominate—A. R. Graham, Sec. P. H. A. This will be the Prudential's first appearance on the ice this season, and, as every one knows, they are a bunch of live wires any way, why the Pill-Pounders had better beware

The Royal-Commerce and the Montreal teams will meet again in the Bank League game on Saturday afternoon at Brock street rink. There will be excitement all the way. The Royal-Commerce team trimmed the Montrealers 2 to 0 in the best game of the series so far, yesterday, but the losers say there will be a different story on Saturday.

There will be a full practice of the junior and intermediate O. H. A. teams to-night at Brock street rink and all players of both teams are expected to be on hand as in view of the important games coming, it is highly essential that both teams shall be working smoothly and in the best of condition.

CURLING

The scores at the Charlotte street curling rink last night are as follows in the regular scheduled series:

F. Brownscombe	E. N. McWilliams
L. Dobbin	W. H. Collier
R. Best	E. J. Reid
T. F. Matthews	W. G. Ferguson
Skip 8	Skip 11
Dr. Caldwell	J. D. Craig
A. W. Webb	D. Minicolo
R. Cameron	D. Eason
Dr. Grier	A. H. Grout
Skip 9	Skip 12

MORE WARRANTS COMING.

Further Charges Are Expected In the Farmers' Bank Case.

Toronto, Jan. 19.—For the first time in days there were no public developments in the Farmers' Bank case yesterday. This does not mean that there was nothing doing for all day long the bank offices was busy with the preparation of facts which will to-day be formulated into further charges in connection with the dissipation of the funds of the bank. Whether these informations which are to be laid will be followed by warrants or summonses is not known, but it is understood that at least one man prominent in the city's business affairs will be charged with implication in the crash.

For days it has been known that the former general manager, W. D. Travers, has stood ready to make a full and exhaustive disclosure of the doings of himself and co-conspirators since the bank's beginning and last night it became known that he had already made many statements involving W. J. Lindsay and others.

Travers declares that many of the subscriptions to stock which were obtained by Lindsay, were secured by a direct fraud. He says that one of the methods of doing this was to secure signatures to a paper which purported to be merely a petition for the formation of a bank, but which was folded in such a way that the unwitting signer bound himself to take quantities of the stock of the bank. Travers declares that in his desk at the bank's office are many complaints from those who were thus fooled and that some were bluffed into carrying out the contract to purchase shares so fraudulently secured while others who were prepared to make a finish fight of it were allowed to withdraw.

Want All Night Cars.

Winnipeg, Jan. 19.—The City Council will proceed to pass a bylaw requiring the Winnipeg Electric Railway Co. to operate an all-night service and a full service on Sundays. It is also proposed to build a tunnel route across the town to relieve the congestion of traffic on central city lines.

Caught a Heavy Cold.

It Left Him with a Hacking Cough.

Mr. J. H. Richards, 1852 Second Ave. East, Vancouver, B.C., writes:—"Allow me to write a few lines in praise of your Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. Last fall I contracted a heavy cold which left me with a hacking cough, and every time I would get a little more cold this hacking cough would become a lung splitting one. It kept on getting worse and I kept on spending money buying different cough remedies until a friend asked me if I had ever tried Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. I told him I was willing to try anything I thought would cure, and on the same day bought two bottles. Before half the first one was used my cough began to get much easier, and by the time I had used a bottle and a half my cough was gone. I am keeping the other half bottle in case it should come again but I am quite sure I have a positive cure. Let me recommend Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup to all who suffer from a cough or throat irritation of any kind."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark, price 25 cents.

A SOCIAL EVENING

No. 5 Company of the 57th Regiment held a social evening in the Armories last night, when the plans for the coming drill season were discussed. After spending some time bowling and in the shooting gallery the men and officers adjourned to the Company's quarters and spent the remainder of the evening in a social way. After refreshments had been served speeches were made by the Company's officers, Capt. Langford and Lieut. J. E. Hodgson, Col. Sergt. Dummitt, Corp. Sharpe and others. A number of musical selections were given and a couple of songs contributed by Quarter Master Sergt. Edwards, which were much appreciated. The evening having proved so enjoyable it was decided the Company should meet on the third Wednesday in each month. The evening was wound up by the singing of "God Save The King." There is still room for a few more recruits in No. 5 Company.

Twenty-Six Carnegie Heroes.

Pittsburg, Jan. 19.—Twenty-six awards in recognition of acts of heroism were made yesterday by the Carnegie hero fund commission, 16 bronze and 10 silver medals, besides cash awards being authorized. Nineteen of the awards were made in rescues or attempted rescues from drowning, three from fire, two from suffocation in wells, and one each from trains and shooting. In nine instances the heroes lost their lives, and the award is made to a member of the family.

One of the recipients of a silver medal is New York's street cleaning commissioner, W. H. Edwards, who figured in the incidents in connection with the shooting of W. J. Gaynor on the deck of the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse on Aug. 9 last.

Wanted In New York.

Montreal, Jan. 19.—At the request of William Horwitz and furriers of New York, William Soren was arrested here Tuesday night by Detective Le Huquet, charged with obtaining, under false pretenses, goods valued at about $20,000.

The Superior Court has been appealed to for a writ of seizure against Soren, naming the Royal Bank and the Montreal Auction Store as Tiers-Saisie. The contention is that under the assumed names of William McKeen and William Goldberg, the accused deposited moneys in the bank, and consigned some of the goods obtained by him fraudulently.

Praised By Jews.

New York, Jan. 19.—The delegates to the 22nd council of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, in session here, voted unanimously yesterday afternoon to hold the next conference at Cincinnati in 1913.

At the dinner last night the delegates listened to addresses by Theodore Roosevelt, Mayor Gaynor, Oscar Straus, Dr. David Phillipson of Cincinnati and Jacob H. Schiff, who also acted as toastmaster. Governor Dix sent a telegram of greeting.

Col. Roosevelt, as the guest of honor, was praised by the toastmaster as "one who more than any other American, living or dead, has taught the world the lesson that, equally with any other citizen of this country, the Jew is entitled to the square deal."

Evidence In Schenk Case Unfit For Women and Children.

Wheeling, W.Va., Jan. 19.—All women and children will be barred hereafter from the trial of Mrs. Laura Farnsworth Schenk. This was announced by Judge Jordan in court yesterday after a great deal of testimony unfit to print had been given in examination by medical witnesses.

Among those excluded from the court room by order of Judge Jordan was a fifteen-year-old girl, who had stood before the court room door nearly an hour waiting admission before court convened. Three boys were also banished from the room despite their protests that they were old enough to attend.

There was an imposing line-up of medical and scientific men upon the prosecution's side of the counsel tables when the trial was resumed, six doctors and chemical experts being seated beside Prosecuting Attorney Handlan.

Mrs. Schenk showed few traces of worry over blows of the day before against the defence when she hurried into the room. She engaged in a ten-minute conference with her attorneys and seemed cheerful over the day's outlook.

Dr. L. E. Burns, an expert diagnostician, who answered a 1,500 word hypothetical question on Tuesday by declaring under oath that Schenk had been poisoned, was the first witness called to the stand.

His cross examination was immediately commenced by counsel for Mrs. Schenk, and the testimony adduced was mostly of a technical nature.

"In your opinion was the blue line on Schenk's gums caused by lead poison in the system?" Dr. Ackermann was asked.

"Yes."

"Why did you instruct Mr. Schenk to take meals only at the hospital and none from his home?"

"I reasoned that lead poison could only come from his home."

Local Option Deputation.

Toronto, Jan. 19.—A local option deputation waited upon Hon. W. J. Hanna yesterday afternoon with requests for more rigid enforcement clauses in the law.

Among those present were: Rev. G. A. Woodside, Rev. W. J. Cadman, R. D. Little, Wm. Leggett and T. Jamieson of Owen Sound; Rev. J. McKenzie and N. B. Allan, Shelburne; Rev. Henry Harper, Orangeville; Rev. J. Buchanan, North Dundalk.

The deputation from Owen Sound asked that the lessee be held responsible for the illegal sale of liquor on his premises. It was stated that an elaborate system of subletting had been evolved there.

Hon. Mr. Hanna said that if the deputation could submit a more effective clause than the present one the Government would adopt it.

Another request was that the right of search be extended to the person of the bartender.

Would the deputation favor going to the extent of the Manitoba Act and endorse unlimited search? asked the Provincial Secretary. The question was not answered.

The deputation asked that all persons providing accommodation for travelers in local option municipalities should be licensed.

Hon. Mr. Hanna pointed out that this might be a hardship, as some residents might be willing to receive acquaintances but not strangers, as they would be compelled to if licensed.

An increased in the penalties was also requested.

Redmund Is President.

Dublin, Jan. 19.—John E. Redmond, who was yesterday unanimously re-elected president of the United Irish League; T. P. O'Connor, Joseph Devlin and Daniel Boyle, the Irish members of Parliament who visited the United States and Canada last October for the purpose of arousing interest in the cause of home rule, were the guests of honor last evening at a dinner at the Mansion House, arranged as a compliment for the success of their mission across the sea.

During the course of his speech Mr. Redmond declared that the veto power of the House of Lords would be abolished before the coronation, without the creation of the new peers. He said that so long as the Liberals abided by their pledges on the veto and home rule questions, the Irish party would support them, without regard to any minor issues, but, he added, the smallest deviation would mean instant change in the party's attitude. He did not object to the home rule bill being so drafted as to fit in with a larger plan.

East Against West.

Montreal, Jan. 19.—At its closing meeting here yesterday afternoon the retiring council of the Montreal Board of Trade instructed its transportation officers to appear before the Railway Commission and oppose the application of the Vancouver Board of Trade for a reduction in the rate charged by the C.P.R. from British Columbia coast points to points east of the Rockies in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, so as to place them on an equality with the rates charged to the same points from Montreal, Toronto and eastern points, from which the actual rail haul is longer.

The board bases its opposition on the ground that it is unfair to expect the railway to haul freight across the Rockies for the same money as it receives for the haul across the level prairies.

Hudson Bay Railway Offers to Run.

Ottawa, Jan. 19.—A telegram was received Tuesday by Hon. G. P. Graham, Minister of Railways and Canals, from Charles M. Hays, president of the G.T.R., containing an offer to negotiate with the Government respecting the Hudson Bay Railway. While no terms were mentioned, it is surmised that the Grand Trunk Pacific would desire a lease similar to the one under which it will operate the National Transcontinental.

A similar offer, it is said, has already been received from the C.N.R., and it is hoped that these terms may be received from one of the other companies. The present proposition contemplates the construction of a line by the G.T.R. from Saskatoon to the Pas Mission.

NORTH MONAGHAN HOME COMPLETELY DESTROYED BY FIRE THIS MORNING

Overheated Stove Pipes Resulted in a Serious Conflagration Which Burned House to Ground---Mr. Sexsmith is a Heavy Loser---No Chance to Check the Flames.

THE DAMAGE WILL BE ABOUT $1,500

A very disastrous fire broke out in the residence of Mr. Geo. Sexsmith, lot 12, con. 12, North Monaghan, about 10.30 this morning. The building was completely destroyed; also the furniture in the upstairs rooms. The total damage will be in the neighbourhood of $1,500.00. Owing to the heroic efforts of Mr. James Besterd and his son, the furniture in the downstairs rooms was saved, thereby making the amount of damage considerably less than it otherwise would have been. The house it situated just outside the city limits, so that the Fire Brigade could not be called into action.

The fire is supposed to have been caused by overheated stove-pipes. It appears that Mrs. Sexsmith went across the road to one of her neighbours, leaving on a considerable fire in the cook stove, and when she returned, found the room in flames. She called for help, but when this arrived it was too late to save the house, and if it had not been for the efforts of Mr. Besterd, it is doubtful if anything would have been saved.

Mr. Geo. Sexsmith is a teamster at the C.G.E., and was at his work when the fire occurred. The house was a beautiful frame one.

DEPUTATION WAITED UPON THE PREMIER COUNTY REPRESENTED

OTTAWA, JAN. 19.—Mr. Bruce Johnson of Peterborough who accompanied a farmers' deputation to Ottawa, to interview the Premier to-day presented a petition on behalf of the farmers of Monaghan Township. HUGE SCHOOL SCANDAL IMMINENT IN STATES

Special Wire to The Examiner.

CHICAGO, ILL., JAN. 20.—That the American continent would be shocked from end to end by huge school scandal involving thousands of boys and girls unless corrective methods were taken immediately, was the startling statement of Fred D. Smith, a prominent social work organizer before a gathering of professional and business men. Fifty thousand dollars were subscribed towards financing an immediate corrective campaign in the United States and Canada.

WISHART TO RETURN IF CROWN WILL ACCEPT BAIL

NEW YORK CITY, JAN. 20. — At noon to-day your representative bumped into two well known Toronto lawyers, John Godfrey, K.C., and Alderman T. N. Phelan, of the Robinette firm, going into the office of George Wishart, the broker wanted in the Farmers' Bank case. They had a long conference with Wishart, but declined to tell anything. 'Tis thought they represent Dr. Beattie Nesbitt. After the conference Godfrey said Wishart would return to Canada if the crown agreed to accept his own bail.

A PROSPEROUS YEAR IN ST. PAUL'S SUNDAY SCHOOL

Annual Meeting of the Teachers and Officers Was Held Last Night—Reports Were Encouraging.

OFFICERS ELECTED

The annual meeting of the teachers and officers of St. Paul's Sunday School was held last evening at the home of the Superintendent, Mr. Madill. There was a large attendance of the teachers and officers, and the reports for the year were of a most encouraging character. There would indicate that the work done in the Sabbath School of St. Paul's is of a high order. There is a total enrolment of 469, and the average attendance for the year was 336. The Adult Bible Class has an enrolment of 150; Young Men's Class, 20; Intermediate Department, 153; Kindergarten, 52; Primary, 60; Cradle roll, 50. There are 28 teachers and 5 officers. Thirty-eight members of the School united with the church by profession of faith during the year. The Bible Class contributed $250 towards the support of a missionary in the West. Most of the money raised by the School goes for missionary purposes. The sum of $535 was contributed for this object throughout the year.

The officers elected for the present year were:

Superintendent — Mr. Wm. Madill.
Asst.-Supt.—Sandford Hall
Sec.-Treas.—H. O. Fisk.
Librarians—J. H. Connal, H. Carey.

At the close of the business meeting, the pastor spoke in appreciation of the very valuable service which has been rendered to the kingdom of God by the Superintendent and his staff of efficient teachers. He stated that never in his experience has it been his privilege to have associated with him so fine a body of teachers, and so well qualified for their task, as is to be found in St. Paul's church. He thanked them for their faithfulness to the work, and the sacrifices that they are making and expressed the hope that the coming year may be one of great fruitfulness.

Did you ever notice the smart appearance some glasses give the wearer. That look of intelligence and dignity. A lady recently remarked "I believe I would know the Optical Institute fit of glasses anywhere because they seem so becoming and suitable to the features.

Whose Optical Parlors are with the Nugent Drug Co., 388 George St., has from the first day of his opening up in the Optical Business in this city (nearly 7 years ago) recognized and adhered to the principles that every pair of eyes in need of glasses is entitled to specialized optical skill and care. To do this in a perfectly satisfactory manner it is absolutely necessary to give the professional side of the problem concentrated care and study. With this fact in mind we have given the mercantile side secondary consideration, and have devoted our entire time, thought and energy, to scientific eye examination and the making of quality glasses. Our equipment and service are perfect in every detail, so as to enable us to carefully and accurately determine whether glasses are needed or not, and we rightfully claim that none are superior. In cases where medical treatment is indicated, we always refer the case to the family physician.

A DIVORCE COURT.

Bobby Burns said that "women will talk of what runs in their head." Our senators seem to be with the sex in this respect. The irreverent suggest that the senators think a good deal about divorce, that, as a matter of fact, it "runs in their heads." At any rate they talked about divorce on Tuesday afternoon. The discussion arose over a motion for returns respecting divorce. Senator Power and Senator Cloran deprecated the establishment of a proposed divorce court, claiming that the Senate was the proper body to deal dispassionately with applications for divorce, and the irreverent again assert that the senators are not any too disingenuous in this attitude. The scoffers say that the drudgery of sifting the crude legislation of the Commoners, bores them, and that they welcome the ripple of interest excited by the hearings of the wrongs of divorce suitors, especially if such details wander in the frisky regions of the seamy side of matrimony. Seriously speaking, there does not seem to be much need or justification of a divorce court. Marriage, permanent and indissoluble, as to its character—"till death do us part"—was divinely designed as the cohesive force of human society, the foundation of the home, the only real element of society that counts. As Senator Cloran, who opposed the divorce court idea, said:

"No question more affected the welfare of a nation than this question of the separation of man and wife, the breaking up of the home, and the making of children orphans before their time."

And he was not far wrong when he added that the more difficult divorces were made the better, as the Industrial Disputes Act makes strikes and lockouts difficult—its chief element of usefulness, as providing for the influence of cooler counsels. The greater facilities provided for breaking the matrimonial agreement, the worse in numerical result, as well as in moral and social degeneration. We must safeguard the sanctity and inviolability of the marriage bond. The easier we make divorce, the wider we open the door to the development of loose moral ideals, the first step to a state of moral anarchy. Whatever else we neglect, we must keep the fountain head clean.

GOING A LITTLE TOO FAR.

Under the heading, loudly displayed, "Rev. Father McColl says 'No Compromise'," a local paper yesterday printed the following:

"That the world-wide disturbance in religious circles is having its effect on Peterborough is made plain from the tenor of a reply of which The Times has heard, made by the Rev. Father McColl to the Rev. Canon Davidson, of St. John's. It appears that a few days ago, the Canon invited the Ministerial Association of this city to dine with him. He had also sent a courteous and well-meant note of invitation to Father McColl to be his guest, but instead of accepting or declining the invitation to dine in the way customary on such occasions, the worthy priest "came back at him" in a letter that left no doubt of what he meant in the minds of those present. Amongst other things the Rev. Father McColl said that "There can be no compromise between the men in the Church and those outside of it. The warfare between the two will be one also in which kid gloves will play no part."

This attitude of attack was considered to show what we "may expect." The attack on Modernism is evidently extending to Peterborough."

This incendiary appeal to religious prejudices is declared by those immediately concerned to be utterly without foundation in fact or inference, the only element of fact it contains being that letters passed between the two gentlemen, with no more justification for the malicious inferences drawn than the mere fact of the possession of a gun would justify a charge of murder that was not committed with it. Rev. Mr. Davidson says he extended a courteous invitation to Rev. Father McCall to dine with him and the Ministerial Association, and received a courteous and kindly reply. The latter says that he received the invitation and sent a reply couched in the most courteous and friendly terms he knew how to employ; that the letter, which, so far as he is concerned, he is willing to have published, contained not the slightest justification for the article printed above; and, having furnished a copy of his letter it appears on the page of this issue.

The matter is, in itself, so self-apparently malicious and so evident of the motives behind it, that it deserves scant attention; but it is to be deplored that we have in the community persons capable of using such unworthy and, in fact, iniquitous and unscrupulous means to rouse strife in the community and excite religious prejudices, to set neighbour against neighbour and destroy the harmony of citizenship that it is the common desire to maintain in the interests of business and of exchange of the amenities of civilized life. And for what end? To serve some petty spirit of revenge, to promote some personal advantage that cannot be gained by merit, or the possession of the qualities of good and useful citizenship. To the sophisticated there is no need to guess twice as to the direct, or indirect, author or authors of the slanderous appeal to prejudice and passion. It is but the outcome of disappointed and discredited political ambition, of petty spite, and only a continuation of a similar course systematically and persistently pursued for some time. But this last attempt has been too bold and tends to precipitate a reaction that must inevitably come from a crusade impudently conducted in the name of Protestantism, with no more care nor thought of Protestantism than for Buddhism—a crusade that suggests a paraphrase of the dying words of Madame Roland—"O, Protestantism, what crimes are committed in thy name!"

ANOTHER BRITISH REFORM.

(London Advertiser.)

The next instalment of the British Government's social reform programme will be a scheme of insurance against sickness and invalidity from accident. It will be launched during the coming session. The Chancellor of the Exchequer has framed it with a view to making use of the voluntary organizations for self-help which already exist. These are known as friendly societies; they have a membership of 8,178,116, and possess funds amounting to £46,388,230. They have done a great work, but they do not reach the whole working population. In self-defence they do not admit weaklings. The Government scheme aims at compulsory insurance for sickness and invalidity for every worker in the country whose income is below $800 a year. The minimum amount payable to each person during sickness or disability is to be five shillings (nearly $1.25 a week. This will be the payment guaranteed by the state; but any person may obtain extra insurance by joining one of the many friendly societies. The insurance will begin at 16 years of age an end at 70, when the old age pensions of five shillings weekly begin. The contribution needed to provide a sickness insurance of five shillings a week will be calculated by the Government actuaries, and the cost will be met one half by the workmen, one quarter by the state, and one quarter by the employer.

As the present friendly societies limit their sickness insurance to selected lives, and as the new scheme will accept the risks of all lives, good and bad, there will be a problem for the actuaries, but the state guarantee of the minimum benefit will make any plan work. It is estimated that it will embrace ten million men, women and children in all sorts of occupations. It will not insure lives or provide medical attendance as many fraternal societies do, but it will protect workers against sickness, which often ruins a poor family, or the loss of earning power through accidents which are so frequent in this age of machinery and rapid transit. When it is followed by a scheme of insurance against unemployment, much will have been done to make the lot of the masses happier.

ARCHBISHOP FALLON SPEAKS UPON INTERNATIONAL PEACE

At the Canadian Club banquet in London the guests of honour were Hon. Clifford Sifton, Hon. Mackenzie King and His Grace Archbishop Fallon. The latter was assigned the subject of "International Peace." After an enthusiastic reception, he spoke in part as follows:

"I am an imperialist on principle and by conviction," "As a student of history, I have found that there has been always one dominant nation, whether Assyria, or Babylon, or Rome, or Carthage, or the Empire of Charlemange, or of the Franks, or the Empire of Philip of Spain. For three centuries or more Great Britain has been the dominant power, and I see no nation prepared to take her place. For that reason I am an imperialist. And it is in no restricted, narrow national sense either. There is freedom where the old flag floats, and it is the only nation that, to the fullest degree, knows the meaning of civil and religious liberty.

"Of all the subjects in the world they gave me the worst to respond to-night. I have no reputation as a man of peace. I was born in the only fortified city in Ontario — Kingston. There I spent my boyhood days. And, to tell the truth I always loved the soldier. I love his martial air; I love his stately step, and manly bearing. I could march for days behind the strains of martial music — 'Onward Christian Soldiers' (Laughter). I do not know exactly whether or not 'Onward, Christian Soldiers' holds first place in my affections over 'Garry Owen,' or 'The British Grenadiers.'

"I have not had time to lay the foundations of peace. But I must say that I would feel it very deeply. I would feel a very real sorrow if the time ever came when the soldiers defending our country should become the subject of ridicule or deprecation. The highest type of courage has been developed under the muzzles of the guns of the enemy. Without courage there can be no manliness. The virtues of war are quite as important as the accomplishments of peace. War is always regrettable, but not always wrong. We would, perhaps, like to get along without it. We would just as willingly get along without disease, but we cannot get along without a penal code or the house erected for the short or long confinement of mankind.

When War is Justifiable.

"War entered upon with right intentions, to protect the fatherland, to preserve the cause of its citizens, or waged for the integrity of its boundary lines, is not morally wrong or indefensible. A man who would shirk his duty in war, and fail to respond to the summons under such circumstances, is not the man to be depended upon in time of peace. If the Christian doctrine condemned war, it would be found in the Scriptures of the Lord; but in the New Testament, as in the Old, we find that the seal of God's approval has been set on men who have gone forth, sword in hand, in defence of what is right. It matters not much when we die or where, but it does matter how we die. And where can a man die better than by facing fearful odds in defence than by facing fearful odds in defence of his home, his country and his God? Men have been made more courageous, warfare than by the inactivity that more virtuous, more high-minded by comes from too much ease."

Indebted to Britain.

The world was greatly indebted for its progress to the wealth of Britain, his lordship pointed out. All countries had become prosperous and had had their resources developed by money from the pockets of British investors. At the present time Britain had twenty billions of money invested among the nations of the world—three and a half billions in the United States, two bilions in each of her larger colonies, one and a half billions in Argentine, five hundred million in Brazil, four hundred millions in Mexico, two hundred millions in Chili, one hundred and seventy-five millions in Uruguay, one hundred and fifty millions in Peru, Japan had two hundred and fifty millions, China one hundred and fifty millions, China one hundred and twenty-five millions Russia no hundred and ninety, and Egypt one hundred and fifty millions from Britain. It is absolutely necessary that these investments should be protected by arms and men.

"More misery, more sorrow, more suffering would result by the destruction of British credit than has resulted from any war since Napoleon held the world in the hollow of his hand," declared his lordship. "It is necessary to have the ships and the men, and the arms to protect that credit and preserve it."

Work for Peace.

"The Hague tribunal had done much to lessen war, however. Since 1815, 200 controversies had been arbitrated, and any of them might have resulted in serious wars.

"We should all work for international peace, so long as we keep in the background the arms and the navy that will make arbitration more than a word," declared Bishop Fallon. "The Hague tribunal has done a great work and will continue to do so, as long as we keep the navy up to its full strength. The international waterways commission has done much to smooth out difficulties between the United States and Canada, and great credit must be given the men who form that important body. (Cheers.)

"I still incline to the belief that physical force keeps the fear of the law in men's hearts. You and I go to our homes, and we feel secure. We go to bed and dream of the blessings of peace, and we do so because we know that the majesty of the law clothed in blue serge and brass buttons, and carrying a club, is marching under our windows. That make for peace.

Foundation of Peace.

"You cannot build the edifice of international peace on a structure of economy. You cannot build any temple from the top—it must be built from the foundations upwards. Men must be taught the love of justice, the difference between mine and thine, not to be so ready to take what belongs to him as to give the other man his own to be fair, to be just, to be honest, to respect authority, and to be noble. The child must be taught to respect and revere father and mother; the man must respect and regard the municipality; the citizen must love and revere his nation, and all men must love and respect their country and their God. (Cheers). When each individual man does that, you will have a pillar for the temple of international peace. Educate the children to be truthful, manly, upright, just, honest reverential; educate them, I say, in these things, and war is gone, or it will have lost its power. Educate the boy, I say. Make him a man of peace by teaching him to love the things of the mind, the things of the heart—home, his fellowman, and his God. These are the basis of international peace. Then will come that participation in that peace human, which is like unto the peace divine. Teach you individual to keep the law. Educat him to be law-abiding in his persons life—obeying the laws of God and the nation, and international peace will come. Teach him to reverence and respect every man, woman and child he comes in contact with. Teach him to reverence and respect the rights of men of different nations, and then I say we will enter into an era of peace human which is but part of the peace divine. (Applause.)

ECZEMA NOT A BLOOD DISEASE

Eczema is a disease of the skin and not of the blood. For this reason internal medicines have never been a success in curing eczema. Whatever the cause local application is necessary to heal the sore and restore the skin to a healthful, natural condition. For this reason Dr. Chase's Ointment has a world wide reputation as being without a rival for the cure of Eczema.

Voted For Union.

Cornwall, Jan 20.—The presbytery of Glengarry met in St. John's Church, Cornwall, on Wednesday evening for the purpose of considering the basis of union sent down from the general assembly to the presbyteries. Afterwards the presbytery decided to overture the assembly to send the basis of union down to the sessions and congregations for their consideration.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

WHEN a certain kind of white grapes were served at our breakfast table the other day and some one refused them, another member of the family looked at him in astonishment.

"Why don't you eat them?" he queried. "Why, those are the best kind of grapes there are."

Do you know, I think that remark was typical of a wrong attitude very many of us hold toward other things besides grapes.

What he meant was "I CONSIDER those grapes the best grapes there are," or

"Those are the grapes I LIKE the best."

The mistaken attitude toward life is this — we forget to realize how very much personal equation there is in our judgments and definitions.

We attempt to make our standards the standards of everyone.

We try to foist our "best" and "worst" upon other people as their "best" and "worst," and can't understand it when they refuse to accept our point of view.

A learned English judge recently promulgated his idea of the fourteen commonest mistakes in life. Three of them—I believe I have quoted these before, but I think they are worth innumerable quotings—were:

"To try to measure the enjoyment of others by our own."

"To expect uniformity of opinion in this world."

"To endeavour to mold the opinions of everybody alike."

There are people who say there is no such thing as absolute good and bad. "Goodness" and "badness," they say, are fluctuating quantities depending entirely upon environment, bringing up, habit, point of view, etc. What is bad in one person may be good in another person and what is good in one may be merely natural in another.

I can't quite see it as strongly as that. It seems to me that there are some few things which are always bad and some which are always good. Selfishness and its manifestations, for instance, are always bad.

But I do think that in all definition, in all judgment there is a tremendous personal equation, and that those who attempt to speak or think without reckoning with it are making one of the most foolish of all the fourteen—begging the judge's ardon, seems to me fourteen hundred times fourteen would be nearer the reckoning—common mistakes in life.

When you have learned to say and think and feel "I consider those the best grapes," instead of "These are the best grapes," then you have learned one of the big lessons of life.

"THE UNITY OF HUMANITY"

SCHOLARLY ADDRESS BY REV. DR. SYMONDS

Members of the Peterborough Canadian Club Were Given a Treat Last Night When the Distinguished Anglican Clergyman Addressed Them.

A MAGNIFICENT EFFORT

The theory of a grand union of all the peoples of the world, each contributing something for the welfare and well-being of the others, was the key-note of an eloquent and logical address before the Canadian Club of Peterborough last night at the Hotel National, by Rev. Dr. Symonds of Christ Church, Montreal, and formerly rector of St. Luke's church in this city. The gifted speaker of the evening was given a warm welcome back to Peterborough by a very representative attendance of the Club, and his remarks were followed with an evident interest and appreciation that must have been flattering to Rev. Dr. Symonds. He is a charming speaker, whose remarks bring with them conviction, and he treated his interesting topic in a manner that made it most appealing. The result was one of the most enjoyable addresses that the members of the Canadian Club have had the good fortune of hearing.

The address was preceded by the usual dinner served in splendid style after which Dr. Cameron, the president of the Club, introduced Rev. Dr. Symonds in a neat speech.

The speaker of the evening was given a most enthusiastic reception as he arose to begin his address.

It was, he said, a privilege as well as a pleasure to be present and to address the Peterborough Canadian Club. It was an institution that had not been born into the world as far as Peterborough was concerned when he had left this city, but which had come to be one of the most useful and flourishing organizations of its kind in Canada. He was a member of the Montreal Canadian Club, and it had been a revelation to him to see the number of men, especially young men, who came there from week to week to listen to discussions on many different topics. In this connection he was very pleased to see before him the faces of some of his younger friends, who had been mere boys in his or other congregations, when he was in Peterborough and to find that they were taking an interest in the discussion of the subjects of the Canadian Club. It was an organization that was surprising in the opportunities it offered, both to those interested in conveying knowledge and to those who wished to learn knowledge from other people. Before the organization of the Canadian Clubs many distinguished visitors travelled through Canada, and nothing was heard of them with the occasional exception of a newspaper interview and newspaper interviews, he thought with all deference to the press, were sometimes unsatisfactory affairs. The Canadian Club afforded an opportunity of hearing such speakers and in Montreal they had addresses from men of politics, men of science, distinguished men from different countries, sometimes of a practical nature, and others in a theoretical vein, and it had been a surprise and a pleasure to him to observe the extraordinary enthusiasm with which were received the remarks of speakers who approached their subject from a very high point of view.

He proposed to address his hearers upon a theoretical topic, and to come to it from a very high ideal point of view; an ideal of a kind that undoubtedly lay a long way in the future, that was not going to be realized for a very long time to come. It was good not to desert the practical, but in life, which was essentially practical, and where people were guided by the conditions as they appeared before them at the moment, it was well, sometimes, to lay aside the near, practical things for a time. What he was going to speak about was something that might lie centuries away and that could only be brought about by the cumulative efforts of one generation after another. Like the torch race described by Plato, where each contestant had to ride to the one nearest handing him the burning torch to take on to the next, so each generation should be a torch-bearer; different, in a sense, from those described, because each generation should not only receive the torch of progress from the preceding one, but should hand it on with greater heat and light.

Rev. Dr. Symonds remarked that he wished to start with the statement of a truth that was accepted by everybody; that the human race was one. Men were alike, as far as their physical bodies were concerned, although they might be different in their characteristics. They were similar as regards intellect. They were alike in their spiritual aspirations, although there were many different varieties in which they were expressed. There was such a thing as humanity, as the human race. It would seem necessary to concede that the goal and ideal of the human race, if there was such a goal and ideal, should be one of such a nature that the unity of nations should be one in its life and its death. This theory had sometimes been obscured; there had been many peoples and nations from whom it had not emerged.

Among the Greek philosophers a very clever conception was found of the unity of the race, rising above the many difficulties that existed between nation and nation at that time.

The speaker illustrated his point by quoting from an essay by Bishop Lightfoot on the subject of St. Paul and Seneca, pointing out that the latter, while a Roman, was a Greek, in thought. Among the Romans was found the same conception and thought of one race, one people, the oneness of humanity, but in the case of the Roman Empire the thought took a political form. The Romans, with their great army, thought themselves quite capable of conquering the whole world, and making it co-terminous with the Roman Empire. From the Greeks, who were thoughtful and philosophic, were thoughtful and philosophic, theory of the unity of humanity; from the Romans who were practical and political, came the practical and political conception. With the third great people of antiquity, the Hebrew race, there was unity. The Hebrews were united in the belief that they were favoured persons of the Almighty. 'We are God's chosen people," was their faith. This branched out into two distinct lines that were diametrically opposite to each other. Other classes believed that they were God's chosen people, and that all the rest of the people of the world were mere Gentiles, living under the curse of God; the other contended that because they were God's chosen people they were to give a blessing to all the world. The Hebrews, being a religious people, their conception of the unity of humanity was a religious one.

Rev. Dr. Symonds then traced the progress of the unity of the world through the middle ages. It was one of the things for which the Apostle Paul lived. The great genius, St. Augustine, in his book "The City of God," described the human race as a city, a people knit and bound together to accomplish things that would be beneficial to all. There was the magnificent conception and ideal of the union under the form of Empire and Church, the Emperor in charge of secular matters, the Pope in charge of sacred matters. None of these had realized the point so far, but each of them had made its contribution.

Sometimes the most material things had a tendency to produce highly moral and spiritual ends. The inventions of the nineteenth century were having an effect upon the unity of the world. Before steam and electricity had practically annihilated space and time, if a war broke out in India it was five or six weeks before the British Government heard about it. If a man sent a letter from Edinburgh to London it was four or five days on the road. Now it was possible to sit down at the breakfast the different parts of the world —of things that had happened a few hours before. The ulterior effect of those inventions was to bring each part of the world into contact with every other part. The men of literature, the philosophers, the professors in the Universities should make it their task and duty to show their fellow men how important it was for the future welfare of the world that the relationships existing between the different parts of the world should be good relationships.

Rev. Dr. Symonds pointed out that science, broadly speaking, knew no country. People did not speak of English science or German science, but just of science. There was catholicity in art and in literature, although there was magnificent variety. These things had their effect upon the unity of mankind.

The great movements of to-day were instrumental along the same line. For example the Peace movement knew no country, but had only for its object to keep nations together and to prevent the horror and destruction of warfare. The Missionary movement worked along the same lines. The speaker referred to the great conference at Edinburgh, where four or five thousand people from all parts of the world gathered to discuss missionary problems. Congresses and conventions of all kinds, held in different countries, this year in Vancouver, next year in Berlin, and so on, all tended to keep together the nations and foster the idea of the unity of humanity.

There were, however, certain limitations to the ideal. What had been presented could not be realized in the near future. It might be centuries before anything like the real unity, what Tennyson called the "federation of the world" would be arrived at.

Rev. Dr. Symonds remarked that nothing he had said should be taken as a slur to the patriotic citizens who wished to foster the welfare of their country. There should be no more conflict between the universal idea and the national idea than there should be between national and family ties. The family helped the nation; not hindered it, and he asked his hearers to consider the world as a family of nations, and to strive in the conflict and clash of life to look at the problems from a large and many-sided point of view; to look not only at the immediate consequences, but at the more distant consequences as well.

Rev. Canon Davidson, in moving a vote of thanks to the speaker, remarked that the Club should be indeed grateful to Rev. Dr. Symonds for giving them a chance to get away above the trials and difficulties of life, and view the world from the high places. Dr. Symonds, he pointed out, was the founder in Peterborough of the Fortnightly Club, of which the Canadian Club was the successor, and he could, therefore, be called a member of the Canadian Club.

Mr. T. F. Matthews seconded the motion, which was carried enthusiastically.

Eczema Is Not Fatal

Dr. Chase's Ointment

But its Torture Increases as it Spreads Over the Body Until it Makes Life a Burden. It is Cured by

So many have eczema of one form or another and do not know it. The constant itching annoys them, but they scarcely realize how the diseases is gradually spreading and becoming more aggravated.

Particularly, during cold weather, when exposed to sudden changes and dampness, this ailment becomes more severe, and during the night, when the body is warm, suffering is intense and sleep almost impossible.

There is cure in the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment. This healing, soothing preparation brings almost instant relief from the distressing itching.

In the course of a few days the healing process sets in, and it is only a question of time and persistent application of the ointment until cure is effected.

Mr. Fred W. Clark, Petworth, Addington county, Ont., writes: "My mother had eczema in both legs for a long time, and tried everything for it, but got no relief until a friend advised her to use Dr. Chase's Ointment, which she got.

"She found that Dr. Chase's Ointment gave her great relief, so she got some more and continued this treatment faithfully, until now she is entirely cured of eczema. I don't think anyone could have this disease worse than she did."

Rev. Father McColl's Reply To Rev. Canon Davidson's Letter

The following is a copy, kindly furnished by the writer, of a letter sent by Rev. Father McColl, to Rev. Canon Davidson—a letter which, it can be seen, was subjected to an unjustifiable and therefore, unjust interpretation in an article printed in a morning paper and reproduced on page two of this issue. With the letter is also printed a note from Rev. Canon Davidson in reference to the matter.

Peterborough, Jan. 12th, 1911.

The Very Rev. Canon Davidson,

The Rectory,

Peterborough,

My Dear Canon,—I received your kind invitation to take tea with you this evening. I must say that I appreciate your good will very much indeed, and deeply regret that circumstances will not permit me to take advantage of the pleasure of your hospitality. I have always had a very high opinion of you personally, as I am convinced you do your work ably and conscientiously, and in a manner that can give no offence to any person, however sensitive, who may differ from you in religious belief. I am gratified therefore, to have this opportunity of expressing to you my sentiments of sincere appreciation. It is our desire to live in peace and harmony with our separated brethren, and I have never consciously done anything to disturb such relationship.

I have never been the aggressor, though it is true, I am always ready to defend our church and people against unjust attacks and misrepresentation. That I look upon as a duty. We love our religion and we love our king and country and are loyal to both the one and the other. It is therefore a deadly insult to us, especially in this enlightened age, to have our religious belief misrepresented, or our fidelity to the principles of British liberty impugned. Against all such, who are worth noticing, we are ever ready to use the lawful weapon of self-defence, and when we do so, kid gloves form no part of our accoutrements.

But as regards yourself, dear Canon, we have not the slightest reason to complain. On the contrary, we have every reason to be grateful for the kind consideration we have always received from one, we know to be not only a cultured gentleman, but a man with a kind and generous heart as well.

Thanking you for your remembrance of me when inviting your guests, believe me,

Very sincerely yours,
W. J. McCOLL.

Note. — Rev. Canon Davidson explains that Rev. Father McColl's letter is published with the willing concurrence of Canon Davidson, by whom it was received and interpreted only in the most friendly way, as was natural.

The letter was not received until the day following the ministerial tea and was not shown, it being treated as a private communication.

It would seem conclusive, therefore, that the supposed quotation must have been manufactured by an outsider, perhaps from the nucleus of the "kid gloves" phrase which was quoted, merely as a frank and spicy expression, in a private conversation with a friend.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

The Y. M. C. A. Intermediate Basketball League was brought to a most successful conclusion last night, when the Pirates defeated the Shamrocks in a hard-fought, close-checking contest. By winning last night's game the Pirates have gone through the entire schedule without a defeat, and will now hold the handsome trophy presented by Sandford Hall, for the Intermediate Championship for one year. The Pirates lined up as follows: W. Hastie, Captain. H. Taylor, forwards; F. Barry, centre; N. Taylor and W. White, defence.

In the Junior Basketball League the Ramblers rambled off with the J. I. Allen basketball trophy; the Ramblers going through with only one defeat, and will hold the handsome trophy for one year. This is a very creditable showing, when you consider that there were eight teams in this league, and every team was out after the trophy.

Commencing Saturday morning the Junior Class all round contest will

FEW DOSES PUT BAD KIDNEYS IN ORDER

Most Severe Backache, Bladder and Urinary Misery Vanishes

In all the world there is no man or woman who can afford to neglect the slightest kidney disorder for one single day.

Kidney diseases are the most dangerous, because the first signs are seen in other parts of the body before anything wrong is noticed with the kidneys themselves.

Some of the symptoms, though, cannot be mistaken; for instance, a constant aching or misery in the back, sides or loins, or headaches and dizzy spells, nervous twitchings, disturbed sleep, inflamed or puffy eyelids, heart palpitations, rheumatic pains, weakness, bilious stomach, or a feeling of langour and fatigue. Sick, unhealthy kidneys also cause thick, cloudy, offensive urine, or it is full of sediment, irregular of passage and often uncontrollable or attended by a sensation of scalding.

The time to cure kidney trouble is before it settles into Diabetes, Dropsy, Gravel, or Bright's Disease. The moment you suspect the slightest kidney, bladder or urinary disorder, begin taking Pape's Diuretic as directed, with the knowledge that there is no other medicine, at any price, made anywhere in the world, which will effect so prompt a cure. In just a few days you feel and know that the kidneys, bladder and urinary organs are healthy, clean and normal, and all danger passed.

Your physician, pharmacist, banker or any mercantile agency will vouch for the responsibility of Pape, Thompson & Pape of Cincinnati, Ohio, who prepare Pape's Diuretic—50 cent treatment—sold by every druggist in the world.

POST CARD COLUMN

It is with the greatest surprise to scores of people that the Ministerial Association of Peterborough have invited Prof. Jackson, of Victoria College, Toronto, to give an address on Friday evening in the Y.M.C.A. hall. Now, Prof. Jackson is known far and near as a higher critic and through his public utterances, and as well through a little book, which he has published, discredits the authority of the word of God as well as the authority of Jesus Christ. In one of his latest addresses before the Presbyterian Ministerial Association, as recorded in the 'Globe' of December 21st, 1910, subject, "Demons of the Bible," Prof Jackson summed up a somewhat lengthy treatment of the subject in the following words:

"On the wohle, therefore, the conclusions most consonant with the facts of modern knowledge and of scripture, seems to be these, that the demoniac of the new Testament were really cases of epilepsy, lunacy or other nervous disorder, that the writers of the New Testament in speaking of them, naturally diagnosed their sufferings according to the common conceptions of their time and that Jesus Himself, too, shared this common belief." Well, if I believed this rubbish I would burn my Bible. I would have no more of it. If Jesus Christ my Saviour and Redeemer was a deceiver as Prof. Jackson puts it, we may say, away with the whole thing.

No doubt, the simple address to be given before the members of the Association and their wives, is not the real address for which he was invited, but more of a semi-private nature, and more sensational. Now, if the members of the Ministerial Association were in the dark and did not know their man, there might be some excuse for their action, but there was no need to be in ignorance. Prof. Jackson's addresses have all been reported in the public press and he certainly has not tried to hide his light under a bushel, so that he who runneth may read.

In his public utterances and in his book, "Studies in the Old Testament" his views are set forth discrediting the authority of the five books of Moses, the books of Daniel, Ether and Jonah. It may well be asked, why is he retained as one of the professors in Victoria College. No doubt this is one of the signs of the times, and any thoughtful mind can easily see where we are drifting. Oh, that the sleeping Christians in all the churches could be aroused to see the danger.

IRON MOULDERS' UNION BANQUET ENJOYABLE

Some Eighty or Ninety Guests Were Present and the Evening Was in Every Way a Delightful One.

SOME VISITORS

A gathering of a very informal nature, in which songs, speeches, instrumental numbers and step-dances intermingled, composed the programme, was held in the C.O.F. hall last night. The Iron-Moulders' Union of the city had assembled for a good time and they most decidedly carried out their purpose.

A generous and elaborate spread, to which about eighty or ninety sat down, was served between 9 and 10 o'clock. This concluded, the programme then commenced. Mr. Hugh Robinson presided and called the audience to order. On the platform were representatives of the Trades and Labour Council, the Barbers' Union, Printers' Union, and the Iron Moulders' Association. They were Mr. Fred. Dobbin, Mr. A. Sharpe, and H. Gainey. Mr. J. H. Barnet, of Toronto, travelling business agent of the Iron Moulders' Union, was also present.

Each of the above-mentioned gentlemen made short speeches, advocating patriotism to the unions which they represented and their words met with hearty approval and were loudly applauded.

The following was the programme run off:

Chairman's address—H. Robinson.
Toast—The King.
Song—Harold Lees.
Toast, "Our Guests"—Mr. H. Gainey, A. Sharpe, and Fred Dobbin.
Toast—"The International Union and Ontario Conference Board."
Instrumental—Frank Clarke.
Song—Mr. Perry.
Toast—The Charter Members.
Step Dance—Sam Hoolihan.
Song—Harold Hatcher.
Toast—The Ladies.
Instrumental—Messrs. Hatrick and Perry, violin and piano.
Song—Bro. Stewart.
Toast—The Press.
Song—Bro. Roadhouse.
Song—Bro. Raymond.
Song—Harold Lee.
Mouth-organ solo—Teddy Andrews.
Step dance—George N. Graham.
Song—J. H. Barnet.
Accompanists—Messrs Hatrick and Clarke.

There was not a dull moment during the entire programme. Each number was given with spirit and the applause was very loud at times and most appreciative. Mr. Andrews on the mouth organ is some performer, and he was heartily encored. Mr. F. Clarke, on the banjo, would be hard to beat and gave a good coon song, with banjo accompaniment. He was in constant demand as accompanist for various other selections. The step-dancing of Sam Hoolihan and George Graham raised hilarious applause and these two gentlemen, by their nimble foot-work evoked probably the most delighted encores of the entire evening.

Harold Hatcher's song, "Rosenbaum," was also given in a stirring manner and he was given hearty applause.

Viewing the evening from every standpoint it was easily superior to any of a like nature yet held and to say that those present had their fill of enjoyment is putting it lightly.

Mr. J. H. Barnet's address was quite lengthy. He urged the members of the unions to be loyal, patriotic, and earnest, and his words were convincing and helpful to all.

WON SILVER CUP

Mr. Frank Head, of Peterborough, Very Successful at Lindsay

Mr. Frank Head of Peterborough, was successful in carrying off the silver cup donated by the Lindsay Poultry Association for the owner gaining the most points in the Barred Rock class. Mr. Head's birds made a splendid showing, the result being even more successful than was stated in the Examiner yesterday. Mr. Head's winnings were as follows: First and third, cock; first, second, and third, hen; first, cockerel; and third, pullet; all in the Barred Rock class, and in the Toulouse geese class he secured first for gander, and first and second for goose. There were thirty-two birds in the class of Rocks in which Mr. Head made such a good showing.

CLARKSON LAID UP.

Curator's Illness Prevents Information Being Laid.

Toronto, Jan. 20.—There were no further developments in the Farmers' Bank case here yesterday.

Owing to the absence through illness of G. T. Clarkson, curator, none of the proposed new informations were laid in the Farmers' Bank case yesterday. Mr. Clarkson was reported ill at his home last night and was not at the bank offices all day yesterday. He may not be down till to-morrow, and until he is able to be about again, it is unlikely that there will be any further criminal proceedings taken, unless further evidence arises out of the hearing of the charges against Messrs. Alex. Fraser, A. S. Lown and Wilson, the provisional directors, who appear in the police court to-day to answer a charge of conspiring to secure $10,000 of the bank's funds.

It is reported that Mr. Clarkson has broken down under the heavy strain of his rapid and exhaustive enquiry into the tangled affairs of the bank, together with the heavy responsibility placed upon his shoulders, and he was confined to his bed yesterday.

Dr. Ferguson, one of those to appear to-day, declared yesterday that he will be ready to go on with his case to-day should the crown find itself equally ready. Travers will be used as a crown witness in these cases and has been held at the jail pending use in this and other cases, when he will be sent on to Kingston to serve out his six years' sentence. He has not been interviewed by the crown since the day of his sentence.

It was positively stated yesterday that George Wishart of New York, charged jointly with Dr. Nesbitt with conspiring to steal $300,000 of the bank's funds, had arranged for bail in the event of his giving himself up, and Crown Attorney Corley declared that he would receive bail should he so surrender. "It has always been the custom to admit to bail any man who comes from a distance to surrender himself," said he.

Masten, Starr & Spence have served notice on behalf of W. R. Wood, a noteholder, that motion will be made before Mr. Justice Britton to-day at Osgoode Hall to have an order winding up the Farmers' Bank. Mr. Wood is the holder of the bank's notes to the extent of $1,050, and also holds $100 stock. He alleges that the dealings with the Keeley mines have impaired the bank's capital and asks that the matter be referred to George Kapelle, K.C.

Seized Travers' Yacht.

Kingston, Jan. 20.—The steam pleasure yacht of W. R. Travers, late general manager of the Farmers' Bank, has been placed under seizure here by Sheriff Dawson, acting for the bank, and will be sold by public auction here on Feb. 1.

Queen's Medical to Argue Case.

Kingston, Jan. 20.—In all probability the authorities of Queen's Medical College will pay a visit to Toronto next week, to give the Government their reason for being opposed to the request of the Toronto Medical College that it be allowed to license its graduates and any who have passed since 1904 without taking the examinations prescribed by the Ontario Medical Council.

It is held by the Queen's authorities that this would be unfair treatment, and that the people would not stand for it. While the council exists, and the standards are higher than any medical school in the province, they say, graduates of all colleges should pass the council before being licensed. It is held that the Government cannot give exclusive powers to one college, and if the privilege were given to all, it would not tend to the best qualifications being demanded from medical men who are practicing.

Prof. S. W. Dyde of Queen's University, who has accepted the position of principal of the Theological College at Strathcona, applied for a license to preach at Kingston presbytery today. He was appointed professor of philosophy at Queen's when in his final year of theology at the university.

Plague In Harbin.

Harbin, Manchuria, Jan. 20.—The first serious rioting marking the ravaging spread of the bubonic plague in Manchuria and China broke out here yesterday when persons who attempted to flee from the city were driven back by soldiers. Troops patrolled the streets with orders to shoot down any members of mobs who resisted order to disperse to their homes. The terrified people, stricken with horror and panic, fought with the troops, women taking part in the violence.

Martial law was declared in the suburb of Fudsiadian, where the pestilence has taken its heaviest toll of human life.

Some of the streets of the suburb are clustered with dead bodies. It is a common sight to see men and women topple over in the streets and die in their tracks. The air is laden with the germs of decaying human flesh.

Laborites to See Premier.

Toronto, Jan. 20.—Sir James Whitney will to-morrow receive a deputation representing organized labor in Ontario. The deputation will ask for the abolition of sidesteps on street cars, modern brakes and fenders and the proper heating of cars.

To grant to municipalities the power of at any time taking over and operating public utilities, providing compensation is made.

Better inspection of scaffolding on buildings will be asked for and the appointment of competent inspectors.

Legislation compelling barbers to have certificates from a board of registration and to pass an examination.

Herring Fisheries a Failure.

St. John, N.B., Jan. 20.—The annual meeting of the Charlotte County Weir Owners and Fishermen's Union will be held in St. George, N.B., today and the report of the executive will show a very poor season. The herring fisheries of the Bay of Fundy have been a failure, and conditions among the men dependent on the industry are not such as to cause joy. The president said yesterday that he figured that there were a thousand people directly and indirectly depending on these fisheries.

The Executive of the Debating Club Meets To-night—Other Notes From the Busy "Y" Building.

TRAINING CLASS

There are now a number of magazines in the reading room of the Y.M.C.A. which have never been on the table before. The amateur photographers will be delighted to learn that they can now read the best Photographic Journal published in the Old Country, Amateur Photographer, start, with four teams of ten men each. Every boy should make an effort to be on the job and help his team to score points.

Athletic work will start for the intermediate class next Thursday night.

Members of the Intermediate Class will meet at the Association Monday and will go in a body out to the toboggan slide for the evning returning to the building, where refreshments will be served.

The Scots can now see every week what is happening in the hills and the glens of Scotland in "The Scotsman." Those who are fond of a good joke can read "Punch" and those who are of a literary turn of mind can sit down and enjoy the "British Weekly." Then there is "Pall Mall" and a number of other good ones that will please everybody. Since the reading room has been re-decorated it looks like a new place. Everything is kept sweet and clean and the room is always bright, both night and day. Just a little visit will convince you that you cannot afford to stay away from the Y.M.C.A. reading room.

The executive of the Debating Society will meet in the office of the General Secretary at 7.30 to-night. The executive consists of Messrs. F. E. Ellis, W. O. Taylor, W. A. Logan and W. Shiner. Plans will be drawn up for the work during the balance of the season.

The Teacher Training Class for Male Sunday School Teachers held a good session last night. The lesson was "The Teacher's Qualifications." It is hoped that in the near future there will be something done to meet the demand for a similar class for all the teachers.

A WOMAN MADE HAPPY

"I could scarcely get about the house to attend to my work and felt miserable nearly all the time," writes Mrs. Alex. Buchanan, Island Brook, Que. "After using Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food my system is wonderfully built up. There is no further trouble from dizzy spells and stomach weakness, and with health and strength restored, life has a new pleasure for me."

Dr. Burwash, of Victoria University, will lecture at the Normal school this evening upon the subject of "Books—Their Uses and Abuses." Dr. Burwash is a fluent and interesting speaker and his address will be most enjoyable. The lecture is open to the pulbic and there is no admission charge.

THE MURRAY-MACKEY STOCK CO.

The Murray-Mackey Stock Company gave a splendid presentation of the stirring comedy-drama, "Why He Divorced Her" before a large audience at the Grand last night. The company has certainly lived up to its advance notices and is well worth seeing, being equal if not superior to many higher priced attractions. To-night "Thelma" will be the offering, and a bumper house is assured as many people are anxious to see this famous play. The specialties are alone worth the price of admission, the singing of little Baby Marguerite never failing to produce encore after encore. To-morrow's matinee bill will be "The Exile."

DETECTIVES ON CARPET

Admit Selling Confiscated Liquor in North Rather Than Throw It Away

STARTLING FACTS

Haileybury, Jan. 20.—Pinkerton detectives, employed by Supt. Joseph Rogers of the provincial police, and acting, as they swore upon oath, upon the instruction of Supt. Wilcock of the Toronto office of the detective agency, have been selling whisky in the neighborhood of Haileybury. This oath was pledged in the Police Court here yesterday.

The evidence was drawn out by James Haverson, K.C., acting for the defence, while Supt. Rogers and Supt. Wilcock sat in the courtroom and did not deny the statement.

The above startling facts were brought out in the prosecution of local hotelkeepers for selling liquor in quantities larger than permitted under the act. The Pinkerton men, Otto C. Weller and Charles Tupper, swore, in the case of James J. Doyle, proprietor of the Mattabar Hotel, that when they found Doyle would not sell they laid siege to his bartender, and finally persuaded him to make the sale and violate the law. A conviction was made in this case, and a fine of $20 and costs imposed. A second charge against Doyle for a like offence upon another day was dropped.

The case of Charles Egan of the Vendome Hotel, who was charged with a similar offence, was then heard, and, as in the previous case, the same detectives swore that when Egan refused to violate the law, they went after the bartender, and succeeded in making a purchase from him. The same fine was imposed in this case, and a second charge was dropped.

The case of Otto Krupp of the Maple Leaf Hotel was next taken up, and two charges were sustained where the bartender had sold. Fines were imposed, and the court came to the case of Henry I. Kert of Englehart, upon a like charge. Here the same detectives swore that a sale had been made to them by Philip Kert, at 11 o'clock in the morning. The case was adjourned till to-day, when charges against Mrs. Anna Kennedy of Englehart will also be heard.

Asked by Mr. Haverson if it were true that they had brought whisky with them into this part of the country and sold it to unlicensed persons, the detectives explained that they had not brought any liquor with them, but that the whisky which they had brought from Doyle and the others, something over 20 bottles, purchased at $1.25 per quart, they had sold to a man named Crawford at Kelso, Ont., for $1.75 per quart. They did not say what became of the profits, but swore that their instructions from Supt. Wilcock were that, after they had purchased the whisky from prospective lawbreakers, they might then either sell it or destroy it, as they pleased. Asked why they had chosen to sell it, they explained that they had done so because it was too much trouble to carry it about with them.

A New Armory for Port Arthur.

Port Arthur, Jan. 20.—It is understood that work will be started in the spring on a handsome new armory building, which will be capable of accommodating not only the present rifle corps, but what is even more important at this point, a battery of field artillery.

It is also likely that a cavalry troop will be organized in the spring, and accommodations for this branch of the militia will be taken care of in the new armory, which will cost in the neighborhood of $125,000.

DR. BEATTIE NESBITT WENT TO CHICAGO

Fugitive Ex-President of the Farmers' Bank Reached the Soo on Sunday---Is He on His Way to Mexico---Had Lots of Money and Considerable Excess Baggage.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Jan. 20.—That Dr. Nesbitt was in the Michigan Soo on Sunday and part of Monday is now assured. He registered at the Park Hotel there and during the day conversed with a prominent lawyer of the Canadian side when he had called across the river for consultation.

While at the Park Hotel, Nesbitt sent telegrams to the Chicago Automobile Club, Charles McEachran, Toronto, and K. H. McCasserty, Toronto, saying that he had arrived safely and that his trip was a pleasant one. He left on Monday afternoon, presumably for Chicago.

Arrived in the Soo Sunday morning at 9 o'clock, on a freight train which was stopped so he could alight at Pim street, and catch the ferry for the Michigan side, where he registered at the Park Hotel. On his way over on the ferry, he enquired for Uriah McFadden, a prominent lawyer of the Canadian Soo, and later 'phoned for him from the Park Hotel, Soo, Mich. McFadden, who is a friend of Nesbitt, was in conference with him till four in the afternoon.

The former banker had abundance of money with him, according to the story told by Chief Clerk Will Worth of the hotel, who changed $200 in Canadian currency for him, giving him in exchange American bills. Worth also engaged a berth over the Soo line for the doctor, whose immediate destination was Chicago, although it is believed he is bound for Mexico.

He had considerable excess baggage, which included two coats, one an elegant fur-lined garment, several hats, and a trunk full of clothing and other articles. His wallet fairly bulged with currency, the amount of American bills being but a small part of what he had with him.

"Yes, it is true that I was in consultation with Dr. Beattie Nesbitt of Toronto on Sunday," said Attorney McFadden of the Canadian Soo yesterday. "I received a long distance call from him, stating that he wished to see me, and my visit was a professional one. I cannot inform you as to what transpired, for it would be unprofessional. I remained with him from 11 o'clock Sunday morning until between 3 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon."

Judge Morson's New Record.

Toronto, Jan. 20.—Judge Morson worked for a record in the Division Court yesterday, going through 36 cases in one hour's time. The longest case was that of the Stimson Computing Scale Co., who claimed $75 as the price of a scales they sold to Leake Co. Mr. Leake declared that the Government inspector had condemned the scales as incorrect, and therefore he refused to pay up. The judge agreed with him, but will bring the inspector to court to make sure of everything.

SIR ALAN REPORTS

Fisheries Disputes With the United States Now at an End—An Amicable Settlement

WORKMEN AFFECTED

Ottawa, Jan. 20.—In the House of Commons yesterday Sir Alan Aylesworth announced the result of his recent negotiations with United States authorities which practically constitutes a clearing up of the final outstanding issues with that country over the subject of the North Atlantic fisheries.

The agreement, which is in the form of a minute of the conference at Washington, signed by all parties present, applies only to Canada. Newfoundland could not reach an understanding with the United States, and in the agreement the republic reserves the right to re-open the questions involved, pending a final disposition.

In the place of referring the matter to a subordinate board of the arbitral court, Sir Alan said the different method of "diplomatic negotiations" had been adopted, which was considered by all parties as the most desirable method of getting rid of the differences, and in the event of a further reference being required, independent commissions are suggested.

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King's resolutions concerning the prohibition of the sale of manufacture of opium, cocaine, morphine, and matches made from white phosphorus, were passed.

When the orders of the day were called, Sir Alan Aylesworth rose to give a statement to the House regarding his recent visit to Washington to adjust the final differences in The Hague tribunal.

As a result of the recent conference at Washington, at which a dozen meetings were held, the existing difficulties had been satisfactorily cleared away. In default of this method being successful, it was suggested that a better way of settling the difficulties than that outlined by The Hague tribunal was to constitute two independent boards, one for Canada and one for Newfoundland, on each of which should be a representative of the United States, and a third, who would not be a native of either interested country.

As far as Newfoundland was concerned, it was seen early in the negotiations that no great progress could be made at the present time, and the representatives of the island colony left Washington on Jan. 12. It was agreed, however, that the Canadian Ministers should remain, and continue their negotiations, in the hope of reaching an amicable agreement for Canada alone.

The conference was renewed last Friday and Saturday. Four meetings were held, and an agreement was reached, which could be classified under four heads.

(1) Purse seining; (2) prohibition against Sunday fishing; (3) the system of issuing licenses to fishermen; (4) exercising the right to board United States fishing vessels that were suspected of infractions of the regulations.

Finally, it was agreed to amend the existing regulations in three respects. (1) It should not be necessary for fishermen to take out licenses for traps for cod or herring set 1,000 yards from the shore, or from any other trap set in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. (2) That fishery inspectors should determine the length of the leaders of the net stretching shoreward from the entrance of the trap. (3) It was agreed that the fishery regulations should contain a clause recognizing the right of United States fishermen to secure licenses. On this point, Sir Alan, in reply to a subsequent question, gave it as his opinion that United States fishermen had a right, under the treaty, to demand licenses.

Concluding, Sir Alan said that although the United States representatives were not able to come to a final agreement, reserving the right to open the question again, if necessary, owing to an inability to reach an understanding with Newfoundland, the U.S., will not press its objection to the fishing laws of Canada at the present time.

"If the objections were renewed, Canada would be no worse off then than if the agreement had not been entered into. The probability that such a thing would take place was very remote.

"The attitude of the representatives of the United States throughout was of a most friendly character. I am satisfied that each man honestly desired to reach, if it could be possible, a final settlement of these prolonged difficulties, and on each side there was the desire manifested to put an end to these century-long troubles; to make concessions where concessions were necessary; and to settle by friendly conference matters which otherwise would have to be litigated at great expense."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier informed F. D. Monk that no one had applied to the Government for the position of Canadian commissioner for Canada in France, which became vacant in September last.

Replying to Dr. Daniel, the Minister of Labor said that it was not possible to get exact figures as to the number of employes of match factories in the City of Hull and elsewhere, who have been affected with disease of bone due to phosphorous. The Government had information to the effect that men engaged in the making of matches in Canada had suffered from this cause, however.

HAD KIDNEY TROUBLE.

COULD NOT CROSS THE FLOOR PAIN WAS SO GREAT.

Miss Hazel Hess, Winchester Springs, Ont., writes:—"I was troubled with my kidneys for five years. They were so bad, at times, I could not cross the floor for the pain. The doctor could not do me any good and a friend advised me to use Doan's Kidney Pills. I bought six boxes and now I have been cured for over four years. I will recommend them to every sufferer."

No woman can be strong and healthy unless the kidneys are well. When the kidneys are ill, the whole body is ill, for the poisons which the kidneys ought to filter out of the blood are left in the system. Then how important it must be to see to it that this system of sewerage be not clogged up.

Doan's Kidney Pills are a purely vegetable medicine, realizing quick, permanent relief, without any after ill effects. A medicine that will absolutely cure backache and all forms of kidney and bladder trouble.

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c. per box or 3 for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

If ordering direct specify "Doan's."

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

THE PETERBOROUGH TEAM WERE "PERFECT LADIES"

At Least That Was the Impression They Made Upon the Trenton Critics---The Courier's Comments Upon Last Week's Intermediate O. H. A. Game.

The Trenton Courier says: The first home game of the intermediate series was played here on Friday last between the above clubs, resulting in a most decisive victory for our boys. The game was strenuous but clean, all penalities being for very minor offences. Referee Whitehead kept the game well in hand and gave entire satisfaction. The attendance was good, running up nearly to the 1,000 mark. It seemed as though the puck had only just been faced, when lusty cheers from Trenton throats told the tale that Trenton had scored the first goal. This was followed by another and another in quick succession, scarce three minutes of play elapsing before Trenton had 3 to their credit. Goals came rapidly for Trenton and the first half closed 11 to 1 in favour of Trenton. The second half was almost a repetition of the first, and while Peterborough secured three more well earned goals, Trenton kept adding and adding to their tally till they reached the noble sum of 18. We are well satisfied with such a score, but the holes in the nets bespeak where 3 at least if not 4 more broke through the meshes. The visitors speak highly of their treatment, both on and off the ice, and while we shall always look back and speak with delight by way of comparison of the Lindsay match of last year, this one came very slightly short of it. Peterborough team, like Lindsay, are gentlemen, and it is a pleasure to watch a game conducted in such a gentlemanly and friendly spirit.

LINDSAY CURLERS BEAT PETERBOROUGH EASILY

Three Out of Four Rinks Were Up and the Visitors Were Ahead on the Total by 19 Shots---The Results of the Regular Schedule Games in the Evening.

The Lindsay surgers, not satisfied with beating Peterborough in the Tankard finals in this group, sent down four rinks for a friendly game yesterday, and administered another trimming to the Peterborough Club winning three out of the four games, tying the fourth, and ending nineteen shots to the good. FRED DOHERTY SIGNED BY RENFREW TEAM

Former Norwood City League Player Who Has Been With the Galt Pros for Three Seasons, Gets a Berth in the Big League---Is Very Popular in Galt.

GALT, JAN. 18.—Fred Doherty, the star left wing player of the local professional hockey team, plays his last game in a Galt uniform this evening. Early in the week Fred received a handsome offer from Mr. Barnett, of Renfrew, wanting "Doc" to play for the millionaire team and the offer was such a fine one that he accepted it and leaves in the morning for the Creamery Town.

"Doc" has worn a Galt uniform for three years. His home is in Norwood and he broke into the professional game at Guelph, but the team only lasted a month and he came here, and has played in every professional game since. "Doc" is one of the fastest and cleverest left wing players ever seen in Western Ontario, and the year he went to Ottawa with the Stanley Cup challengers he made a name for himself and ever since he has been in demand, but he preferred Galt until the magnificent offer from the Creamery Town came. Galtonians, although sorry to see him go, wish him every success.

The local management got busy as soon as it was learned "Doc" was leaving, and have secured Billy Baird of Ottawa and he will report here tomorrow.

Can Peterborough Beat Trenton Team Here? Question Of The Hour

Can Peterborough intermediates beat Trenton here next Tuesday night? That is the question that is agitating the hockey fans of Peterborough just now. With the players and officers of the Club the answer is in the affirmative. Some of the fans seem skeptical and answer "No." Which is right will not be known until Tuesday night, but once more the fans are reminded that the big score rolled up against Peterborough in Trenton is not to be taken as a criterion of the respective ability of the two teams. The Trenton team will not fight the Petes a light-lunch by any means such as they had last week. The team will be stronger in all points, and it will be one merry battle. The Petes realize that they must win this game to keep in the running and they are practising as never before, to be in the pink of condition for the game. That the record crowd of the season will be present is not a matter of doubt, as the game is the whole subject of conversation in the hockey world.

A HARD LUCK GAME

Rattlesnakes, Scorpions, Tarantulas and Other Things Mix Into Ball Game

"The toughest game of ball I ever lost," remarked Jim Scott, "Death Valley Jim," the White Sox call him, "was up at Bisbee when I was pitching for the Imperial team in the Desert League. It was a hot day and I was going fine until along in the fifth inning they had a couple of men on bases and some one hit a long fly to the centre fielder. He was standing under the ball ready to catch it, when a rattlesnake commenced rattling, and he turned and ran for a club to kill it with. Before he killed the snake three runs had scored and we were two behind. We tied them up in the seventh, and in the eighth, with a man on bases the batter hit a little bounder right at the shortstop. Just as it was going to bound into his hand the ball hit a horned toad and bounded crooked, and they tied up the score. We got another run in the ninth and in their half a man was on second, two strikes on the batter, and it looked as if we had the game won. I pitched a spit ball that cut the plate in half and the batter swung at it. Instead of catching the ball the catcher jumped ten feet and let out a yell, for just as I pitched a big tarantula crawled over his wrist and onto his mit. He was so scared he didn't even chase the ball so I had to do it. One run had counted, evening up the score, and the batter was running wild. I reached the ball and started to pick it up, but didn't—and the run counted and beat us out of the game.

"Pick it up?" he demanded. "I should say not. There was a centipede crawling up one side of it, and a scorpion perched right on top. I let that game go."

SOME HOCKEY HAPPENINGS

The Peterborough intermediate O. H.A. team will practise to-night at Brock street rink. A full attendance of intermediates is expected.

The Pill-pounders have accepted the "defi" hurled at them by the Railroaders and the two teams will meet in mortal combat at Brock street rink to-night between 10 and 11 o'clock. The railway men say that it looks like a clear track to victory, with not a switch turned against them, while on the other hand the druggists have doped out a different ending. The Pill-pounders are naturally strong in the dope anyway. Form players will not attempt to pick a winner, but it is agreed that the game will be the class of the season. Ambulance calls for 11 o'clock.

The Kingston Frontenacs have a rooters' club, which has a peculiar ear-piercing Indian war cry for use whenever their pets score. The other night against Belleville the yell was needed every other minute.

OTTAWA, JAN. 19.—Bruce Ridpath comes out with the bold assertion that the Ontario Hockey Association has within its ranks professionals, and always has had. Bruce says it may not exist in Toronto, but among the outside teams they are there—and lots of them. Before turning professional, Ridpath was a conspicuous figure in the O.H.A., and here is a little incident of how things were conducted in the organization. Bruce tells it himself:

"I was offered one hundred dollars to play with a certain team outside of Toronto, in a senior O. H. A., match. Another person learned of the offer and asked me to accept $150 more to throw the game. Of course, I turned both down, as I do not stoop to that kind of business, and never have."

Ridpath also declares that it was generally known one team outside of Toronto, in the senior O. H. A., was practically made up of professionals, but was overlooked as the series would have been broken up had they been thrown out.

"A NIGHT IN THE COOP"

That Is What the Trenton People Promise the Cobourg Team

Peterborough team complain of the chopping up they got at Cobourg last week in their series game. If Cobourg continue that kind of game, some of them will put in a night in the coop here. We want hockey, not brutality. Our boys have demonstrated they can play hockey as it ought to be played. We hope the Referee next Friday night when Cobourg plays here will be a strict one.—Trenton Courier.

WOMEN FIGHT

Six Round Contest in a Prize Ring Before 600 People

TULSA, OKLA., JAN. 19—A wave of indignation is sweeping the state as a result of a six-round prize fight fought here yesterday between Bess Martin, of Oklahoma and Nellie Bennett, of Chicago. Although both women fought at a fast clip, the referee declared it a draw, a decision that did not satisfy the seven hundred spectators who whooped and applauded during the affray. Many of the spectators were women, who showed a surprising knowledge of pugilistic lingo, shouting to their respective favourites "to put her out" and "hand her a right uppercut."

Although the Oklahoma woman was stronger, her Chicago sister showed superior science, breaking through her opponent's guard and mussing up her complexion. In the first round Bess Martin started off with a rush, but in the second she contented herself with attempting to dodge the blows of her adversary. The third and fourth rounds were about even, but in the fifth and sixth supporters of Nellie Bennett claimed that she had a shade the better of the Oklahoman, by reason of her knowledge of the Marquis of Queensbury's text book.

Rabbits a Pest.

Chatham, Jan. 20.—The Chatham Hunt Club, made up of farmers and others interested, have drawn up a largely signed petition asking the Legislature to amend the rabbit laws, so that rabbits may be shot from Oct. 1 to Feb. 1. The farmers claim that the rabbits are destroying their trees and shrubs, but that under the present laws, they are not allowed to kill them.

Election Riots.

Bregot Breaks Record.

Douai, France, Jan. 20.—Louis Bregot, the French aviator, yesterday broke the world's speed record for a monoplane with passenger. He made a flight of 50 kilometers (31 miles) in 34 minutes and 54 seconds, and one hundred kilometers in one hour, nine minutes and 28 seconds.

Couldn't See For Church.

Montreal, Jan. 20.—At a meeting of the members and board of trustees held Wednesday night, it was decided, on the advice of George Hood, to accept the offer made by the Canadian Pacific Railway for the Calvary Congregational Church property.

The church has been considered as a disadvantage to the locomotive engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway, as it obstructed their view of the tracks and the block signals.

On the other hand, the passing of trains during the time of service, has been very annoying to pastor and congregation alike. The Canadian Pacific Railway's offer for the entire property was $28,000.

Brandon Elevator Burned.

Brandon, Man. Jan. 20.—Fire broke out yesterday morning in the premises of the Maple Leaf Mining Co. The firemen were able to confine the fire to elevator No. 1 and the loss was kept down to $75,000.

Her Face and Body Were Litterly Covered With "BOILS."

Burdock Blood Bitters Cured Them.

Mrs. John H. King, Johnston, N.B. writes:—"Last summer I was very much troubled with boils, and my face and body were literally covered with them. A friend advised me to take Burdock Blood Bitters. I got three bottles, one before I had taken all the first one my boils began to go away. I had just taken a few doses out of the last one when they all disappeared. My husband has also used Burdock Blood Bitters with much benefit."

Boils in themselves are not a dangerous trouble, but still, at the same time, are very painful. They are caused entirely by bad blood, and to get rid of them it is necessary to put the blood in good condition, and for this purpose there is nothing to equal that old and tried remedy, Burdock Blood Bitters.

They Meet Again

Manager W. R. Travers of the Farmers' Bank has pleaded guilty to charges of theft and making false statements. A few weeks ago he stood in the Brockville Police Court pressing similar charges against a young man who had been in charge of a branch there, with the result that his subordinate officer was sent to the penitentiary for three years. Fate has been dealt out in the swiftness with which it has dealt out retribution to the older man. What a meeting there will be between the two at Kingston.

SLEEPLESSNESS

Its Cause and Remedy

Do you know what it is to lie awake nights, fidgety, restless, tossing about, counting 100 backwards or sheep jumping over a fence, all in vain endeavour to lose yourself in slumberland and get the rest which you so much need.

No one, unless they have been troubled with insomnia, can begin to realize its horrors and how wearing it is.

In nine cases out of ten it is simply a case of overworked nerves or derangement of the digestive system. Thousands of such cases are being cured by Vinol. As proof we quote from a letter recently received from Marion, Ind.

"I could not sleep nights, was rundown, nervous, had no appetite and was all discouraged. Vinol made me well after all other remedies had failed. I sleep splendidly, and have gained in strength." Mrs. L. E. Heinlein. (We guarantee this testimonial to be genuine.)

We ask every person who suffers from sleeplessness or who is nervous or run-down to try a bottle of Vinol with the understanding that their money will be returned if it does not help them. Vinol contains no drugs or oil, and agrees with everyone. McDermid and Jury, corner George and Charlotte streets; also Payne's drug store, corner George and Simcoe streets.

Last Of Haliburtons

A cablegram on Tuesday brought the news to Halifax of the death at Nice, France, of Mrs. Wm. Cunard, whose husband was a son of Samuel Cunard, founder of the Cunard Line. Mrs. Cunard was Laura Charlotte Haliburton, daughter of Judge Thomas C. Haliburton who acquired world-wide fame as author of "Sam Slick of Slickville," and other humourous books. By the death of Mrs. Cunard, the last of Judge Haliburton's family have passed away. Lord Haliburton her only remaining brother, having preceded her to the grave by a few months. Mrs. Cunard was a resident of Halifax when her late husband, Wm. Cunard, represented the Halifax and West India Line of steamships.

Judge Haliburton was the first President of the Canadian Land and Emigration Co. and gave his name to the County and Village of Haliburton.

The Canadian Land and Emigration Company still owns several thousand acres of land in the County of Haliburton.

Two bright little girls started to school last August. One preferred the "old reliable" Pitman, (yes, it's an ad., but read on), and the other took the 30-day Shorthand at the Moon College. The latter, Miss Frances Wyndham, of 108 Wells St., has been employed by Eyre & Bond, Solicitors, Room 328, Confederation Life Building, for over two months, and her friend is still studying Pitman. That this same firm have since engaged another of our graduates speaks volumes for the quality of Moon College 30-Day stenographers. Catalogue upon request, Moon College, 282-286 Yonge St., Toronto.

South Monaghan His Resting Place

By D. A. McKenzie, in "The Presbyterian"

A few days ago I stood beside the grave of Mr. Scriven, the author of the beautiful hymn. "What a Friend we have in Jesus." On Mr. T. R. Pengilly's farm, beautifully situated on the north shore of Rice Lake, in the Township of South Monaghan, may be seen the Pengilly burial plot, where Mr. Scriven, at his own request was laid to rest. He died in 1886. He was born in Dublin in 1819, and was educated at Trinity College, where he received the degree of M.A. Subsequently he attended the military college at Addiscombe, England. It is not definitely known when he came to Canada. After spending a short time teaching school in Clinton, Ontario, he became a private tutor to Mr. T. R. Pengilly, in which capacity he acted for three years.

Mr. Pengilly, who kindly gave me this account of Mr. Scriven, is an old man seventy years of age. They were close friends for over 25 years. Mr. Scriven resided for a long time at Port Hope. He spent several thousand dollars in helping the poor and needy. Having spent his fortune for charitable purposes, he worked as a labourer, but always found time and means to assist in every good cause.

It was his custom to visit the sick, the lonely, the sorrowing, and to preach in the streets and at gatherings like fall fairs and horse races.

One incident is worthy of notice. Many years ago a young man attended a horse race where a great crowd had assembled. Mr. Scriven was among the number, not as a sportsman, but as a preacher. Standing upon a box Mr. Scriven delivered a gospel message with such power and earnestness that the young man was led to accept Christ as his Saviour. He united with the church of which I am pastor, he was ordained as an elder, and until his death, which took place recently, was one of the most humble, sincere and faithful Christian men ever I knew.

Mr. Scriven is still remembered by many in South Monaghan as a man of strong faith, genuine piety and his great love for God and man. His greatest joy was in going about doing good, preaching, teaching, sympathising with those in sorrow, and helping the poor and needy. He rests from his labours, but his character remains as a monument of virtue that the storms of time can never destory. He was the author of several unpublished hymns, but he will ever be remembered by that beautiful and inspiring hymn which we all love to sing.

The Clergy Attend Inaugural Meeting

Perhaps no town or city in Canada treats the inauguration of its Municipal Council with a less degree of ceremony than does Peterborough. There is, in fact, no ceremony other than the ordinary routine that is absolutely necessary, and comparatively few citizens ever attend the inaugural meeting. In most other cities and towns throughout the country things in this respect are different, and the Mayor and Council are installed with considerable dignified ceremony. The Town of Orillia, which by the way is one of the most progressive towns in the province, has a most elaborate ceremony in connection with the inauguration of its Mayor and Town Council. The Clergy of the place take a hand in the proceedings and the Council is set out on its year's work with good moral advice and abundant enthusiasm.

Speaking of the inaugural proceedings at Orillia recently, The Times of that town says:—

There was no lack of either dignity or style at the inaugural meeting of the Town Council on Monday evening, and the business was despatched with a methodical celerity that gave a good start at least to the civic administration, 1911. The Council Chamber was very prettily decorated with plants and flowers from the Park greenhouses, tastily arranged under the direction of Mr. John Whitton, while across the Mayor's desk was draped a large flag. The members of the Council wore carnation buttonieres, and when they took their seats they were greeted with applause by the large audience which filled the body of the Council Chamber. Seated with Mayor Frost on the platform was Rev. Canon Greene of St. James', and Rev. D. MacGregor, Pastor of the Presbyterian Church.

Canon Greene was asked to conduct the formal opening exercises, which he did by reading the twenty-third Psalm, and offering prayer, all joining in the Lord's prayer.

Rev. Mr. MacGregor then briefly addressed the Council.

PETERBOROUGH'S ADVERTISEMENT

The Peterborough Hydraulic Lift Lock is about to play a part in the moving picture business throughout the world. Last fall Mr. E. F. Fauste of 216 Brixton Road, Brixton, London, England, paid a visit to Peterborough on behalf of Messrs. W. Butcher & Sons, Ltd., Farrington Ave., London, manufacurers of moving picture films and secured some excellent views of the Peterborough Hydraulic Lift-Lock. The lock was taken while in operation and shows the Lintonia and Water Lily being locked through. There was a number of spectators at the lock that day ,and they play an important part in the moving pictures. Views will be presented showing Lockmaster Gillespie operating the levers in the main tower, and his assistants, Robert Sheridan and Z. Keller, operating the gates. The setting is particularly good and the fact that these moving pictures will be shown all over the Old Country as well as Canada and the United States, will prove to be a splendid advertisement for Peterborough. It is expected that these pictures will be shown in Peterborough some time during February.

Made Associate Member

Mr. J. H. McClellan, Superintendent Trent Canal, has received notice from the Secretary of the Canadian Society of Civil Engineers, that he h as been elected an associate member of that organization. This is certainly an honour conferred upon Mr. McClellan and is in recognition of his splendid work as head of the Trent waterway system. It will be pleasing news to Mr. McClellan's many friends to know that his services in this respect have been recognised by the Canadian Society of Civil Engineers.

Things In General

General Manager Travers of the Farmers Bank started out to put A. B. McGill, of Lindsay, in jail, and having failed, landed there himself.

The electors of Port Hope believe in competition, as shown by the vote on the by-law on Monday, to grant a franchise to the Seymour Electric Light and Power Co. The by-law was carried by a majority of 427, only 19 persons voting against it.

The Ottawa Citizen remarks that as the rate guests are going to Kingston penitentiary it will soon be up to the Whig to publish a society column, devoted to that sanitarium alone—or some Bank Notes.

$60,000 for 100 acres of land in Scarboro Township was the figure received by the Ashbridge estate for the Jonathan Ashbridge farm near the Halfway House on the Kingston road. The price realized represents an average price per acre of $641. The farm is about nine miles from the corner of King and Yonge and the figures are an indication of the advance in value of east end land in the last few years.

Mr. Settford, of South Lake, is offering the E. B. Munn farm for sale, his wife desiring to return to the city, says the Minden Echo. The slogan "Back to the Soil" does not appear to be having much effect in Ontario at least.

The Orillia rink manager has issued a denial of the statement made at Toronto revival meetings that the revival services in Orillia had put his rink out of business, says the Toronto S tar. Most people fail to see the connection between such services and a rink in any event. Skating is surely an innocent amusement enough, and to forbid the sexes to skate together in as stupid as to make them sit on opposite sides of the church.

The City Council of Kingston will ask the Ontario Legislature to change the date of Kingston's municipal elections to the first Monday in February. The Council may recommend that church property be assessed. Kingston exempts $3,800,000.

By the way our friend Sandy Millage went off to Peterborough last Wednesday, and so did Miss Sarah Stewart, third daughter of James Stewart, says a South Verulam correspondent to the Bobcaygeon Independent. While in town they called on Rev. Mr. Coon, who used to be stationed in Bobcaygeon, and they came back Mr. and Mrs. Millage. All the neighbourhood wish them every happiness.

The Rockland House of Bobcaygeon has been purchased by Mr. Jas. H. Thompson. Possession took place Tuesday. Mrs. E. A. Thompson retires from public life to her residence on William street.

The reduction works at Deloro, which are running on Cobalt ores, are turning out three tons of silver weekly, and a quantity of arsenic and cobalt. The silver is shipped directly to London, England.

The people along the mail route between Norwood, South Dummer and Cottesloe in East Peterborough are agitating for the establishment of rural free delivery and in all probability a petition will be prepared shortly to be forwarded to Ottawa, asking that the route be established. The petition will also ask that the mail route be extended to Warsaw, and that a daily delivery be given the people on this route.

"Is Lieut.-Col. Hemming, of Kingston, to be appointed C.S.O. at Montreal?" asked a press representative to-day, of the adjutant-general.

"No," he replied, "Col. Hemming now occupies a higher position than that, and I am sure there is no intention of reducing him."

The above news will be heard here with pleasure, says the Kingston Whig, for Kingston does not wish to lose Col. Hemming, who is decidedly popular both in military and civilian circles.

MARLTON, N.J.—"I feel that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has given me new life. I suffered for ten years with serious female troubles, inflammation, ulceration, indigestion, nervousness, and could not sleep. Doctors gave me up, as they said my troubles were chronic. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotics or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record for the largest number of actual cures of female diseases we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials are on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., from women who have been cured from almost every form of female complaints, inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration. A RUSSIAN MARRIAGE.

The Way the Devils Were Driven Out of Eden.

By WILLIAM ALFRED COREY.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

Maksim Nagaroff and Natasha Shuben were to be married. It was high time, for Maksim, big and broad shouldered, was anxious, and Natasha, buxom and pretty, was fifteen.

Notwithstanding Maksim and Natasha had themselves nothing to say about their marriage they were neither of them averse.

Yes, Maksim and Natasha loved and were going to marry. So far so good. But how were they going to be married?

By the church, of course, spake the elders of the Molokan sect. No license, no newfangled legal frivolities in theirs, please. These things belonged to the heathen, the pork eaters, the unclean.

But Maksim thought otherwise. He wanted the knot tied in the Los Angeles way. In America, it seemed to him, you should get married the Americans do.

Maksim worked in a lumber yard. Ode by one he had seen the young men who worked with him absent themselves temporarily on mysterious errands and be good naturedly rallied by the others on their return. Little by little he had learned the legal steps to marriage—when and where and how to obtain the license and the cost, then to whom to go and what to do and the final cost. And with this knowledge had come the idea, dim and hazy at first, that this was the best way to do. Besides and above all, Rev. Mr. Lowell stood for it—Mr. Lowell, the head of the Good Samaritan Settlement House on Del Mar street, to whom all the foreign quarter looked up and whom Maksim almost worshiped.

Natasha was like minded and for quite similar reasons. She worked in a cannery. She had gone to school a little, and in numberless indirect ways she had reached the conclusion that, while the Molokan marriage was well enough in Russia, it would never do in the United States.

The Saturday night following the marriage negotiations Maksim came home from his work and, as usual, placed his week's wages, twelve good American dollars, in his father's hands.

"Maksim," said the old man, speaking in Russian—"Maksim, my son, it has been arranged between Elder Shuben and myself that you and the fair Natasha are to be married. You are both quite old enough. You are to be married one week from tomorrow. I trust you are happy at the prospect, my son."

"Yes," assented Maksim, "I want to marry Natasha, but"— And he hesitated, his eyes on the floor.

"But what?" demanded old Evan.

"How are we to be married?" tentatively asked Maksim.

"How married? By the elders, of course. Natasha's mother, Katya, is already preparing the feast."

"But," objected Maksim, hesitating, for he well knew the storm he was about to call down upon his head—"but Natasha and I don't want it that way. We want to get married, with a—a paper, by a justice or—or Mr. Lowell, in the American way. It is our wish."

The effect was as he expected. The whole communal family—Evan and Olga, his wife, and the four elder sons and their wives—who had gathered about, were inexpressibly shocked. Old Evan's long gray beard swept his breast in his agitation.

"What!" he thundered. "You will forsake the church for the heathen ways—the heathen whom the Lord promised were to be scattered or become our servants when we entered this our Canaan? You will take up with these unclean pork eaters?" And he railed on amid a general family chorus of lamentations.

In the meantime a similar storm had broken out in the family of the Shubens, a storm that beat about the devoted head of poor Natasha.

And the next day the news spread quickly over the whole of "Eden," as some newspaper wag had facetiously named the Molokan quarter, that the expected marriage was not to take place for the good and sufficient reason that both the prospective bride and groom were possessed of devils. There was busy gossip; there was a ferment of excitement; there were wild rumors.

At bottom the trouble was a contest between two modes of life.

Hour by hour the boy and girl realized more and more the seriousness of the situation. They were both under tremendous pressure of public opinion. How to get married in the American way and not split the Molokan community wide open and work their own ruin was a problem too big for the peasant lovers. They could not elope, as Americans might. They were aliens in an alien land.

Slowly an idea shaped itself in Maksim's mind. He would lay the whole matter before Mr. Lowell, who was infallible and would surely have a solution.

The settlement worker listened patiently to the boy's labored explanation, thinking hard and planning the while.

"Maksim," he said when the young man had finished, "I think I can help you. Get away from your work between 2 and 4 tomorrow afternoon and come to me. Don't let your folks know where you are."

Maksim was promptly on hand at the hour first named, and Mr. Lowell said, "Come with me."

Together they visited "Dan Cupid" Elmer, the marriage license clerk at the courthouse, where Mr. Lowell, by deftly evading certain little technicalities, aided the boy in securing the precious license. Then, cautioning secrecy, he said, "See Natasha as quietly as you can and bring her to the settlement house tomorrow afternoon at 4 o'clock."

Four o'clock the following afternoon promptly brought the lovers, and as promptly the two were made one and happy at the same time. Mr. Lowell handing Maksim the certificate at the close of the simple ceremony, which his wife had witnessed, saying: "Now you are married as well as the president of the United States or John D. Rockefeller. Say nothing to your people about this marriage and let the other marriage proceed. To be married twice won't do any harm, and it will satisfy your relatives, yourselves and the laws of California all at the same time. God bless you!" And Maksim and Natasha went their ways with the reverent feeling that "God" and "Mr. Lowell" were synonymous terms.

That evening there was a crowded meeting of the faithful of both sexes and all ages. Devils were to be exorcised. The air was surcharged with suppressed excitement.

Maksim and Natasha were both in attendance, the boy dutifully occupying a seat on the men's side, and Natasha sitting demurely on her side among the women.

The meeting began with the usual chant, the words of a Bible psalm being intoned in unison by the entire assemblage with long practiced rhythm and accent far more precise than musical. This chant was followed by another, the elders, who sat about a small table in a corner, leading and the rest following, while rough shod feet kept time against the uncarpeted floor.

The air of the place soon grew foul. Not a window or door was open, and the stamping feet raised a suffocating dust, so any nothing of the vocal exclamations of the hot, excited mass. It was evident that if the devils could not be expelled in any other way the air would soon become so rotten that no devil who had any regard for his health would stay.

During the progress of the service thus far many covert glances had been cast at Maksim and Natasha. Anxious watch was kept on them for the first sign that they were being freed from the Satanic spirits within them.

Maksim noted this, and when the meeting was about half over, the benches having been removed and the whole company were standing, he walked to the elders' corner and whispered something in his father's ear.

It must have been an assent to the church marriage, for instantly the old patriarch, his face flushed, his eyes glistening and his whole attitude proclaiming that Maksim had got the better of his devils, threw up his great arms and began a new chant. At the same moment Natasha, taking her cue no doubt from Maksim, whispered a word in her mother's ear, and Katya's triumphant shout could have been heard three blocks away.

Every one in the room caught the electric signal of good news, and the excitement began to boil. The conditions were ripe and the moment had come for a wild debauch of religious frenzy. Devils had been driven out, there was the exhilaration of triumph, and a saturnalia of religious intoxication was about to begin.

The noise became more deafening as the chanting continued. Men embraced each other, springing into the air and gesticulating wildly. The shrill voices of women arose above the pandemonium. Here and there under the stress of excitement overwrought nerves became unstrung, muscles began to "jerk" involuntarily, and the whole room became an insane carousal. Old Mother Shuben collapsed, a young woman "overcome of the spirit" fell prone in a corner, and the limit of strained endurance was reached when a stalwart member, locking arms with a brother behind his back, lifted said brother and threw him bodily over his head, stretching him full length on the floor and nearly breaking his neck.

There was a pause. The incident, which was so nearly an accident, recalled the revelers to their senses, the ghost dance ceased, the doors were opened, and the excitement calmed down. The people, exhausted, but happy, hurried into the open air and wended their way home. The devils had been chased away, Maksim and Natasha were to be married by the elders, and Eden was once more calm.

HIS GREAT IDEA.

The Tin Plated Tomato and the Moral That Goes With It.

A good theory that won't work isn't half as good as a poor one that will.

Twenty years ago a young man just out of college had a great idea. He was going to tin plate tomatoes. There was to be no more troublesome paring and cooking and canning to preserve tomatoes throughout winters. It would be necessary only to drop a nice ripe tomato into his tinning solution and it would come out coated with tin and would keep for twenty years. In fact, there wasn't any reason why it should not keep forever! The young inventor figured it would cost him 50 cents a gallon to make this tinning solution. It surely would sell for $2 a gallon. Every one eats tomatoes—that is, nearly every one. Everybody would eat them if they could always have a nice tin plated tomato lying around. He ought to sell a million gallons a year. That would be a profit of a million and a half dol— Well, no tin plated tomatoes are on the market yet, and the man who invented them is still making only $15 a week.

The moral of this is that whenever you hear of a great idea that is going to reform or uplift the world make sure that it is not of the tin plated tomato brand.—Chicago Tribune.

A Lottery Romance.

A few years ago, as the date for the drawing of the annual Christmas lottery at Madrid was approaching, a poor mechanic of Corunna was awakened three consecutive nights by the number 125,860, apparently spoken in his ear. So impressed was he by the repetition of the incident that he wrote down the number and jocularly said to his wife, "That number will win the first prize in the great lottery." "Then why don't you buy the ticket?" his wife answered jokingly as she looked at the figures. "Why, see, if you add them together they just come to my age. I shall be thirty-one on Christmas day." The ticket, after much trouble, was found (it had been rejected a few minutes earlier by a wealthy citizen of Corunna) and bought, and before many days had passed the mechanic and his wife were made jubilant by the news that the ticket had won the first prize of £200,000.—London Globe.

Had a Distressing, Tickling Sensation in The Throat.

COULD NOT SLEEP AT NIGHT.

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is rich in the lung-healing virtues of the Norway pine tree. It is a pleasant, safe and effectual medicine that may be confidentially relied upon as a specific for Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Hoarseness, Sore Throat, Quinsy, and all Throat and Lung Troubles.

It will stop that tickling in the throat which causes the dry cough that keeps you awake at night.

Mrs. J. A. Smith, Manhville, Ont., writes:—"I had a very bad cough and that distressing tickling sensation in my throat. It was so bad I could not sleep at night and my lungs were so sore I had to give up work.

"Our doctor gave me medicine but it did me no good, so I got a bottle of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, and by the time I had used two bottles I was entirely cured. I am always recommending it to my friends."

Do not be humbugged into buying the so-called Norway Pine Syrups but be sure and insist on "Dr. Wood's." It is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; the price 25c.

The Red Shirt.

The origin of the "red shirt"—worn as a blouse by English women in the sixties, when Garibaldi was a popular idol throughout Great Britain—is sufficiently curious. When the celebrated filibuster was warring in the South American republics he was anxious to obtain a distinctive and, above all, economical uniform for his followers. He learned that a local dry goods store had an immense "job lot" of these garments, worn by the "saladeros," or cattle slaughterers, of the great South American cities. The "bargain sale" appealed eloquently to the leader's purse, and he led his men to victory in the butchers' shirts, which are now the accepted emblem of the "risorgomiento" of United Italy.—London Globe.

Its Paradoxical Aspect.

"Don't you think much thought should be given to the drink business?"

"Yes. Much sober thought."—Baltimore American.

HERE is something probably that you did not know about Chocolates. The most expensive part of them is the chocolate coating itself. The thinner the chocolate coating, the less expense to the makers, and naturally the less enjoyment to you.

Most makers thin the chocolate with some substitute, so that the cream or hard centers will take up only a very thin jacket of chocolate when dipped.

You will find every piece of Neilson's Confectionery has a thick, heavy coating of the richest, most delicious chocolate—in its absolute purity—you ever tasted.

The centers are coated individually and special care is taken to have the chocolate of just the correct proportion to give that delicate, original flavor so quickly recognized by the connoisseur.

You get something worth eating—something different—something you will always remember with pleasure—when you eat Neilson's Chocolates.

"Chocolats des Aristocrates"—"Cherries in Maraschino"—and "Hard Centers" are only three of the different chocolates that Neilson's make.

Men Who Insure

Who Are They?

Are they not the men who consider first their responsibilities to those dependent on them?

Are they not the true men, the men who do not live to themselves alone, the 100 per cent. fine men?

Are they not the men who remember that their beneficiary lives after them, and knowing they have provided, carry their heads higher and their chins in, they step firmer, and because they need not worry, they live longer and better. They realize that Life Insurance is not a duty but a privilege.

Are you a 100% man? The chances are that you have not thought of the advantages to you as well as the others. Can you get insurance? Possibly without your knowledge it is already too late. Seventy Nine Years Young

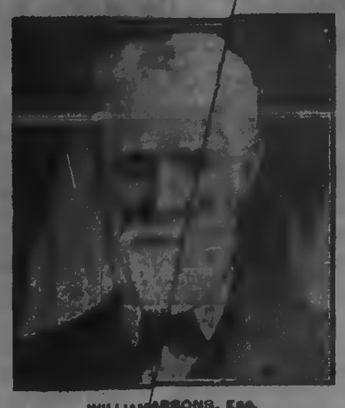
"Fruit-a-tives" Keeps Health Perfect



WILLIAM PARSONS, Esq.

OTTERVILLE, Ont., July 8th 1910.

"I am a seventy-nine year old man, and a great believer in, and user of "Fruit-a-tives". It is the only medicine I take, and I can truly say that "Fruit-a-tives" and exercise keep me in my present good health.

Stricture of the Bowels, was the complaint I suffered from and I found "Fruit-a-tives" to do me more good than any other remedy. My doctor advised me to stick to "Fruit-a-tives" and I have done so with the best results.

I have been in business here for a good many years and have been a resident of Otterville for over fifty years, so that if you think this little reference from me will serve to induce some others to try "Fruit-a-tives", I hereby authorize its publication.

WM. PARSON.

Obstinate Constipation, Paralysis of the Bowels and Stricture of the Bowels can never be cured by common purgatives, salts, senna, "liver pills" and oil have positively no action on the liver. They do not increase the secretion of Bile, which nature provides to move the bowels. They merely irritate the membranes lining the intestines. One may as well try to cure a headache by pounding one's head against a stone wall, as to try to cure Constipation with common purgatives. "Fruit-a-tives" is the only true liver stimulant. "Fruit-a-tives" is fruit juices and nerve tonics, and will always restore the liver to its proper condition and cure the most obstinate cases of Constipation.

NORDHEIMER

PIANOS

ONE should bear in mind that the purchase of a piano is in the nature of an investment. The right piano becomes not merely an ornamental article of furniture, but also a permanent source of entertainment, culture and refinement, repaying daily to its owners a far richer dividend of delight and satisfaction than any other investment of a like sum could afford them. How advisable then, that the selection of a piano be made with the greatest care.

While we make beautiful the outside of our pianos, we realize the greater importance of making perfect the inside. The prime purpose of a piano is the production of musical sounds. The sound or "tone" of the NORDHEIMER piano is so full of sweetness, power, brilliance and richness that it has been called

"The Quality Tone Piano"

We don't regret the enormous expenditure of time and money, study and experiment necessary to bring the NORDHEIMER piano to its present state of perfection, for the success of our efforts is in itself a satisfying reward. We feel great pride and great confidence in our pianos and we recommend them to those who want a particularly high class, reliable and beautifully toned instrument.

KING GEORGE A CRICKETER

As a "Middy" He Used to Indulge in the Game and Subsequently Played in a Match

There is only one occasion recorded in which the late King took part in a formal match, namely, when in 1866 he assisted I Zingari to defeat the Gentlemen of Norfolk at Sandringham, and was bowled by the first ball he received.

Early in the sixties, when the professional cricketer attached to Eton College was the well-known Cambridgeshire player, F. Sell, he was not infrequently summoned to Windsor Castle to bowl to the Prince of Wales and the other young and Royal members of the household. But, alas! it has to be recorded that on his return from one of these expeditions he made the direful announcement that he "couldn't make a job of 'em at all."

King George, as well as his brother, the late Duke of Clarence, took an active interest in the game. His Majesty, indeed, who as a "middy" used to indulge in the game on the deck of the Hacchante, at the conclusion of one day's racing at Goodwood some years ago played in a match in Goodwood Park that was got up between the guests at Goodwood House. The team included His Majesty and an eleven captained by M. Cannon, the famous jockey. The former is credited with having possessed one of the most expensive bats in existence, the blade being of walnut and the bat being mounted in silver. A peculiarity with regard to the King's favorite bat, by the way, lies in the fact that high up on the blade on either side of the splice appear the famous three feathers that form the crest of the Prince of Wales.

Queen Victoria [illegible] one cricket match, but never one that may with accuracy be described as a first-class fixture. On August 3rd, 1866, she, together with the Prince and Princess of Wales and other members of the Royal Family, witnessed a very close game at Osborne between the Royal Household at Osborne and the officers and men of the Royal yacht, which was won by the former by the narrow margin of twelve runs. The match was particularly interesting for the reason that the late Prince Leopold undertook the duties of scorer, whilst figuring on the side of the sailors we find the late Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, one line of the scoresheet reading:—

H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, b Head, 10; c Cole, b Archer, 2.

WILL HE BECOME KING OF FRANCE?

Why Prince Victor Napoleon Married Princess Clementine—Recognized Bonapartist Heir to Throne

Grand-nephew of the great Napoleon, Prince Victor Napoleon, whose marriage to Princess Clementine of Belgium was celebrated at Moncalieri, near Turin, is the recognized Bonapartist heir to the throne of France, just as the Duke of Orleans is the recognized Bourbon heir to the same throne. And such is the unsettled condition of France that Royalists are freely predicting an upheaval in the near future which will place Prince Victor on the throne of France.

Whether such an event will ever come to pass, of course, time alone can prove; but it is a significant fact that those who have closely followed international events during the last few years laugh at the story that the wedding between Prince Victor, who is now forty-eight years of age, and Princess Clementine, who is thirty-eight, is the climax of a romantic attachment. The story goes that eight or nine years ago the two met at Brussels and fell in love with one another. But the late King Leopold strongly objected to the marriage and refused to consent to the betrothal. He favored the Orleans family, it is said, and hated the Bonapartes, and it did not suit his policy with the French Republic to have his daughter married to one of the Royalist pretenders. There was, therefore, a secret betrothal, and when King Leopold died last year the only obstacle to the marriage was removed.

On the other hand, others say that it is purely a marriage of convenience. Should Prince Victor ever sit on the throne of France he would become Napoleon IV.; but he would be the last of his line. It has been alleged that the Prince contracted a morganatic marriage in Brussels, and has three children living; but, of course, they could not succeed their father to any royal honors and dignity which the Royalist party of France hope will fall on him in the near future. Hence his marriage to Princess Clementine of Belgium, which it is hoped by the Bonapartes will result in the continuity of the Napoleonic line.

A BLACK OUTLOOK

Mrs. Smith found herself for the first time without a cook. She had paid the highest wages and suffered patiently from the carelessness and caprice of cooks. After preparing several meals with her own fair hands and gaining confidence in the art, she approached her husband with a brilliant proposition.

"What do you say, dear," she began, if we do without a cook and I keep the money for my very self. Suppose cook for one month, what shall I get?"

"Well," said the brute of a husband, "by the end of one month you will get one of those long crepe veils."

Could Not Walk Ten Yards Without Resting.

WEAK HEART WAS THE CAUSE.

Mrs. Robinson Collette, Rogersville, N.B., writes: "I am now enjoying the best of health after having used your Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I was troubled with a weak heart and was afraid to draw a long breath for the pain it would cause me. I could not sleep at night, and it was impossible for me to walk ten yards without resting myself. I cannot speak too highly of your Heart and Nerve Pills, for they are the greatest pill I have ever used and I can recommend them to all sufferers."

Thousands of people go about their daily work on the verge of death and yet do not know it.

Little attention is paid to the slight weakness of the heart for the simple reason that one thinks it will right itself, but there is where the mistake is made. It is only when a violent shock comes that the weakness of the heart becomes apparent.

On the first sign of any weakness of the heart or nerves, flagging energy or physical breakdown, the use of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills will soon produce a quick and permanent cure.

FINE BIRDS IN OLD LONDON

Beautiful Feathered Creatures From All Over the World on Show

The king among the more than 2,000 birds on view at the London Cage Bird Association's annual show at the Royal Horticultural Hall, Westminster, is a handsome specimen of the greater bird of Paradise in full plumage. It belongs to Mr. R. Pauwels, a famous Belgian amateur collector, and is worth $7,500.

Mr. Pauwels has brought the bird to England in company with other valuable rarities especially for the present show. His exhibits include a black-capped lory, a Cuban woodpecker, a pair of white mynahs, and a pair of sky-blue budgerigars, most of which are new birds to the English show bench. The greater bird of Paradise dominates them all, however, and it is probable that no other specimen of its breed will be seen for many years at an exhibition in this country, owing to the decree which came into force on July 1 last prohibiting the export of birds of Paradise from Dutch Guinea, the home of the species, except for scientific purposes.

QUACKS STILL ABOUND

Even Belief in Witchcraft Prevails in Some Portions of England and Wales

Witchcraft has arrived at the dignity of mention in a Government Blue-book. In a Local Government Board report issued recently in London it is stated that in a few of the more outlying rural districts (of England and Wales) belief in witchcraft is still held by a few people.

Herbalists are said to be chiefly popular in the Midlands and North, where some vaunt spurious degrees and give certificates which are actually accepted by registrars of death. They "seriously diminish the chances of cure, lead to a great amount of unnecessary pain and suffering and premature death," and have caused the spread of small-pox and other infectious diseases by ignorant diagnosis and mistaken treatment.

The North is also the chosen ground of the bonesetter, and in parts of Wales belief in these men is said to be implicit.

Other sources of danger dealt with are unqualified dentists posing as "Institutes" and the like, who "sacrifice on an enormous scale healthy teeth," supply ill-fitting teeth, and poison with anaesthetics of which they have no knowledge; unqualified opticians who write all sorts of letters after their names, and injure eyesight with worthless glasses; and quacks who sell nostrums at shops or street corners to cure cancer, consumption, and other grave diseases, which lead to the spread of disease and death.

GOOD USE FOR IT

"Mary," said Uncle James, "you make use of that big dictionary with the wire stand that I gave you last Christmas, don't you?"

"Oh, yes, uncle," answered Mrs. Wardlaw, "and the children enjoy it ever so much. They're never so happy as when they can manage to upset it on the baby."

Lots of men act as if breakfast with the family was the tail end of the nightmare they had.

50c. Bottle FREE

Read the Reasons for this Offer, so Vitally Important to the Sick:

Psychine is the greatest vitality builder of the age.

For thirty years Psychine has been curing almost every disease that is due to run-down vitality.

Hundreds of thousands have used Psychine with wonderful beneficial results.

We have received thousands of unsolicited testimonials from those whom Psychine has cured, of in many cases, hopeless ailments.

There are still thousands of people suffering from disease, however, whom Psychine can benefit.

There are still thousands who are trying to cure themselves by wrong methods, who are using dangerous and hurtful medicines.

There are still thousands who are gradually losing their vitality—from whose body the necessary resisting power to disease is slowly but surely slipping away.

There are still those who soon will hear the dread "call in the night" if they do not take prompt action.

To these we have the above message, viz.:

"Let us buy a 50-cent bottle of Psychine from your druggist and give it to you, free, to prove its great value."

That 50-cent bottle of Psychine will tell you more powerfully than mere words can how tremendously beneficial Psychine will be for you.

It will give you an unmistakable indication of its wonderful power to renew the bodily vitality, to strengthen the phagocytes (the white corpuscles), the policemen or scavengers of the body.

* * *

The Surgical Department of the Japanese Army, in the Japo-Russian war, first drew the attention of the scientific world to the function of the white corpuscles of the blood or phagocytes.

Foreign medical men were astounded to see Japanese soldiers with wounds that had not been cleansed or dressed for days, that were apparently dirty, ill-kept, and altogether unsanitary.

Yet these dirty wounds healed marvellously; no army the world had ever known had such a wonderful record for the recovery of their wounded as the Japanese army.

And all because the Japanese knew how to let the white corpuscles cure.

* * *

There are two kinds of corpuscles in your blood, you know, red and white.

The red carry nutrition, the white are the policemen or scavengers of the body.

Whenever a disease germ enters the body, these white corpuscles attack and literally eat it.

A wound that attracts disease germs from the air is cleansed and healed by billions of phagocytes, or white corpuscles, devouring these unwelcome disease germs.

Any disease can be cured by these white corpuscles if they be in sufficient number or strong enough to attack and devour the germs that cause the disease.

If they are not in sufficient numbers or strength, then the disease germs eat them and disease claims the body.

That's the cause of every disease to which humanity is heir.

* * *

For centuries the cure of disease has been by means of herbs—nature's remedies.

It is only within recent times that we have come to know how these herbs act.

Now scientists tell us they increase the strength and numbers of the white corpuscles or phagocytes.

In Psychine we have some of the most healing and beneficial herbs in the world, herbs that increase and strengthen the white corpuscles.

From Arabia comes one herb, from South America another, China and Japan produce a third, while the jungle of India yields a fourth.

All these herbs are recognized by the medical profession as being the most beneficial to health that they know.

That's why Psychine, in the third of a century it has been made, has cured hundreds of thousands of people who suffered from the following diseases:

La Grippe, Bronchitis, Hemorrhages, Sore Throat, Anaemia, Female Weakness, Impotency, Poor Appetite, Chills and Fever, Sleeplessness and Nervous Troubles, Bronchial Coughs, Weak Lungs, Weak Voice, Spring Weakness, Early Decline, Catarrhal Affections, Catarrh of Stomach, Night Sweats, Obstinate Coughs, Laryngitis and Dyspepsia, After-effects of Pleurisy, Pneumonia and La Grippe.

That's why we believe it will be beneficial to you.

Now we don't ask you to take our word for the tremendously beneficial effect of Psychine. Fill out the coupon below, mail it to us, and we'll give you an order on your druggist (for which we pay him the regular retail price) for a 50-cent bottle of Psychine to be given you free of cost.

We will undoubtedly buy and distribute in this manner, hundreds of thousands of these 50-cent bottles of Psychine.

And we do that to show our entire confidence in this wonderful preparation.

IT WAS INDEED

"Fancy old Bill, of all people, going into the gunpowder-shed with a lighted candle!" remarked the proprietor of an explosives factory to his foreman. "I should have thought that would be the last thing he'd do."

"Which, properly speakin', it were, sir!" responded the foreman.

THE MODERN NOVELETTE

Camilla stood facing the window, and did not see him when he entered the door, but she felt the proximity of the man, whose gaze was fairly burning holes in her gown. Prompted by an unaccountable uneasiness and a desire to save that gown, she wheeled suddenly, and her eyes fell upon him. They were light, and did not hurt the stranger at all.

"Merciful heavens!" she exclaimed, her eyes dilating wildly. "Do the dead rise!"

She leaned heavily upon a chair, and trembled so violently that the entire castle shook. The stranger thought it was an earthquake, and looked about uneasily.

"Considering your question from a theological standpoint," he said, calmly, "I think it can be answered in the affirmative."

Camilla struggled for composure like a person wrestling with an epileptic fit.

"I read your name in the list of the lost," she stammered, "and I thought you dead."

He laughed in a low, rasping voice which removed the varnish from some of the furniture.

"After you had scuttled the ship," he said, "I was rescued and taken ashore. I began at once to search for you. I have looked among the best families of Europe and the American heiresses, for I did not know in what guise I might find you. I find you quite comfortably settled here."

"What do you want of me?" gasped Camilla.

"Why," he replied, "I had thought something of going in for housekeeping again, and—"

"Never!" shrieked Camilla, her proud lips curling in scorn, and without the use of curling-irons. "I will never go back to you!"

The stranger remained perfectly calm, but the sarcastic smile on her face deepened. When he again spoke his voice could have been used for a nutmeg grater. His eyes were again burning holes in everything they rested upon.

"You forget, my dear Camilla," he said, "that I am your husband."

There was a momentary silence, so still that the firing of a cannon three rods away could have been heard distinctly.

"I wish that newspaper had told the truth," sobbed Camilla, "and that your name had been McGinty."

"Why, of course you do," the stranger replied. "Then you could pursue your plans without hindrance."

"Then you mean to betray me?" said Camilla, changing her position and her tactics at the same time without losing her balance.

"That depends on you," he said, with a shrug of the shoulders he had learned in Paris and was using this season with great success. It had brought down the house on several occasions.

In their excitement the two had not heard the grating of the carriage wheels on the drive in the courtyard of the castle. Camilla was staring at the man in indescribable rage, mingled with fear and anxiety, for she was smiling scornfully, when the door opened and Count von Halfalog entered.

"Aha!" he exclaimed, striking an attitude and speaking in a tone of mingled sarcasm and police inquiry. "What have we here?"

"All is lost!" exclaimed Camilla, throwing her hands to her head with such violence that she felled herself to the floor. Then she sat up and looked wildly about her. The stranger explained that she was his wife, that he had come to get her. The count thought he heard a tone in the man's voice that had a silvery ring to it. He felt in his pockets and then addressed the stranger.

"How much do you want?" he asked. "What sum is necessary to buy your silence and ensure your absence from the castle for ever?"

"Well, I hardly know," replied the stranger, meditatively. "How would one-and-sixpence strike you?"

LONDON SEES PERIL IN GERMAN CLERKS

Like the Late Denis Burns, the Metropolis Is Again "Viewing with Alarm."

THE SCARE GROUNDLESS

Morning Post in a Patriotic Mood Sends Forth Investigators Who Reassure England.

(Special Dispatch.)
LONDON, Saturday.

IT was the late Denis Burns, once an Alderman and well known in the lower part of New York city, who was wont to say in a Milesian brogue as thick as a London fog, that "We view with alar-r-m the increase of the Ger-r-man population in our country."

Denis' Teutonophobia is epidemic here. Even the dignified Morning Post sounds an alarm, and in a long article headed "German Clerks in England; Are They a Danger?" stirs up the "Britons who never, never shall be slaves," but who usually go to bed fearing that when they are awakened they will find a regiment of Uhlans quartered in their cottage garden or hear the "boom! boom" of the guns of a German fleet bombarding the Channel towns.

Roused by the charge that there are more than one hundred thousand German clerks in London, fully trained as military men, who in case of an invasion from the Fatherland, might wish to betray the citadel from within, the Morning Post detailed several of its staff to investigate just how strong the Germans are in London, with the result that they found that there has been a marked decrease in the number of German clerks in English offices and warehouses.

Why They Are There.

Some years ago it was a custom to send scions of wealthy German commercial families to England that they might absorb English methods of doing business. English merchants welcomed them then with open arms, because in many cases they worked as "volunteers," for nothing, or were satisfied with a mere pittance.

There are few German "volunteers" in London to-day, because English employers gradually woke to the fact that these foreign employes were not as cheap as they seemed to be, as they ferreted out business secrets and sent them to their relatives in Germany, enabling those relatives not only to compete with but to undersell the Englishmen.

There is no denying the fact, however, that the Germans have driven the old time English waiter out of business, and this is explained by the dislike of the average Englishman for this class of menial work. The native still monopolizes such posts as that of butler, family coachman, or chauffeur, but he has disappeared from the restaurants, cafés and hotel dining rooms, making way for Germans, Austrians and Swiss, who, in addition to being more expert as waiters, possess the advantage of being linguists.

I talked with waiters in the Old Cambrinus, in Appeardoft's store, and in other distinctly Anglo-German establishments, and they all indorsed the explanation of his presence in England given by the solitary German waiter whom I found in the historically, and therefore distinctively, English resort known as "Ye Olde Cheshire Cheese."

Would Keep Right On.

"I am in England," he said, "because I could not make a living in Germany. Here work is plentiful for men who understand their calling, and the wages are better than those paid to waiters in the Fatherland."

"What would you do," I asked, "if Germany declared war on England?"

"I would stick to my position as long as I could," he replied. "I owe nothing but the accident of birth to Germany. England is my home, here my children were born, and if the worst came to the worst I would defend the land that has given me my living."

Many employers who were seen by the Morning Post representatives united in saying that fewer Germans are now employed in London than at any time during the last twenty years. All of these men refused to credit the statement that the Metropolis contains "more than 100,000 Germans trained to arms and fit to be called out."

Nevertheless, the Morning Post says that though the information gained by it is reassuring, "one must not suppose that the presence of a large body of Germans in England is a fact to which we need pay no attention. Our improving relations with their great nation is a subject for sincere congratulation, but does not absolve us from the duty of taking reasonable precautions."

The writer of the Post article then calls attention to the fact that before the war of 1870 there were many Germans in France who returned to their regiments, the knowledge that they had gained in France proving very useful to the invaders. The Post concludes this singularly interesting article by declaring that "so long as England remains supreme at sea the Germans among us can do no harm," but ends with this pessimistic inquiry, "Are we sure of retaining that supremacy?"

MESSENGER GIRL A NOVELTY IN LONDON

Royalty Is Preparing for a Gorgeous Coronation; Kings and Queens of Other Nations To Be Present

Some of the Great Personages Who Will Attend the Ceremonies Next June.

(Special Dispatch.)
LONDON, Saturday.

KING, Queen and Court are now on the eve of leaving Sandringham for Windsor, where they will remain till they come to London a day or two prior to the opening of Parliament. In their stay at Windsor they will entertain a succession of small parties for the shooting in the Great Park, which promises to be very good. After the opening of Parliament their majesties will return to Windsor, where they will spend most of their time till they go to Balmoral for a short visit about Easter.

King George, it is reported, has found his throat troubling him a little of late, but without giving any cause for anxiety.

The design for the Queen's crown at the coronation has not yet been definitely arranged, but it seems certain that one, if not both, of the Cullinan diamonds, now known as the Stars of Africa, will figure in it. They will, of course, be so set as to be easily removed.

An interesting report has got about to the effect that King George, on the occasion of his coronation, intends to bestow titles on both his younger sons. There is certainly no lack of titles to choose from, such as Clarence, York, Kent, Cambridge, Gloucester, Sussex, all of which appertain to the royal house. It would be a departure from precedent to bestow these titles on the young princes at their tender age, but it has not happened, in the last four reigns at any rate, that a sovereign with sons under age has come to the throne, and so it is possible that the coronation may be made the occasion of this innovation.

Court officials are already arranging accommodation for the many royal and distinguished visitors who will be in London for the coronation. The Belgian suite of apartments in Buckingham Palace is to be assigned to the German Crown Prince and Princess, who will represent the German Emperor.

Others for whom accommodation is being prepared in the Palace are the King and Queen of Norway and their little son, Olaf, the Crown Prince and Princess of Greece, and whoever is selected to represent the courts of Spain and Denmark. The Empress Marie, of Russia, will stop at Marlborough House with Queen Alexandra, while the Crown Prince and Princess of Sweden will be at Clarence House, close by.

The representative of the United States will probably stop at the Embassy. For the majority of the other guests accommodation will be provided at some of the leading hotels, but even then it will be a work of much anxiety to provide for them all in suitable fashion.

Of course, the question that most concerns prospective visitors to London for the Coronation season is what the special tariff at the hotels will be. The managers of the leading hotels have not yet decided upon this, though when approached on the subject they declare the difference from the ordinary tariff "will not be very great."

Remembering how tenants of apartments and chambers in St. James' profited by subletting their rooms for the last Coronation, and even to a greater extent for the funeral of King Edward, proprietors of houses on the probable route of the procession in June have devised an ingenious scheme to get a share in any profits that occupiers may make by subletting their rooms for that occasion.

The rentals of chambers on St. James' range from $500 to $2,500, and not a few men paid a year's rent with their Coronation profits. Now, however, the owners of chambers make clients who are just taking their rooms sign an agreement stipulating that in case of subletting for the Coronation they will have to pay up a third or more of the profits.

"If you let your windows for $750 (which is a pretty ordinary price) you will have to make me a present of $250 or $300," says the landlord to his tenant, and the client, with a sporting chance of clearing $500, acquiesces.

King George, It Is Reported, May Bestow Titles on His Two Younger Sons.

OLD AGE PENSIONS MEAN A NEW START

Paupers Who Are Enabled to Get Out of Poorhouses and Begin Life Again.

(Special Dispatch.)
LONDON, Saturday.

SOME touching stories are told about aged paupers who, after many years—some of them for a score or more—in the workhouses of London, are now, thanks to the old age pensions scheme of the government, leaving these institutions to start life anew as free citizens of Great Britain.

It is not that they have any fault to find with their treatment in the workhouses, but that working there for their daily bread they felt they were more like prisoners than free agents. Many of them did not go there of their own accord, but because willing but poor relatives were unable to support them. But now the five shillings a week old age pension makes a vast difference.

The primary object of the Old Age Pensions act is not so much to get old persons out of workhouses as to prevent them going in, and it means relief to a great many who are now there. Here are a few interesting cases narrated by a visitor who called on the eve of the discharge of a number of aged paupers who had collected their pensions for the first time.

One was a man past eighty, who had been an inmate of the workhouse for about twenty years.

"Glad to get out? I should think I am. And so would you had you been here for twenty years." He had no relatives "what he knew of," but would "manage somehow. I'll just go back to my old ways and do a bit of jobbin' on commission."

"How I hate the place!" said another aged man. "Oh, yes, they treat us kindly here, but no kindness makes up for the loss of one's liberty. What'll I do? Take up my old job—street hawkin' of course. It's good to think o' bein' on the road again. And then there's always the five shillin's a week to keep us goin'."

NEW RED STAR IN MILKY WAY

(Special Dispatch.)
LONDON, Saturday.

A new red star has been discovered among the myriad luminaries of the "Milky Way" by the Rev. T. H. Espin, of Towlaw, Durham. Mr. Espin is a well known astronomer in England, and the place where he has discovered this new star is between the constellation of Lacerta and Cepheus. So large is this blazing body that it can be seen by an expert observer with opera glasses, and yet it is so very remote that its distance is almost incalculable.

CHINA TO PROHIBIT POPPY GROWING

Memorial to the Throne Also Would Prevent Interprovincial Traffic in Opium Smoking.

(SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.)
PARIS, Dec. 18, 1910.

CHINA is in the throes of another opium war. This second conflict is aimed against Great Britain, the enemy in the closing years of 1839-42, which did so much to fasten upon China the great curse.

In some respects the attitude of the British government seems hostile. This has been manifested by opposition to another international opium conference. It seems that the British government has taken the position that the existing treaties and agreements protecting the importation of Indian opium must not be discussed at any international conference.

The leader of the anti-opium war is Mr. Lin Ping-chang, a member of the National Assembly and grandson of the famous Viceroy of Kwangtung, who precipitated the first opium war by confiscating and destroying the stocks of opium held by British merchants at Canton.

Realising there is no hope of obtaining Great Britain's consent to absolute prohibition of importation until China has demonstrated her ability to do her full part, the National Assembly, at its meeting on December 2, unanimously adopted a memorial to the throne, advocating:—

First—That the planting of poppy shall be prohibited after January, next.

Second—That the interprovincial traffic in opium shall be prohibited after July, 1911.

Third—That the smoking of opium shall be absolutely prohibited, and heavy penalties, after the end of the year 1911.

In the debate leading up to the adoption of this programme a deputy representing the Board of Finance said the government stood ready to surrender all the revenue flowing from taxes upon the interprovincial traffic, although this would involve a heavy financial sacrifice; and a deputy representing the Wai-wu-pu announced that, following the instructions of the Assembly, the Foreign Office will make representations to the British government to obtain, if possible, release from the existing treaties bearing upon the question; in other words, Great Britain's consent to a treaty embodying the principles of the American treaty.

"If the Wai-wu-pu were efficient said Mr. Lin-Ping-Chang, "it would be the opium clauses in the treaty abrogated. In the face of public opinion throughout the world the British government could not afford to remain in the attitude of foiling opium upon China. The only thing necessary to accomplish the end so much desired is some backbone in the Wai-wu-pu."

"But if you stop the planting and the smoking and the transfer from province to province," replied a Wai-wu-pu deputy, "you will have stopped it all. What net, then, is there for taking up this treaty question at all? The treaty will then abrogate itself."

SPLASH AND SHARKS WILL NOT EAT YOU

This Is the Advice of Mr. Frank T. Bullen, Who Knows Much of the Deep.

(Special Dispatch.)
LONDON, Saturday.

MR. F. T. BULLEN, whose "Cruise of the Cachalot," among other things, has made his name well known throughout the United States, has been giving lectures to juvenile Britons on "The Deep Sea People at Home."

He showed pictures of whales, sharks, swordfish and other monsters of the ocean, but one lost all fear in listening to Mr. Bullen describe their engaging little ways and cute little tricks.

According to Mr. Bullen, the shark is a really estimable character, whose business is to be a scavenger of the sea. He eats whatever comes near him, including men, not because he likes men, but because they happen to be in his way.

After telling the little ones that he has seen a shark eat a bag of cinders, he asserted that if a man falls into the water the shark will wait until he finishes splashing before trying to eat him. So don't forget to splash when you meet a shark.

Although he has a devouring hunger, Mr. Bullen says that the shark is a loving parent, and that he establishes lifelong friendships. One of his most intimate friends is the little blue mackerel, which sailors call a pilot fish and which accompanies the shark like a dog. Here's a chance for some budding poet to write a few stanzas on "the love of the shark and the mackerel."

Of course you have heard that stirring song "In the North Sea Lived a Whale," but if Mr. Bullen is to be believed this dreadnought of the seas is harmless just like a big jellyfish. If you chase it fast enough it will die of fatty degeneration of the heart. When the whale opens its mouth it takes in about four million tidbits at a swallow, and there is nothing in life that makes it so happy as when the close season comes and it can go to sleep on the bed of the ocean for six months. In this respect it may be said that the whale has "nothing on" some men.

NEW QUESTION IN NAVAL PROMOTION

(Special Dispatch.)
LONDON, Saturday.

In the next few weeks an interesting question of naval promotion will be decided. During this year four Admirals on the active list are due to retire on attaining the age of sixty-five, unless they are promoted to the rank of Admiral of the Fleet, in which case their services would be extended for a further five years. These Admirals are Lord Charles Beresford, Sir C. Drury, Sir Wilmot Fawkes and Sir R. Henderson.

36 DREADNOUGHTS RECORD FOR 1911

Average of One War Vessel Every Ten Days Is the Great Programme Outlined.

(Special Dispatch.)
LONDON, Saturday.

THE year 1911 looks like being a record one for naval activity among the great Powers, for no fewer than thirty-six Dreadnoughts are expected to be launched during the year—in other words, an average of one ship every ten days.

At present only thirty-eight of the Dreadnought type are in the water, completing and completed, and this is the result of more than five years' work. In one year alone, from now on to December 31 next, this number will thus be almost doubled.

Of the vessels to be launched this year eleven will be British. On January 17 the first of these will take the water when the Thunderer will be launched at Blackwell.

Next to Britain comes Germany with seven launches, but this number includes three which should, according to the original programme, have been launched in 1910.

Four of the eight vessels of the British 1909-1910 programme are already launched, whereas of the four Germans provided for in 1909 only one is launched. The other three will take the water this year, and it is expected also that the four 1910 vessels will be launched before next January.

It is clear, however, according to observers, that if the rate of building is not accelerated these vessels will not leave the stocks until 1912, in which case Great Britain will have launched in 1911 eleven to Germany's three, while in the United States two are expected to take the water, in Russia, four, two each in France, Argentina, Chili and Japan, while Austria, Italy, Brazil and Spain will each contribute one.

In this connection Rear Admiral Rosendahl, retired, of the Germany navy, writes in the January number of the Deutsche Revue, published in Berlin, the first of a series of articles on "The Chief Navies of the World," in which he seeks to prove that England has no need to trouble about increasing her naval strength. He shows, for example, that the superiority of the Triple Entente in respect of naval strength over the Triple Alliance is enormous.

When all the vessels now in course of construction, or whose construction has been sanctioned, are in commission the Triple Entente will be way have at its disposal 100 line of battle ships, 72 large cruisers, 187 small cruisers, 450 high seas torpedo boats and 202 submarines, whereas the Triple Alliance will have at its disposal only 48 line of battle ships, 20 large cruisers, 30 small cruisers, 207 high seas torpedo boats and 32 submarines.

JEWS HONORED BY BRITAIN'S RULER

Three of the Baronets Named by Him Are Members of This Ancient Religion.

(Special Dispatch.)
LONDON, Saturday.

JEWS figure prominently in the list of New Year's honors, three of the Baronets named by the King being members of this ancient religion.

Sir Charles Henry, long an earnest worker in the interest of the liberal party, is identified chiefly with philanthropic work. He is president of the Jewish Soup Kitchen, a generous supporter of many Jewish charitable institutions, and is a member of the council of the Anglo-Jewish Association.

His two colleagues, Sir Robert H. Raphael and Sir Arthur Levy Lever, while interested in Jewish industrial and charitable work, have been honored by the King because of their attainments and the rank which they have achieved in their professions.

But it is the honor of knighthood conferred upon Mr. Joseph Lyon, who is the Duval or Childs of London, that gives the keenest pleasure to his co-religionists, for they see in Sir Joseph, as he now must be called, the best type of the self made man.

There is a story afloat that the new knight owes his real start in life to an American, Mr. George Starr, who, when he was over here with the Barnum & Bailey Show, awarded the restaurant concession to Sir Joseph, who was then known and liked as just plain "Joe."

Sir Joseph, although a supporter of every leading Jewish charity, has not confined his gifts within sectarian lines, and that explains why, when he received the honor of knighthood, he was deluged with telegrams from such widely varying sources as Canon McCormick, of St. James', Piccadilly; the officer commanding the Salvation Army; the Chief Rabbi of England, and the Mother Superior of the Little Sisters of the Poor.

In referring to Sir Joseph as the Childs of London, no disparagement is intended, for he is one of the greatest business organizers in England, and while he caters to the popular taste at popular prices, he is also the director of the fashionable Trocadero and the smart Gaiety restaurants. Moreover, he is associated with Salmon & Gluckstein's in controlling the retail tobacco business of the metropolis, is suspected of having a working arrangement with Sir Thomas Lipton, and is an associate of Sir Thomas Dewar in several thriving enterprises.

Sir Joseph Lyons, apart from his ability as a business man, has other talents. He is a good painter, the author of two novels in collaboration with Mr. Cecil Raleigh, and is a born raconteur.

Japan Fears Chinese-American Friendship Will Lead Soon to a Formal Alliance

RECEPTION GIVEN TO THE PACIFIC COAST COMMISSIONERS AT THE RESIDENCE OF LI CHING CHAI

Reception to Pacific Coast Representatives in Old Empire Cited as Evidence.

WASHINGTON TRICK, SAYS NEWSPAPER

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]
TOKIO, Dec. 29, 1910.

LURID speculation over the possibilities of a Chinese-American alliance, coupled with continuous criticism of China and everything Chinese, is a marked feature of the current comment of the Japanese press.

Occasionally there breaks through the picture of gloom a ray of light in the shape of evidence of some appreciation of the true situation in China and of the reasons why, in her hour of need, she naturally turns to the one nation that has been truly the friend of China. But these are few, and, apparently, make little or no impression upon the sum total of Japanese comment.

The reception given to Prince Tsai-Hsun in the United States, coincident as it was with the remarkable enthusiasm manifested by the Chinese over the delegation of American business men representing the Pacific coast Chambers of Commerce at every city in China which they visited, served to provoke another outburst from the Japanese press.

"The fact that most of Washington's designs upon China have ended in fiasco," says the Mainichi Dempo, "has made the American people thankful for President Taft and the administration thus feels the necessity of doing something to save its face and avoid further unpopularity. In the nick of time the government has hit upon the expedient of utilizing the Chinese desire for a rapprochement, in order to curry favor with those Americans who favor a Sino-American alliance in order to corner Japan.

"But the idea of an American alliance with China is visionary—the most unthinkable of unthinkable things—and Washington is playing this hand simply to please China, and thereby gain concessions for its citizens in the Celestial Empire. The writer is convinced that the visit of the Chinese Prince, Tsai-Hsun, to America gave an impetus to the Sino-American rapprochement, though how much he has accomplished remains to be seen."

The Yamato Shimbun publishes three serial articles on the subject. In the first of these conventional sympathy is expressed with Chinese patriots who are concerned in the agitation for the recovery of their "rights." The gravamen of their lament is that the empire is encroached upon by France in the south, Great Britain in Hong Kong and Wei-hai-wei, Germany in Shantung and Russia and Japan in Manchuria. Not only are her sovereign rights violated in these places, but even a third rate Power like Portugal has found in possession of Macao.

In a second article the writer contrasts Japan's early willingness for domestic reform with China's vain pursuit of a Jingoistic will-o'-the-wisp.

"Japan," says the writer, "the suppression of jingoistic views in Japan that led to the consolidation of internal institutions and in the end resulted in the victories over China and Russia. In China, on the contrary, though demagogues abound whose chief aim avowedly is to expand the national prestige to a point which shall enable China to overshadow all other countries, there is a lamentable lack of that other school of wiser, saner and more far sighted persons who would realize the importance of furthering domestic reconstruction as an indispensable preliminary to a more ambitious programme. It is this fundamental defect, says the writer, which exposes China to contemptuous treatment at the hands of other Powers.

$5,000 PRIZE FOR JAPAN'S AVIATORS

(SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.)
TOKIO, Dec. 29, 1910.—The Kokumin Shimbun offers a prize of [illegible] yen ($5,000) to the Japanese aviator who makes the best flight over a course which the newspaper will announce later.

The Kokumin points to the rapid progress made of late in the field of aviation in Europe and America, and adds that Japan should not lag behind the rest of the world in this important branch of practical achievement.

The Japanese government has appointed a military airship commission, and in private circles numerous would-be inventors have fairly swamped the patent office with their ideas. So far, however, no heavier than air machine has been successfully flown by a Japanese in this country.

FINE ROYAL CARDS FOR CHRISTMAS

Designs Which Have Been Adopted by King George, Queen Mary and The Queen Mother

The King and Queen, like King Edward and Queen Alexandra, are lovers of the Christmas Card custom, and take a personal interest not only in the selection of the subjects, but in the designs. More than one member of the Royal House is credited with inventing and drawing ideas for Christmas cards.

This year King George and Queen Mary, following the pageant idea, have very appropriately adapted historical events. King George's card, for instance, represents King Henry VIII. halting on a white charger outside Hampton Court. The great Cardinal Wolsey is shown in an act of obeisance, welcoming the Monarch, and in the background are a galaxy of soldiers, monks, and Royal attendants.

The suggestion of this event probably occurred to King George by the fact that in May, 1909, his Royal father paid a visit to Hampton Court and inspected Wolsey's bridge, which had recently been discovered by Government excavators. The outcome of that visit was the complete restoration of the bridge, with the moat. Hence the happy thought embodied in a card, executed with a careful regard for accuracy of detail in dress, that will prove popular with purchasers who have relatives and friends in distant parts of the Empire.

Queen Mary, in the selection of her subject, will appeal powerfully to her friends beyond the Border. Her card represents a theme that will never be threadbare wherever the Caledonian brogue is pronounced—namely, the romance of Flora Macdonald and "bonnie Prince Charlie."

Rent by division and the superior generalship of his enemies, the last of the Stuarts was reduced to desperate straits. A price was put upon his head. Spies were everywhere on the lookout for him. Flora knew all this and more, and the card of Queen Mary depicts the Highland lady on her knees before the Prince, imploring him, in the interests of the cause that he represented, and his own life, to fly to France. She placed before him the information that she had acquired, and but for that act one more tragedy would have been added to the roll that disgraced the period.

Her timely and bold intervention saved his life. The Prince, a perfect courtier was not ungrateful, and, if we are to believe the historian, when parting with his Highland deliverer he expressed the wish that she, too would "gang South."

Queen Alexandra adopts a naval event, the invasion of England by Canute in 1015. It reminds us of her native home, and how intimately is the past, as in the present, the settlement and peaceful development of our land is linked to the arrival on these shores of Scandinavians. The card is most tastefully colored. It shows Canute planting his foot upon British soil, with the sails of his powerful fleet—the Dreadnoughts of those days—fluttering in the breeze.

AN HEIRESS TO MARRY AGAIN

Miss Rube, Once Unfortunate in Her Choice, Will Wed Irish Officer —Old Story Revived

The marriage which will take place just before Christmas between Miss Caroline Rube, the great heiress, and Major Webb Gilman, an Irish officer in the Royal Field Artillery, has revived the unhappy story of Miss Rube's first matrimonial venture. Miss Rube married the Hon. Leopold Canning, son of Lord Jarvagh, and just a year ago the marriage was annulled, Miss Rube resuming her maiden name. There was a great scandal at the time, as immediately after her honeymoon the bride returned to her parents. The reasons for the unhappy termination of the marriage were never published. For a long time Miss Rube completely secluded herself, and her mother rarely appeared in public except at charity functions.

Mr. Charles Rube is a partner in the famous South African firm of Wernher, Beit & Co., and is immensely wealthy. He owns a fine house in Mayfair, and a country place near Eastbourne. He lost his only son, who was in the Royal Dragoons, last year in India, and Miss Rube was on her way out to pay him a visit when the news of his death reached England.

Mr. and Mrs. Rube recently offered, as a memorial to their son, to present a set of twelve bells to a church near Eastbourne, but, owing to opposition on the part of residents, the offer was declined.

The wedding will be of the quietest description. The bridegroom-elect fought in the South African war and received the Distinguished Service Order medal.

GARDENING THE NEW FAD

Fashionable Ladies in London Take Suburban Homes and Enjoy Outdoor Life

The Countess of Dufferin is the latest recruit to the small army of well-known society women in England who have taken houses in the once-despised suburbs. For many years Lady Dufferin has lived in a charming house in Cadogan Square, where she entertained on a small scale, but the gardening craze seized her and she has just taken a large old-fashioned house surrounded by beautiful gardens at Putney. The house known as North House was formerly occupied by the Dowager Lady Hill.

The craze for living in the suburbs is gradually spreading, owing chiefly to the motor-car, which brings the suburbanites within half-an-hour's drive of the heart of London, and also to the gardening hobby, which, by the way, is much encouraged by Queen Mary.

Regent's Park, which for many years has been regarded as the home of retired tradesmen, is becoming fashionable once more, and among the new settlers there are Admiral and Mrs. David Beatty, who will entertain on a large scale next season at Hanover Lodge.

PASSION PLAY PROFIT

£85,230 Earned by Village Players—Salaries in Proportion

According to an official statement, the gross receipts of the Passion Play of 1910 at Oberammergau were £85,230. After defraying the costs of production and other incidental expenses the proceeds, £64,830, remain to be distributed, and the sum of £38,300 will be divided among the 860 performers. The managers of the play, the musical directors, the chief cashier, and the portrayers of Christ, Pilate, Caiaphas, Herod, and the speaker of the prologue will receive £125 each for their six months' services. Other salaries will be in proportion to the importance of the respective roles. The men and women who played so vividly as members of the crowds in the streets of Jerusalem will receive £6 each, and the school children 30s. each; £525 will be given to the poor, and, says the Mail, the balance of £21,750 will remain in the village treasury for communal purposes.

RIGHTS OF HOSPITALITY

Dr. Johnson, in his tour through North Wales passed two days at the seat of Colonel Middleton, of Gwynnagag. While he remained there the gardener caught a hare from among some potato plants. He brought it to his master, who was engaged in conversation with the doctor, and received from him an order to carry it to the cook. As soon as Johnson heard this sentence he begged to have the animal placed in his arms, which done, he hurried to the half open window, and restored the hare to her liberty, shouting after her to accelerate her speed. "What have you done?" cried the colonel. "Why, doctor, you have robbed my table of a delicacy, perhaps deprived us of a dinner." "So much the better, sir," replied the humane champion of the condemned hare, "for if your table is to be supplied at the expense of the laws of hospitality, I envy not the appetite of him who eats it. That, sir, was a hare which had placed itself under your protection; and savage, indeed, must be that man who does not make his hearth an asylum for the confiding stranger."

A KITE-FLYING COMPOSER

Sir Edward Elgar, whose violin concerto has aroused so much interest in the musical world, numbers kite-flying amongst his hobbies, but has devoted himself more of late years to chemistry and cycling. He spends much of his leisure time in the laboratory. In writing for the violin Sir Edward is returning to his early love, for he was a fine player himself in his youth. Indeed, it would be difficult to name an instrument which he cannot play. For five years he was bandmaster at the Worcester County Lunatic Asylum, the band being formed by the asylum attendants, and it was thus that he became familiar with instruments, ranging from a French horn to an organ. In those days—and it is not so many

CHRONIC ULCERS

Mrs. Jas. Elsworth, 902 Selkirk Ave., Winnipeg, says:—"Four years ago ulcers broke out on my left ankle and spread until from the top of my foot to my knee was one extended sore. One ulcer would be almost healed when a second would appear in a new place and in a remarkably short time a deep hole would be eaten into the flesh. The flesh on my leg turned blue and looked shocking indeed. I started using ointment after ointment, but received little or no benefit. The ulcers would heal for a time and then break out afresh. I was laid up in bed for a long time, absolutely unable to walk. My limb was so painful that I had no rest night after night.

"I consulted five different doctors. Some advised my going into hospital; others said there was no cure for me. After using their ointments and preparations until I was positive they could not cure, I almost gave up in despair.

"It was then Zam-Buk was tried and how I bless the hour I got it! Within a day it had given me some ease, and from that time I went on improving. The sores were so bad that it took some time to heal them, but Zam-Buk healed them all. The last was healed over a year ago and I have never had a moment's trouble since, from any form of ulceration."

Zam-Buk is just as good for eczema, piles, festering sores, scalp sores, children's rashes, cuts, burns, scalds, and all skin injuries and diseases. Druggists and stores everywhere 50c box, or post free, Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price.

MYSTERIOUS ACCIDENT

Railway Employe's Substantial Compensation

Of a singular character was an accident on the London and North-Western Railway which was described at Wigan in a claim for compensation made by a linesman named William Beswick, of Rockroad, Latchford, Warrington. Judge Bradbury, in giving judgment, said that after repairing a defect on the line applicant left Brynn Junction by train to return to St. Helens. He was alone in a third-class compartment, and he put his head out of the window to look at the line wires. Something happened—applicant did not know what it was, but he became unconscious. That was the only evidence to show how the accident did happen. At another station applicant was found hanging out of the carriage window on the left-hand side. The injuries were of a most serious character. The only defence set up was that the injuries were not caused by an accident arising out of and in the course of applicant's employment. In his Honor's opinion it was clearly an accident arising out of the man's employment, and there must be judgment for applicant for £44 11s. arrears of compensation and 4s. 6d. a week.

The Patient Brain

A Tireless Worker So Long as Supplied With Rich, Red Blood.

The brain is one of the most patient and industrious organs of the body. It can be induced, by good treatment, to perform prodigies of work.

But it is sensitive and will not brook abuse. It responds to the lash at first, but if the lash is laid on too hard it balks.

The brain insists on having plenty of good, red blood wherewith to renew its waste and from which to manufacture the nerve force supplied to the whole body.

Nervous trouble is generally brain trouble, and no suffering is to be compared to mental suffering, with the accompanying dread, suspicion and melancholy.

One-fifth of the blood in the human body is consumed by the brain, so make the blood rich and red by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and you will overcome diseases of the nerves.

There is no other way. Stimulants arouse false hope. Narcotics deaden the nerves, and temporary relief is followed by a condition which is worse than the first.

Get the blood right and the nervous system will adjust itself. Headaches will disappear; irritability will go, digestion will improve, and weakness and despondency will give place to new hope and courage, new vigor and energy.

Mrs. Geo. Fuller, Lakeland, Man., writes: "Dr. Chase's Nerve Food cured me of nervous headache, from which I was a great sufferer, and I am no longer troubled with twitchings of the nerves in the arms and legs."

Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food will enable you to avoid such extreme nervous trouble as prostration and paralysis, 50 cents a box, 6 boxes for $2.50, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

MAX O'RELL ON LOVE

The following are a few observations and reflections of the late Max O'Rell on men and women in love:—

Man is capable of love as earnestly as woman is, but love is not the whole business of his life, whereas it is a woman's. When a child she loves her doll, when a girl her mother, when a woman a man. She can feed on love and die of it. When a mother she loves her children. When she dies, surrounded by beloved grand-children, she may say that her life has been well filled.

I believe that a woman can love more than once. I have known widows remarry and love their second husbands with the same devotion as their first.

A man really loves once only. I knew a man under fifty who was married three times. He was a good and devoted husband to his three wives, but he never really loved but the second. If he dies suddenly, without having time to take all his precautions, the portrait of his second wife will be found on his heart.

The reason of this is that men and women love in different ways. A man loves because his whole being, heart, soul, and body, craves for a woman. A woman often gives herself to a man because it pleases her to be loved by him. For a man love is the pleasure he feels in the company of a woman; for a woman, it is the enjoyment of the pleasure she gives to a man. A woman is proud to call herself a reward, and that is why all heroes appeal to her so much.

Mirabeau was the plainest of men, with his face covered with smallpox marks, yet no man ever made so many conquests among women. Successful generals, explorers, great orators, authors, artists, singers, all appeal to women. They may not love them personally, but it affords them great pleasure to be loved by them. There is in every woman a craving for a man superior to herself, and that is why women who try to dominate men are such dismal failures.

A man likes to feel, to know, he is loved, but a woman likes to be told. You may tell her all day long. She will spend her life listening to you telling her.

Never have a sneer at a woman or at a child. Whenever you feel sarcastic exercise your talents on something else.

Never profane the words, "I love you;" they may seal the fate of a woman; but when you have uttered these three words in great earnestness, and the woman has answered with that great religious, almost sad smile that Victor Hugo called "the smile of angels;" when, in a word, she is yours, place her on a pedestal, on an altar, and worship her. The world has nothing better to offer you.

A man can cure a woman of a man. Nothing can cure a man of a woman, unless it be that woman herself.

LIVED ON 2D. A DAY

Apostle of Plain Living and High Thinking Cult

One of the most distinguished exponents of the simple life has passed away at Cambridge in the person of Professor the Rev. J. E. B. Mayor, professor in Latin at the University. Deceased was for a considerable period of his life a strict vegetarian, and had subsisted at one time on 2d. a day. Professor Mayor possessed one of the finest libraries in Cambridge—all of it, he was fond of saying, bought with the money saved on food. In his rooms up the tower in the second court of St. John's College this bearded scholar has simplified life to its utmost. A bachelor and a teetotaler, in his view one could live well on 6d. a day, and for some considerable time he reduced his nutrition bill to 2d. a day. Originally led to vegetarianism on humane grounds, he continued it for reasons of health and economy. Quite recently, at a dinner party in London, his host, who had forgotten his tastes, sent out for some bananas, of which a single fruit composed his dinner. The story of his starvation programme is well known. When he was completing his magnum opus—his edition of Juvenal—he decided to fast on a progressive scale for the last 48 days of strenuous work. He was to eat only every other day for the first week, every fourth day for the next, and to eat nothing at all for the last fortnight. When doctors compelled him to surrender the programme at the beginning of the last week, he said, "I never felt so well or so eager for work in my life, and I am convinced that I should have suffered no harm by persevering with it." In extent of learning and power of quotation he was compared by a fellow scholar with the Burton who wrote the "Anatomy of Melancholy," and one of Charles Lamb's favorite authors. He was, first of all, a great classical scholar, thought he was almost as great an authority in general philosophy and Sanskrit. He had a profound disbelief in the specialization of science. He held that the man of science rarely saw life steadily or as a whole. He was fond of lecturing, and was well known at the Victoria Institute in London. He was also an original preacher. It was once said that his studies in Juvenal of the excesses of Roman society drove him to the simple life, but it was a favorite thesis of his that the Romans at their heyday were, like other conquering nations, abstemious, and, at their worst, much surpassed by modern Yvars.

PINK PILLS FOR POPGUNS

"May I have a pen'orth of those pink pills I bought for father the other day?" inquired a little boy who entered a chemist's shop.

"Certainly," said the shopman. "And did they do your father any good?"

"I dunno 'bout dem' father any good, but they just fit my new popgun," said the boy.

LOVERS PERSISTED

And Were Rewarded at Last by Finding a Minister

A wedding in St. Mary's church, Brandon, on a recent Wednesday, brought to a close a most trying experience for the parties interested. The bride was Miss Silema Parsinage Gardener, of Antler, Sask., and the groom, Darcy Lewis Stewart, of Ochre River, Man. The wedding was arranged to take place at Antler on the Tuesday, but when the time for the ceremony arrived, no minister could be obtained. Sooner than postpone the wedding the young couple drove to the next town, but on arriving there found that the minister at that point [illegible] to Brandon and run no more risks. A special license was obtained here and the wedding took place.

MILL GIRLS MISTAKEN FOR DUCHESSES

Attention is again being focussed on the remarkable prosperity of Huddersfield. Almost every other man you meet in the town either owns a motor car or has a brother who owns one. Operatives—the unsophisticated stranger is told—drive to their work at their mills in magnificent automobiles. While many employers are about to take to aviation.

This is an exaggeration, however. More well-founded, it would seem, is the story that two Huddersfield mill girls, as they wandered through the grounds of the Brussels exhibition, were mistaken for English duchesses. Wearing costumes which Paquin would be proud to have designed, and hats that a society beauty would have envied, they had momentarily left their father and mother seated in one of the exhibiton halls, and had wandered out to view the exhibition grounds. Good looking as well as smartly dressed, they made an attractive picture. "They must be duchesses," whispered in broken English one attendant to another as they passed. The workpeople at the mill in Huddersfield where the girls work are still re-telling the story.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON QUESTIONS

Jan. 22nd, 1911.

(Copyright, 1911, by Rev. T. S. Linscott, D.D.)

Omri and Ahab Lead Israel Into Greater Sin. I Kings xvi:15-33.

Golden Text — Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people. Prov. xiv: 34.

(1.) Verses 15-16—Who was Zimri, and whom did he succeed as king of Israel and by what method did he get to the throne?

(2.) Did the fact that God had planned for the death of Elah, and for the destruction of his father's house, justify Zimri in being the instrument for doing it? Why?

(3.) Did the people do right or wrong, and why, for making another king and conspiring against Zimri for having slain Elah the king?

(4.) Verses 17-20—How long did Zimri reign (See Vs. 15, 19, 20.)

(5.) Is there any reason to believe that God ever brings about civil war when he wishes to destroy a nation or to reform its abuses?

(6.) What were Omri and his army engaged in when they heard that Zimri had slain King Elah?

(7.) Can you give any information as to his treason and the way Zimri caused Israel to sin?

(8.) Zimri practically committed suicide; did the circumstances justify it, or is suicide always wrong?

(9.) Verses 21-24—After the death of Zimri, Israel was divided, one half following Omri, and the other half made Tibni king and followed him; say what was the cause of the division?

(10.) How long did the strife or civil war between Omri and Tibni last? (Vs. 15-23.)

(11.) What is the invariable result when nations or individuals quarrel and fight among themselves?

(12.) Verses 25-28—What particular form did the sin of Omri take? (See Micah vi:16. 1 Kings xiv: 7-9.)

(13.) What were the influences do you consider, which led Omri into such grievous sin?

(14.) What is the root cause of all sin?

(15.) Which is more prolific in leading people into sin pride, i. e., wanting to shine as well or better than our neighbours, or the love of power which comes from money, position, or ability, and why? (This question must be answered in writing by members of the club.)

(16.) What did Omri and what do all like him get, who have bartered their goodness for position and power?

(17.) Verses 29-30. Which king is more likely to be a good man, one who comes to the throne by heredity or by the vote of the people?

(18.) What are the chances for a son, of a bad but popular father, becoming a good man?

(19.) When young men see the evil fate of wicked men, why is it that they choose to follow in their fateful footsteps?

(20.) Is the example of a bad king as likely to be followed as that of a good one? Why?

(21.) Verses 31-33—Did Omri make it easy or hard for his son Ahab to be a bad man and why?

(22.) Why was it wrong for Ahab to marry the daughter of a foreign king, who was an idolator?

(24.) What was Baal worship?

(25.) What was Jesebel noted for?

(26.) To what extent does the law operate for nations and individuals to go from bad to worse?

(27.) What did Ahab do to provoke the Lord to anger more than any other of the bad kings of Israel?

THE AVERAGE WOMAN NEEDS MORE BLOOD

Nerves Easily Irritated, She Worries Over Little Things

To the woman in the home — the woman closely confined to the house either through household duties or the care of children, or both — Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a positive blessing. The average woman has too little blood. Her nerves are easily irritated; she worries over little things; has severe headaches and backaches and is sick most of the time. With the woman who uses Dr. Williams' Pink Pills the condition is different. She is always well and the care of her children, or her household duties, is a real pleasure. This is because Dr. Williams' Pink Pills enrich the blood supply and bring bounteous health and strength Here is proof. Mrs. Fanny Shepherd, Girvin, Sask., says: "I am the mother of a large family and was worn out, weak and irritable. I kept going to my doctor about every six weeks, and he would give me something "to keep me going a little longer." But it was like winding up a clock, I soon got run down again, and although life seemed hardly worth living, I did not wish to die because of leaving my little children. I continued like this for some years, but at last summoned up enough energy to strike out a new departure and got a supply of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I barely hoped they would help me, but to my surprise, before I had been taking them long I began to feel like a different woman. I still continued taking the Pills for some time and they made me as well and strong as any woman need wish to be. Once more I would enjoy life thoroughly, and have done so ever since. I never need a doctor now, and everything seems bright and cheerful. I shall always recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to anyone who in my opinion needs a tonic of any kind."

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

SERMON FROM SHAKESPEARE

I'll never
Be such a gosling to obey instinct; but stand,
As if man were author of himself,
And knew no other kin.

—Coriollanus, Act V. Sc. 3.

The highest civilization is to be found in nations where the ties of kinship are strongest. In the drama "Coriolanus," Shakespeare has created a work of art in which the interest centres round patriotism and the family. The hero Coriolanus thought he could sacrifice both country and kin for his revenge. To do this he had to work a revolution in his nature. In the hour of his selfish triumph, the nobility of his character defeated his baser self, and he perished miserably. His fate was not undeserved, but he was more admirable in his death than when he stood a conqueror before the gates of Rome with fire and sword ready to destroy his native city.

There is no finer instinct than that of family love. The sacrifices it impels men to make, the suffering it enables men to endure uncomplainingly, glorifies existence. In the journey through life a man must often pause and question: Why am I here? Whither am I going? The mystery of life would weigh with unbearable heaviness on the heart were it not for the family. It is the family tie, kinship, that teaches men to be unselfish. The sacrifices that parents instinctively make for their children, children for their parents, brothers for sisters and sisters for brothers, are the light of the world. The family is, as it were, a training school for society. Where family life is beautiful and noble the state is the same. Indeed, the nation is but a larger family.

Humanity is spoken of as the human family. This is as yet merely a way of speaking for scientific purposes. It is not customary for members of the same family to take up swords and guns against each other. Until the nations cease flying at each others' throats, the word family as applied to humanity as a whole is farcical. Turks and Greeks are about as much of the same family as are tigers and wild boars.

Family love is an instinct. Coriolanus felt the instinctive stirring in his heart when at the approach of his mother, wife and child as suppliants, he cried out, "I'll never be such a gosling to obey instinct." This instinctive tendency to show affection to creatures related by ties of blood is universal. In the lowest and highest created things, in the reptile and man it manifests itself. A nature devoid of the instinct to cherish and protect its kindred is a monstrosity. Coriolanus thought himself able to crush out the instinctive feeling that prompted him to protect rather than destroy his kindred. In the supreme moment of his egotism and selfishness the instinct of a mother for the good name of her son was to rouse his nobler self. She recognized that if he did succeed in his attempt against Rome as he doubtless would if he persevered in his attack on the city from the noblest of Romans he would be remembered as the basest.

"If thou conquer Rome," she cried,
"the benefit
Which thou shalt thereby reap is such a name,
Whose repetition will be dogged with curses;
Whose chronicles thus writ,—'The man was noble,
But with his last attempt he wip'd it out;
Destroy'd his country; and his name remains
Toth' ensuing age absorb'd.'

Anyone who turns against country and kin is held in universal detestation.

In every man there is, or has been, an inward voice prompting to right action. It is the Creator speaking to the creature. In no way does this voice more emphatically manifest itself than in prompting human beings to heed the claims of kinship. To stand as though a man were author of himself, is the supreme of selfishness. A human devil like Richard III. was alone capable of sustaining such a role. Let a man attempt to live absolutely to himself and he is likely to become an oddity or worse. The hermit is usually more or less insane; prisoners who are condemned to solitary confinement and have not the soothing influence of companions frequently become gibbering idiots; lighthouse keepers on lonely bleak islands have been so oppressed with loneliness that they have become mad; and on the monotonous prairies of the great West, where men and women are left much to themselves, insanity is vastly more prevalent than in the populous East, where kindred spirits meet daily.

To determine to live a self-centered, self-contained life is a dangerous thing for anyone. Parent, wife and child are needed in a man's life for his best development. A kinless man is to be pitied; a flowerless plain is not a more unpleasing object. Such a man may find happiness, but it will never be by standing as though a man were author of himself. He can only find it by recognizing humanity at large as his kindred, and by giving a son's dutiful love to the old and feeble, by having a brotherly helping hand for any fellow-creature in distress.

MR. RYERSON RITCHIE'S ADDRESS AT DENVER

DISTINGUISHED LOCAL CITIZEN SPEAKS TO THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Is the Principal Speaker at the Annual Banquet at Which the Magnificent New Chamber of Commerce Building Was Dedicated---His Reputation as a Founder of Commercial Bodies.

DENVER, JAN. 21. — Mr. Ryerson Ritchie, of Peterborough, Can., whose reputation as a founder and organizer of commercial bodies, is well known throughout the country, was the principal speaker at the annual banquet of the Chamber of Commerce at its annual banquet which was held on Tuesday night and was contemporaneous with the dedication of the fine new building. Mr. Ritchie spoke as follows:

I have made a long journey in order that I may join with you in celebrating the opening of this beautiful building. I felt especially honoured by the invitation of your president. Most heartily do I congratulate you upon your progress as an organization and upon the possession of your own home. It is at once a symbol of your progress and a good augury of the future.

I was happy to accept your invitation for another reason. Since 1863 I have served under some twenty presidents of half a dozen commercial bodies and I have never known one of these presidents, all earnest and devoted men, to give up his whole time and thought to his office. Men are needed for leadership and for the every day task of public duty. This Chamber is unique, for that need and that duty are met by your leader. I want to pay my tribute to your able and faithful president, Mr. Bartlett.

You have set out to build up a great institution for Denver and Colorado. From what I have seen of Denver and its men, I can safely guarantee that you will gain your object. Indeed you would have credit now for perfection if it were not that you intend to grow and besides it is a good thing to have perfection and greatness ahead of you.

Without good tools, good workmanship is not possible. You have built a workshop for yourself and fitted it with adequate machinery. You have made this work shop attractive and homelike. Handsome and fit as it is, it will be made still more useful and attractive as time goes on. Here will centre your work for the future Denver.

Inspiration will flow from association and joint endeavour. This building will be the centre of Denver's spirit of cooperation; the home of an ever increasing number of men bent on doing something for your trade and industry, for the elevation and general good of your people.

When it is known that this Chamber is in business for the common good you can place upon your roster the name of every man in Denver who is worth having. But it will take time to be rightly understood for you must rid the popular mind of the belief that commercial bodies are merely soulless trade agencies. The people cannot quickly grasp the significant fact that a Chamber of Commerce may be at one and at the same time, the organized promoter of the material welfare and a faithful servant of the public interest.

The Chamber of Commerce is composed of men of affairs who own and conduct your great commercial, industrial and financial institutions. Upon their institutions the people depend for employment and prosperity. In addition to their business and professional obligations, this class of men supports the religious, educational, benevolent and social agencies of the community and state. Whatever these men do, materially or philanthropically, serves the public interest. An association of such men should, therefore, be able to command that indefinable yet very real element of power—public confidence.

It is easy to win public confidence, or to lose it; if once gained and lost or if never gained by a Chamber of Commerce, the community is deprived of the most potent agency now available for its true advancement and well being.

A Chamber of Commerce may weaken in prestige and destroy its public influence by being controlled by or used for any selfish object. In this day and generation, as in the past, men will sacrifice much for private gain, but there never was a time in history when patriotic men were more needed or more honoured than now. It is fair to say that a commercial body that fails in its duty as a servant of the public is not a good commercial body.

Those Chambers of Commerce that have won a high reputation for efficiency and influence have been sincere servants of the public. This development is not in discord, but in harmony with, the interests of the people. As the Chicago Association of Commerce puts it: "All for each and each for all."

On public issues it is not now difficult, through such bodies as this, to call into active service the busiest and ablest of men; and this is necessary to safeguard the public's business and guide the course of events.

It is not possible to tell you just how you can build up a greater Chamber of Commerce. As cities differ in character so do their associations. What kind of an organization is most fitting for Denver, how that organization is to be supported, and what its undertakings should be, are questions to be answered by yourselves. I can do no more than touch upon a few points of general application and refer to a few fundamental principals that seem to be needful in the making of character; and Chambers of Commerce have character as clearly defined as those of individuals.

The public standing of a Chamber of Commerce will be in exact proportion to its business discernment and civic loyalty. In the problem of administration and government more and more people want to know what the business solution is. They ought to be able to turn to the business organization for sound opinions and right judgments. The business organization that looks after the general business ably and honestly is fit to pass judgment upon the problems of the city.

But when you find a commercial body that begins with politics and ends with business, you will find one that misses a fundamental element of efficiency as a public agency. The virile commercial body begins with business and wins by forcing business into politics.

I have long held the opinion that it is the better part of wisdom for a Chamber of Commerce to present a united front to the public. Differences of opinion are often exaggerated and their significance magnified. Moreover a divided vote upon any public issue is of little or no value as a public influence. The important thing is team work, and a team that doesn't pull together is inefficient, to say the least.

The get together spirit is an important element of your success as an organization and as an influence upon the public mind. The proper place for the harmonizing of differences is in your counsels—your committees and directorate—not in your public meetings, where boomers, radicals and hot heads hurt the good reputation of the Chamber.

You cannot build character on wind. In shaping the character of your Chamber of Commerce you may practice as liberal and as aggressive business methods as you choose, but you must temper your liberality and aggressiveness with conservatism. The attainment of concrete results makes a more substantial reputation than good resolutions and promises, however volubly expressed. A Chamber of Commerce needs a good supply of moderation and reserve. Who respects the individual or the association that talks or promises too much? The important thing is not what the Chamber talks about but what it does.

In considering suggestions to boom or boost this or that enterprise the Chamber should look out for its credit and stability. In all of its undertakings it should start at the small end feel its way carefully, count the cost and commit itself only when it is certain of a successful issue. Inflation is a bad thing, except for balloons. Inflate popular enthusiasm by booming and boosting tactics and ninety-nine times out of a hundred you have a sudden drop. When self-importance is inflated the results are boastfulness and ostentation. It is good policy to allow the performance and the record to speak for themselves.

The moment that a Chamber of Commerce makes a few things happen it is elevated in public esteem; its influence is augmented by the very fact that it does not boast of itself or its accomplishments.

The individual intelligence and enterprise of your business men will do much for Denver, but individual intelligence and enterprise massed can accomplish almost anything you seek. To be sure the Chamber of Commerce is merely a society of men, but it is a society commanding the best brains and talents in the community.

The business mind gives us conservatism as well as enterprise, broad principles and wise counsels, expert analysis and incisive methods. The Chamber should serve as a brain for the city—one that can comprehend the situation, grasp the opportunity and direct a master hand.

The problem of the community, social, political, or commercial, cannot be solved in a day nor disposed of in a burst of feeling. Declamatory or de-

A RUNAWAY STEED DOES SOME THRILLING FEATS CROSSES RAILROAD BRIDGE

And Ends Up by Dropping Into a Creek Near Lakefield ---Three Occupants of the Cutter Were Thrown Out on the Go-in and the Horse Went On Alone.

A very exciting runaway occurred last evening about 5.30 when a horse, the property of Mr. M. Storey, ran away with, or rather without, three young men. The young men, in question, rented the horse about 5.00 o'clock, saying that they were going to Lakefield. All went well until they came to London street, where they tried to turn east. The cutter slewed in making the turn and upset the three occupants out, with the result that the horse bolted and started off on its own account. In the course of its mad career, it performed some very odd and thrilling stunts. To begin with it ran over to the power house, ran across the railway bridge and continuing, kept the railway until it crossed the Nassau bridge and reached the bridge about one mile this side of Lakefield. Here it came to grief. It had formerly succeeded in crossing the bridges, but this time, instead of going across, it ran over the end and dropped down into the creek with the cutter on top of it. The young fellows followed its track until they came to the bridge and they managed to get it clear of the harness and brought it home. It was pretty badly injured To-day a couple of men went after what was left of the cutter.

The remarkable feature of this case is, that the horse could cross all these bridges without getting its legs caught between the stringers, but, however, it managed that part of it—unfortunately at last it strayed from the straight and narrow way, with the above results.

A NEW 1911 MODEL FORD CAR RECEIVED IN THE CITY

Mr. Joe J. Duffus, the local agent for the Ford and Russell automobiles, has received from the Ford Moto Co., of Walkerville, Canada, a new 1911-5 passenger touring car.

It is a beautiful machine, painted black and presents a very pleasing appearance, being very compact. At the same time it is very roomy, being nine inches longer than previous models, which enables it to seat five people very comfortably.

A very noticeable feature is its very silent running, which is a popular feature in any motor car. Like all other Ford cars it possesses the feature of economic running and maintenance, owing to its light weight, which is accomplished by the high class material used throughout its construction.

The price of this popular car is $975 complete, and can be seen any time at the new show rooms, 309 George street.

Special Wire to the Examiner.

DEAD.

Mrs. Percy C. Brooks.
Percy Brooks, aged 8.
Geo. Brooks, aged 3.
Woodie Brooks, aged 2.
Violet ——, Orillia.

TORONTO, ONT., JAN. 21.—Investigation this morning in the ruins of the beautiful home of Percy C. Brooks, the Manager of the Fairbanks-Morse Company, shows that Mrs. Brooks and her Scotch nurse maid, met a violent death in a heroic effort to save the former's three children from the fearful flames and smoke which broke out at one o'clock this morning, causing the death of these two women, with three children. The mother was found partially dressed, with her arms wrapped around one child, and the nurse maid had another. All were in the attic of the home, where the children slept except the oldest boy, whose body was found near near the bath-room door. Maggie McCaldron another servant who escaped to give the alarm, was badly burned, and may die. It has been ascertained that the fire was caused by a gas jet burning too close to the oiled panelling. The house was very artistic, but a fire trap. Brooks himself was on his way home from Chicago, where he was on business, when the fire broke out.

MISDIRECTED ZEAL.

The London Advertiser is enterprising in its partizanship. It blames Hon. Mr. Fielding, Finance Minister, and holds him responsible, for the Farmers' Bank failure and for the Keeley mine absorption of its funds, the immediate cause of the collapse. Mr. Fielding had no authority, if by any miracle he could have known of the transaction, to interfere and close the doors of the bank. He has no authority in law to interfere in banking operations—no more authority to forbid a Keeley mine transaction than to interfere with a local bank discounting John Smith's note. If the Free Press wished to be anything but partisan, it would devote a little attention to the apathy or winking of the Ontario Administration of Justice, which permitted known or strongly suspected culprits, in connection with the bedevilment of the Farmers' Bank affairs to slip out of the way.

TYPHOID AND CITY WATER.

Ottawa is under a visitation of a mild typhoid epidemic—fifty cases among 90,000 inhabitants—due, it is assumed, to unsanitary city water. Per contra Peterborough has no typhoid at present, and has been remarkably free from it during the year. During the year there were in our hospitals a good many cases from points outside Peterborough, notably Orono and district. In 1910 only six cases of typhoid have developed in Peterborough. The origin of three of these cases was due to infection from outside patients confined in the hospitals—two nurses and one patient Of the other three cases, two of these were of persons using water from wells and the other used water from various sources; but not one case of typhoid was traceable to the use of city water. This is very gratifying and comforting, and it should be the aim of those in charge of our public water supply to see that the exceptional purity of our city water, especially as compared with that of other cities, is maintained.

A LESSON.

The picture of a fallen man like ex-Bank Manager Travers, suddenly shut out from the distinction, respect, comfort, ease and luxurious living of his official position, exchanging the garb of society for the livery of the felon, is pathetic, and will evoke pity. But there should be a large measure of sympathy extended to his dupes and victims, who had the savings of a life time swept away, and possibly in advanced years, face the world penniless. He is paying the penalty, apparently well deserved, of his crime; they are paying the penalty of their too easily placed and misplaced trust. The criminal bank manager committed a worse crime than the foot-pad; for he had the equipment to command confidence, and he added criminal deception, plausably worked, insidious and alluring, instead of open violence, which might be fled from or successfully resisted. Travers' punishment, though bitter by contrast to voluptuous ease of living and high position, is deserved, as well as furnishing a measure of atonement. It will be an example to others in trust, to discharge their trust faithfully; it will also be a warning to the public to be more careful where they place their confidence and their cash. It will hasten and strengthen the amendment of the Banking Act so as to make crimes of the extended and far-reaching character of Travers' more difficult, if not, in some regards, impossible. The lessons of adversity are the most appealing. Travers learns this too late, but the public and the authorities can profitably lay them to heart.

DR. CHASE'S OINTMENT.

A NEW GOSPEL.

The great London Times has discovered a new gospel. With all the ponderous impressiveness, of which it is capable, it solemnly asserts that "one of the recognized effects of total abstinence appears to be the tendency to the use of unrestrained and unsuitable language." That is to say the erection of a dam to the inflow of strong drink to the human interior, is provocative of the creation of another sort of damn. The Times is a great authority, and henceforth we must be as chary of taking the pledge as of taking tipple.

BRITISH REVENUE.

Lloyd-George's budget has received an even stronger endorsation than that of the electorate—the endorsation of practical proof. British revenue returns demonstrate at once the effectiveness of the fiscal policy of Lloyd-George and the prosperous activity of British Trade, under what the carpers would call the incubus of free trade. For the first nine months of the British Government's fiscal year, that is from April 1 last to December 31, the receipts have been £136,044,632, or £43,160,065 greater than the receipts of the corresponding nine months in the previous fiscal year—during which, by the way, the total surplus of British capital seeking investment, that is to say, the surplus of the year's earnings of invested British capital, was, as estimated by the editor of the London Economist, £200,000,000, or 1,000 million dollars.

The increase in the British Government's revenue for the first nine months of the current fiscal year is abnormal, in that it is swollen by arrears from the previous year, when the rejection of the Lloyd-George budget by the House of Lords prevented the full collection of taxes. But even the normal revenue is exceeding the estimates, and on five items alone it has been greater during the past nine months than in the preceding twelve.

The current budget provides for a total expenditure of £199,791,900, so there is £63,746,368 to be made up before the fiscal year ends on March 31. The income and land taxes are collected chiefly in the last quarter of the fiscal year, and it is regarded as a foregone conclusion that the Chancellor of the Exchequer will have a surplus to announce when he makes his next budget speech. One will have to go further afield than trade and revenue returns to find evidence of the decadence of an "effete monarchy."

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The easy escape of the conspicuous bulk and ponderous personality of Dr. Beattie Nesbitt from the ken and clutch of justice is surprising. Can it be that the experience of his pliant political career stood him in good stead, or that the benefit of friends at court operated in his favour?

The fact that in 211 samples of butter collected from farmers all over the Dominion, 195 were found perfect, and only two were found to be actually adulterated is, the Stratford Beacon thinks, a strong testimony to the honesty of the Canadian farmer. If the output of every other calling could be subjected to a similar analysis, would there be an equally good showing.

WHERE LYNCH LAW IS JUSTIFIED.

(Ottaw Free Press.)

The Peterborough Examiner wants Ottawa to tell it how to get rid of its unsightly street poles. They had, it appears, everything ripe for removing the poles from George street when one of the companies refused to cooperate with the city and other corporations in bringing about the improvement and it was blocked. How would it do for the people of Peterborough to inaugurate a boycott of that company? Offhand, we should say that the company needs Peterborough's business patronage even more than Peterborough needs the company's service. We doubt if a corporation in Peterborough or anywhere else could stand up for long against public indignation properly aroused. As a last resort, let the people of Peterborough get out their axes, sharpen them, and then some fine night, proceed in a body to George street and cut down the offending poles. This is a case where lynch law is justifiable.

UNITED STATES WANTED JUDGE BARRON.

(London Advertiser)

It is not generally known that Judge Barron, of Stratford, who will this week commence the investigation into the Grand Trunk strikers' case here, is an author of some note. For many years his Honour has been very keenly interested in navy questions, nad has contributed numerous articles to leading papers and magazines on Various topics of interest regarding them.

He has written a number of boys' stories about the admirals of the British navy, and is at work now on a volume of these which will be published shortly. His son is a midshipman on board Canada's new cruiser, the Niobe.

"Boys and young men who are thinking of going into a nevy," he told the Advertiser, "should go into the Canadian navy rather than go into service across the line. The Americans are making desperate effort to enlist our young men. They advertise extensively in all the papers, and just out of curiosity the other day I answered one of their ads.

"To show how keenly they follow up any prospects, inside of two days I received a very large parcel of matter from headquarters, explaining the attractions of the American navy in full. They had even gone to the trouble to look up on a map and find out where Stratford was, and advised me that the nearest recruiting station to me was at Buffalo. To my surprise a couple of days later I received another large bundle of literature from Buffalo, urging me to come there at once and enlist on one of the boats. Most attractive offers were made and promises of promotion. Young men who are intending to go into the navy will, however, find far better chances in the Canadian navy.

Financial Post Gives Information Re Hydro Electric Power Operation

(From Financial Post of Canada)

[illegible] happened short circuits resulted, and the power was shut off. Sometimes the wires swing within two or

It was very evident from the result that the energy jumped from one wire to the other, producing short circuits, to all intents and purposes, the same as if they had touched——Another engineer—not Mr. Sotham, remarked: "There is no doubt that the sag was the cause of the trouble. If the Hydro-Electric Commission reduce the slackness a few feet, the difficulty may be got rid of and a steadier current will result. It is understood that the Commission have large forces of men out working on the lines.'

It w savery evident from the reports in the local papers during the past two months, that the facts were not known and that attempts were being made to conceal what was actually occurring, and the Post has taken the trouble to investigate the matter, and it now gives to the public the result of its inquiries, and at the same time states that, if there is any inaccuracy in the statements made, it will very gladly publish corrections from proper sources in its next issue.

The interruptions have been very serious and have resulted in very heavy loss, both to the Hydro-Electric Commission and to all of the municipalities that have joined in the project. Valuable electrical machinery and revolving apparatus have been destroyed or seriously injured.

At the transformer house of the Hydro-Electric Commission at Niagara Falls costly oil tanks and other switching apparatus have been burned out. At Guelph two transformers have been destrowed. At Preston one have been destroyed. At Preston one transformer. The financial loss is not a matter of hundreds of dollaars, or thousands, nor even tens of thousands, but probably considerably exceeds $100,000.

Who is to pay this loss? The Hydro-Electric Commission will not pay it, and, therefore, it will have to be borne by all the municipalities interested, and, presumably, Toronto and other municipalities will have to bear their share of the general loss, although the power is not even in sight here yet.

The Post has specially inquired as to the cause of the interruptions, and cannot be sure what the real cause is. The most general opinion is that the ground wires, which are placed above the circuit wires, have come into contact with them, causing short circuits, or that the circuit wires, themselves, have come together. Some engineers claim that it is due to the ice and snow forming on the insulators.

A further opinion given was that the circuit wires were rigid on every third tower and loose on the intervening towers, which caused a vibration or a shaking of the central towers, interfering with the true swing of the wires and causing them to come together.

It was also suggested that the trouble might be in the local stations, either through defective machinery, or poor operation.

The only thing that is absolutely certain about it sems to be that the interruptions have taken place and that the supply of power is unreliable, and that there is a universal feeling of dissatisfaction against the service up to the present time.

The Post has asked the question, whether or not the construction faults, if there are any, can be remedied, and has been told that it is, of course, possible, but very difficult.

It may be that these interruptions will be overcome when all of the cities and towns are looped up together in the manner proposed. On the other hand, a person without technical knowledge would think that, as more municipalities came in, the difficulties would increase, rather than diminish. Certainly, if the causes of interruptions are trivial, they could have been remedied long ago, as more than three months have elapsed since the power was first turned on.

To indicate that interruptions are not necessary on properly constructed lines it might be well to bear in mind that—except during an occasional thunder storm—the Electrical Development Company, has since power was first turned into Toronto, had practically no interruption of the current.

A JUSTIFIABLE APPEAL TO ROME.

(Brantford Expositor)

Some talk of "dictation by Rome" has been heard because representations are said to have been made to the Papal See on behalf of Quebec Liberals against the support which Roman Catholic prelates in the Province of Quebec are said to have been giving the National movement. We fail to see any cause of complaint. If there is any truth in the report that such a protest as that above indicated has been made, it is to be remembered that the gentlemen making it are Roman Catholics and acting as such, and that they have no other way of preventing what they regard as an uncalled-for interference on the part of the priests than by appealing to Rome. Such appeals have been found absolutely necessary in the past if Liberalism was to have any chance in Quebec, and may be found necessary again.

THE FAMILY HEARTH

WASHING HANDKERCHIEFS OF DELICATE LINEN.

Delicate handkerchiefs can be done as easily at home, and careful handling causes them to wear much better. Wet them, rub each gently over with good white soap and soak in tepid water over night. Squeeze out (do not wring), put them in a small enameled pan, cover with cold water and half a teaspoonful of powered borax. Boil slowly, pour into a basin, add cold water and squeeze out all soap.

Next immerse them in clear, tepid water; rinse about in this; then plunge into cold water tinged with blue; leave in this half an hour; squeeze and roll carefully each handkerchief in a towel and iron with moderately hot iron.

Many of us miss the joys that might be ours by keeping our eyes fixed on those of other people. No one can enjoy his own opportunities for happiness while he is envious of another's. We lose a great deal of the joy of living by not cheerfully accepting the small pleasures that come to us every day.

The man and woman who try to make their home the most interesting spot on earth for each other, and for their friends and those who are near and dear to them, have but occasional use for the club. It is to them, like the theatre, a pleasant place to enter now and then but not a spot to dwell in.

The world is full of women who can amuse the ordinary man. Can sing, dance or recite to him; can paint, write or decorate in a manner most pleasing, but the poor man often goes begging for a woman who can sew on buttons or mend his clothes; who can cook his food with economy and flavour it to his taste.

The children whose horizon is a brick wall, who must play on cobble stones and go swimming in the canal and be chased by the police, if they do not grow up to be ideal citizens, shall we of holier memories sit in judgment upon them? Shall we not remember the weight they carry in the race of life and be thankful we live in this beautiful country of ours?

Some courage is needed to be natural and a higher kind of courage, too, than that which marches behind the safe end of a gun. That moral courage which is not intimidated by appearance nor cowed by custom is a finer article than the daring of the speculator, or the steady nerve of the soldier in a physical peril. It takes bravery of the best stamp to be true to oneself.

Would that our charities could strike deeper, seek to humanize as well as feed, encourage and reanimate as well as clothe. We are all of us apt to gather our skirts about us, hold our noses and avert our eyes while we hand out our garments and our bread. Blessed be the soul that is inspired enough to go down into the shadows and lend a helping hand. To be very poor, and yet carry a clear life and keep alive ambition and hope is like seeking to set a white rose growing in the bosom of a coal pit.

Th school boy should really learn the lesson that the ripest, biggest cherries are at the top and that nine out of ten of his fellows will be crowded for places to pick around the base of the trees where the small, wormy fruit grows. There is plenty of room at the top; there are plenty of cherries growing there. The luscious fruit is ready for the picking and ever smiles a welcome to the hustler to climb up and obtain possession. The best things in life require considerable effort to get, and that's why the strongest men and women have them.

It is the person, rather than the occupation that adds dignity to labour. There are those who can beautify the most menial occupation or service and there are others who can degrade the most honourable calling.

It is not pleasant to record the truth that there are mothers, who have sacrificed motherhood to worldly ambition, and the most happy women on earth are those who have set aside filial ties in order to live lives of social frivolity, and the time comes to all such, when the bloom of youth forsakes the cheek, and the fire of youth dies out of the eye. Such often turn to their homes for sympathy and love, only to find that they too have vanished and when it is too late the sad truth dawns upon them that they are unhonoured and unloved. The path of duty is the only safe path, let it be ever so thorny, and the only safe guide-board points to the Christian home.

There should live in the depths of every human heart one warm and sunny spot where nestle the images of early love and the sweet remembrances of childhood home. The memory of those first impressions made upon the babys mind and heart will live forever. Oh, how fleeting are days of childhood. Dear mothers, shall you permit yourselves to be so "cumbered about much serving" that the rich garden of your child's soul will lie neglected with foul weeds choking out all worthy and beautiful growth?

The home that possesses a cheerful wife and mother is not only a veritable haven of rest, but the safe harbour whose beacon light will guide her bread winners safely past all rocks and shoals with unfailing certainty. The woman whose cheerful spirit can take that "brave attitude toward life" that enables her to bear courageously the inevitable burdens of her life's environment; that strengthens her determina tion not to fret or worry those who, for her sake, are fighting the hard battles in the world, has reached that altitude that proclaims her price above rubies; and her influence and example are not felt only within the limits of the four walls she has made the unassailable bulwark of state and society, a happy home, but reach to those she knows not of.

HEALTH AND BEAUTY HINTS.

Do not give uncooked fruit to children, late in the day. Stewed or baked fruits at supper time are more certain to agree with them, and will insure a more restful night.

There is no question as to the value of milk as a food when taken slowly and between meals. It should not be taken in great gulps with other food, nor with any acid fruit.

A simple cure for ingrowing toe nails is to cut the nail square and thin out the top in the centre of the nail with a piece of broken glass or a sharp jack-knife.

A well-known doctor claims that a crack in the lip, when it is deep and remains a long time, usually indicates among other things a lack of phosphates in the system, and so a good tonic should be taken.

When the hair is dry and seems to be fading, rather than turning gray, an ointment which may be helpful can be made from one ounce each of mercury ointment and oil of ergot. It may be scented. It should be rubbed into the scalp every night.

The following is a refrshing disinfectant for sickroom or any room having an unpleasant odour pervading it: Put some fresh ground coffee in a saucer and in the centre place a small piece of camphor gum, which light with a match. As the gum burns allow enough coffee to consume with it. The perfume is pleasant and healthful, being far superior to pastiles and much cheaper.

A free application of soft soap to a fresh burn almost instantly removes the fire from the flesh. If the injury is severe, as soon as the pain ceases apply linseed oil, and then dust over with fine flour. When the covering dries hard repeat the oil and flour dressing until a good coating is obtained. When the latter dries allow it to stand until it cracks and falls off, as it will in a day or two, and a new skin will be found to have formed where the skin was burned.

LAUNDERING FRILLS.

Before putting in the laundry the one-side pleated frills and frilled collars which are so pretty and popular and yet so hard to "do up", run a row of basting stitches about an inch from the outer edge. That will hold the pleats in position while washing and will save time and trouble later in ironing. This is especially true if you are not the proud possessor of a patent pleating iron.

These frills, by the way, should, when possible be made separate from the blouse and buttoned, hooked or pinned on, so that they do not have to go so often to the tub. They really do not get dirty so quickly as the more exposed parts of the blouse, and they are a great nuisance usually to wash and iron, even with the precaution mentioned. If you buy a ready-made blouse with frills stitched on, it is an easy matter to rip them off and supply buttons and buttonholes.

"TO THEM THAT HATH"

A SHORT SERMON TO FAT FOLKS

"To them that hath shall be given" is a sentence that applies to fat people very neatly. It is a common knowledge that once a human being begins to fatten up, to what they have already is added more than they want until finally a stage is reached where reduction must be made or decided disadvantage results.

Then comes forward the ages-old query, "Reduce—but how?" To the uninformed nothing suggests itself but the (to them) twin evils—less eating —more activity. They contemplate a more or less lengthy siege of dieting and exercising. So it may be said safely that every man or woman in the land now undergoing the fattening process has his or her mental eye fixed dubiously on that not far distant day when he or she will have to don the "ashes and sackcloth of reduction."

This is not an enlivening prospect, and so it is with considerable satisfaction that we announce the emancipation of the fat. Nowadays one may reduce more or little, a pound a day if desired, or hold their fat in check, absolutely stationary, without doing a tap of exercise, missing a single meal, doing a particle of harm or causing a solitary wrinkle. All that's required, as hundreds testify, is the taking after meals and at bedtime of one Marmola Prescription Tablet, which tablets are sold by the Marmola Company., 833 Farmer Bldg., Detroit, Mich., or any good druggist, at the uniform price of 75 cents, this sum being accepted for a case of tablets so well and generously filled that even one produces desirable results.

WHAT SHOULD THE CHURCHES DO ABOUT TEMPERANCE?

(By Rev. W. M. Clow, B.D.)

The following is from one of a series of special articles contributed to the "Dundee Advertiser"—"A Deadweight on the Church's Work."

There seems to be no more room for doubt that the Church has a distinctive duty in relation to Temperance. The evils, and, as many men of quiet speech say and feel, the games, of strong drink stand out beyond all other evils with a black pre-eminence. Did any other source of death, and crime, and shame, and poverty, and bitter tears stand out as this social habit of drinking, all men would urge the Church to enter the lists against it. Its terrible destructiveness calls for distinctive action. Its spawn of disease and crime, its cost in waste of wealth and of men, its consequences in the misery of countless homes, and the sapping of the moral vitality of the people, make it the dragon of our time against whom every St. George should go forth. But apart from these terrible issues from this poisoned spring there is the simple fact that intemperance is the deadweight on the work of the Church, and the sadder truth that with multitudes drunkenness is not merely a habit, not only a vice ,but a passion, with a grip which is the Devil's grasp. However, men may differ about the lines of the Church's duty, they cannot deny that there is a distinctive duty towards the use of, and traffic in, alcohol.

* * * * * *

The strength of the Churches' duty lies in the moral and spiritual sphere. That is the sphere in which motive is strongest; that is the sphere where the battle must be won. No nation will give up a habit, however costly it may be even to health, much less to wealth, if it can be morally defended. As the Churches create a moral nausea against the use of drink it will be easy for others to engross stern laws of condemnation and restraint in the Statute Book. In their Sessions and Courts, in their Presbyteries and Synods, Assemblies, and Conferences, the Churches should make vivid and clear the line of moral progress in Temperance, and call on its public men to ensure that in the government of the city and the State that ideal throbs within the heart of every enactment.—"Northern Messenger."

If every man should do the things
the "other man" should do,
Attack the heodlum, catch the thief,
and watch the rascal crew,
We'd have a perfect city, and a perfect country, too,
A sober land, an honest land, where men are good and true;
There'd be no more misgovernment nor graft nor mobs to rue,
If every man would do the things the "other man" should do.
If every man would think himself to be the "other man,"
Become his own reformer on a self-respecting plan,
And calmly, boldly, set himself to do the thing he can,
Nor wait to find some other one to push into the van.
The world's entire iniquity we'd put beneath the ban,
If every man world think himself to be the "other man."
—Christian Endeavor World.

(From Life of Francis Willard.)

In 1873 came that wonderful Christmas gift to the world—the woman's temperance crusade, beginning in Hillsboro, Ohio, December 23. All through that famous battle winter of Home versus Saloon, I read every word that I could get about the movement. Meanwhile it occurred to me, strange to say, for the first time ,that I ought to work for the good cause just where I was—that everybody ought. Thus I first received the "arrest of thought" concerning which in a thousand different towns I have since then tried to speak, and I believe that in this simple change of personal attitude from passive to aggressive lies the only force that can free this land from the drink habit and the liquor traffic. It would be like dynamite under the saloon if, just where he is, the minister would begin work against it; if, just where he is ,the teacher would instruct his pupils; if, just where he is ,the voter would dedicate his ballot to this movement, and so on through the shining ranks of the great powers that make for righteousness from father and mother to kindergarten toddler, if each were this day doing what each could, just where he is.

"The liquor business has no standing before the law. It has no rights. It is merely tolerated by license. A license is not property. It is not negotiable. When it expires that is the end of the State's special obligation; the contract has been fulfilled and is dead."—Detroit News.

NATURE WILL CURE YOU

Of Kidney Disease, Aided by Father Morrisey's No. 7.

Kidney trouble is one of the most distressing ailments of mankind, and leads to backache and rheumatism. This is because of the importance of the work done by the kidneys,—work which must proceed normally to insure good health.

A very large proportion of civilized people have some form of kidney trouble, sometimes without knowing that their malady is of that nature. Many obscure pains can often be traced to diseased kidneys.

These organs are the filters of the body. Their function is to strain out of the blood and eliminate through the bladder the worn out tissue and other impurities gathered by the blood in its course.

When the kidneys become congested and sluggish, these impurities, including the irritating and poisonous uric acid, are not entirely removed from the blood. The result is that the uric acid is deposited in the joints and tissues, causing the agonies of rheumatism and frequently affecting the liver and other organs.

Father Morrisey, the famous priest-physician of Bartibogue, N.B., after much research compounded a remedy which worked hand in hand with Nature. His doctrine, justified by thousands of cures, was that the need is not a patchwork relief, but a treatment that will enable the forces of Nature, working through the kidneys, to accomplish their intended work.

His famous prescription, No. 7, assists the kidneys to work vigorously and eliminate the harmful uric acid from the whole system. In the form of tablets, No. 7 is easy to take, and will effect cures where other remedies have failed. Do not trifle with kidney disease, but take No. 7 Tablets, the treatment that has proved so successful with other sufferers.

famatory protests are of little value. Americans are impulsive, ready for a fight "instanter." But maybe a little less temper would be good for us as a nation. What America is said to lose through its hot headed impulsiveness, its lack of foresight and thoroughness, it believes it makes up in superior energy and enterprise. But why not use foresight and thoroughness in the performance of our tasks, especially in the shaping and the making of our cities. I have never been able to understand why it is that men of fine business attainments who in their private affairs are prudent and reserved, careful to guard their credit and reputation, will be parties to impetuous, hasty, premature action on the part of a business association. They will permit, without protest, an organization to go headlong into impossible undertakings, and to scatter its energies over too wide a field. They know quite well that such conduct is unbusinesslike, disastrous, that it weakens efficiency and causes dissatisfaction among themselves.

The booming and boosting of schemes that are of doubtful merit often play fast and loose with sincerity. Every business man knows that the Chamber of Commerce must rest upon the solid foundation of good faith and sincerity if it is to succeed. The Chamber of Commerce cannot afford to fail; it must make good. Now it cannot make good when its support is given to any enterprise that is not a distinct benefit to the people, or to one that sound business logic condemns.

It is far from my mind to hint that what you may advocate or endorse should have popular approval, for you many often stand against public clamour in the public's interest. But when you are absolutely right and business-like—with staying qualities—you can win in the end; you can make good.

The Chamber of Commerce occupies a position of Commissionership —a judicial position — in the community. It stands between special interests, or of schemes in the guise of public spirit, and the credit and welfare of the people. The public may be misled but the Chamber of Commerce never should be, simply because your consels are composed of the ablest and best trained men. Of course you will have complex problems before you and the people of this community and you cannot always agree upon their solution, but you can accept and stand by the majority vote of the Chamber.

You have, I understand, a subject before you now that is of great interest to your commerce and your people —the subject of freight transportation. The right solution of that problem is "up to" this Chamber. The public cannot settle it rightly, because of the intricacies and difficulties surrounding it. The railway corporations cannot settle it because—well, because they would settle it in their way. An impartial Chamber of Commerce, with intelligence, fair-mindedness and courage, can solve any public problem. Law and justice are at your command, and if there is not law and justice at hand, the state of Colorado, by its representatives up there at the capitol, can create them.

But if this Chamber, in its endeavours to solve the transportation or any other problem, favours or plays to the prejudices of any clique or class, or to those of the public at large, it could not and would not occupy a judicial position. It should be put out of business if it does not stand for a fair and square deal all around.

You ought to know precisely what you want and why you want it; then do business as business men. Denver does not need the help of the country at large. It seems to me regrettable that Denver and Colorado should be advertised throughout the land as a sufferer from or suppliant to the railway corporations; yet many people have drawn these inferences from the press reports. The solution of the transportation problem is your own affair and, backed by the power of the commonwealth, you are, as a Chamber of Commerce, entirely competent to deal with it.

It may be that you look upon your industrial development as a problem. Your progress in manufacturing does not seem to me problematic. You have the precious and baser metals at your very door; the clays for potteries, cheap fuel, cheap power. Among the many industries you can establish, Denver seems to me to be the natural home of the artist and artisan in the metal and ceramic crafts. Denver, too, is the centre of a vast area of cultivated land.

The establishment of a new industry is a business enterprise. If Denver knows itself, its advantage and limitations, and pursues a business like policy, it is inevitable that it will grow industrially. A Chamber of Commerce that is superficial in its analysis of business and economic conditions, or that appeals to public spirit rather than to business discernment, is not usually an ideal promoter of industrial growth. When you know what industries can be profitably located and developed here, think first of their value as occupations for your people and then apply your combined talents to promotion. An enthusiastic campaign of boosting, supplemented by glittering generalities, is not an inducement to either capital or labour. Superior commercial advantages and excellent municipal conditions are effectual inducements.

I shall not quarrel with you because you think much of conventions; indeed, it is because I know that Denver is ambitious to be the great American convention city that I speak of the convention at the moment I have industry in mind. How much money you would raise and what efforts you would make to secure a great national convention. But would you arouse the whole community and pledge all the stock needed for a little industry that would bring to the city but twenty-five families? Permit me to point out the mathematical fact that the greatest of great conventions, with baggage and banners, is not of as much value as one little industry, whose employees and their families live and move about here three hundred and sixty-five days in the year.

Many American cities have recently gone through a period of critical self-examination. A great work of refinement has been begun and is being furthered through the initiative, enterprise and public influence of organized bodies of business men, such as the Denver Chamber of Commerce. The business association is finding the weak spots in the body prolific and by business-like treatment is applying remedial agencies. The recent notable improvement of many American cities stands to the credit of the new spirit back of the modern association of commerce.

In my humble opinion, Denver has a magnificent opportunity to put promotive and constructive agencies at work. Certain it is that great results will come if the intelligence, energy and loyalty of your business and professional men have a proper channel for their expression. This channel is provided in your Chamber of Commerce.

And gentlemen, do not forget that the credit and honour of Denver are largely in your keeping. Denver has won a good name among the citizens of this Republic and a good name is the best advertising you can have.

In your great work of cooperation the question is not how little, but how much, you can give in the interests of your people. See to it, that preventive and constructive measures take the place of correction and reform, and, if you follow unswervingly the safe and sane principles of business, Denver will rise in the admiration of the nation as high as its altitude. For my part, I think it possible to make this beautiful Denver of yours a gem of cities, the crown of American municipal attainment.

NEW BUILDINGS FOR THE EXHIBITION

If the City Will Buy the Grounds.---Annual Meeting of the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition Held This Afternoon.---No Insurance Against Bad Weather.

The annual meeting of the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition Society was held in the city council chambers this afternoon. Mr. R. H. Leary President, presided. Anumber of the directors and members of the different committees were present. In his opening remarks Mr. Leary emphasized the necessity of having a new grand stand at the show grounds He pointed out the poor accommodation at the grounds. He also said that repairs were no use. The Board had agreed that they would spend $10,000 on buildings, if the city would supply the grounds. He said he thought it was up to the city to act. They could own the grounds and the Society could own the buildings. The present grounds are leased at $400 per year, and next year was the last year of the lease. Mr. Leary pointed out that it was no use trying to hold a show under the present conditions. He then asked those present if they would hold the show next year in the old buildings or build new ones.

At this point Secretary-Treasurer Mr. F. J. A. Hall read a statement of the list of the exhibits of last show, also the returns.

Moved by Mr. Collins, seconded by Mr. Garbutt, that the report be adopted.—Carried.

Mr. Leary received a letter regarding insuring the Society against the failure of gate receipts on account of bad weather.

Mr. Leary explained to them that it was a scheme to help the Society out in case of bad weather.

Mr. W. M. Collins said that it was difficult to say how much damage a rainy day would do. And he was not in favour on account of the trouble there might be. He said that if they got a shower at all, they might lay a claim and not collect the claim—the greatest amount to a single Society being $300.00, and $10,000 to the total number of societies. There were about 390 societies in the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Leary explained that this would reduce the Government grant. The cost of insurance would be $71 per year.

Moved by Mr. Collins that the proposition be voted against, seconded by Mr. Turner.—Carried.

Mr. Deyell moved that the Field Crop competition be held in 1911, and that the grain be white oats; seconded by Mr. Moore. Carried.

"Shall there be Department judges," asked the President.

All present seemed to be in favour of Judges.

Mr. Leary proposed that the Society ask for Department Judges for the horses and cattle, and also a judge for poultry. About five judges would be necessary, two for cattle, two for horses, and one for poultry.

Mr. Turner moved that the judges be secured; seconded by Mr. Garbutt. —Carried.

Mr. Leary asked that $1.00 be given to entitle the Society to belong to the Fairs' Association of Ontario, in Toronto.—Carried.

Mr. Turner moved that Mr. Leckie Wilson be asked to a meeting and address the Council, on behalf of the Society. It was also suggested that he address the County Council at a public meeting. This was seconded by Mr. Collins.—Carried.

The election of officers was the next subject to be dealt with. Mr. Leary wished to thank the Board of Directors for the hearty support they had given him during 1908-9-10. And wished them all kinds of success.

Election of Officers.

Moved by Mr. Collins, seconded by Mr. Garbutt, that the Secretary-Treasurer, Mr. F. J. A. Hall, occupy the chair.

Moved by Mr. Garbutt, seconded by Mr. Elliott, that Mr. Leary be re-elected President.

Mr. Leary declined, giving reasons and moved that Mr. Garbutt be President. Mr. Garbutt also declined, giving reasons, and re-nominated Mr. Leary.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Collins and seconded by Mr. Turner, that Mr. Garbutt be First Vice President.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Elliott, seconded by Mr. Deyell, that Mr. S. F. Redmond be Second Vice-President.

An amendment, moved by Mr. Storey, and seconded by Mr. S. F. Redmond, that Mr. Wm. Collins be 2nd Vice President.—Carried.

Mr. Collins moved that the two officers of Secretary and Treasurer be split, which would relieve the men of the overwork.

Mr. Turner said that he brought up the matter last year, of separating the two offices and he thought it necessary.

Mr. Garbutt moved an amendment that the office be left as it is, and that a bond be given by the Secretary-Treasurer and paid for by the Society.—Amendment carried.

Mr. Hall was again elected Secretary and Treasurer.

Mr. Turner moved, seconded by Mr. Cox, that the Secretary-Treasurer's salary be increased $25 per year. —Carried.

The Board of Directors were elected as follows:

George E. Elliott, S. Deyell, W.B. Stewart, J. J. Turner, John Brown, R. J. Munro, R. Vance, G. A. Gillespie, W. E. Conway, Jas. Baptie, S A. Oke, Dr. King, J. A. VERY SHORT AND RIGHT TO THE POINT

Frank Miller Tells Why He Recommends Dodd's Kidney Pills

He Used Them for Rheumatism, Heart Disease and Lumbago, and They Went Right to the Root of His Troubles.

ELKMOUTH, B.C., Jan. 20.—(Special—Frank Miller, section foreman on the railroad here, whose work exposes him to all kinds of weather, has discovered that Dodd's Kidney Pills are a sovereign remedy for those Kidney ills that almost invariably follow neglected colds.

"For four years I suffered from Lumbago, Heart Disease and Rheumatism, brought on from a cold," says Mr. Miller, "And I got the very best results from using Dodd's Kidney pills I freely recommend Dodd's Kidney Pills to anyone suffering from these diseases."

Short and to the point, that statement, isn't it? But it is just like Dodd's Kidney Pills. They go right to the point. They cure the Kidneys. Healthy Kidneys strain all the impurities out of the blood. Pure blood means good circulation and renewed life and energy all over the body.

Thus Dodd's Kidney Pills not only cure disease. They tone up the whole body and make a man feel that he has been given a new lease of life. That's why people all over Canada are shouting the praises of Dodd's Kidney Pills.

The Story Of A Trip Abroad

By Miss E. M. Shea, of Deseronto

I had looked forward to a visit to Rome as a great event in my life and my presentment of emotion with which I should behold the eternal city, proved correct, approaching the first discernible sight of Rome was the great cupola of St. Peters, cutting like a huge peak in the clear sky. An arrival in the eternal city is very different from that of any other city or town in Europe. I gazed upon the scene with intense and mingled feeling. The world could show nothing grander and that glorious temple of St. Peter's surpasses all power of description. What a sight! Above the great dome and below the grand embracing colonnade. The interior bursts upon the astonished gaze resplendent in light, magnificence and beauty, beyond all the imagination can conceive, as I walked slowly up the long nave empanelled with the rarest marbles and adorned with every art of sculpture, Mosiac and fresco. I caught through the lofty arches openings views of chapels and tombs, and altars of surpassing beauty and splendor. The cupola is glorious, viewed in design, its attitude or even its decorations; viewed either whole or as a part, it enchants the eye, it satisfies the taste, and expands the soul, and beneath the wonderful crypt in which a circle of 86 golden lamps burn around the tomb of the poor fisherman of Galilee, one of the most sacred spots on earth, for where St. Peter is there, is the church, and where the church is, there is no death but life eternal. Here the very air seems to eat all that is harsh and leaves nothing but heavenly sublime to feast on and if such honour and magnificance already surrounded mortals here, to what splendor shall the elect attain in the celestial mansions and all St. Peter's surpassing splendor, unparalled in beauty, in magnificence and one of the noblest and most woderful works of man. It was a beautiful morning and everything looked to advantage as we drove to the top of the Pincian Hill, for a birdseye view of the City, winding our way up over roads shaded with Cypress trees and lined with gardens and beautiful flowers. At the end of the drive we found ourselves on a terrace high above Rome, north of the City, which covered the hills and filled the valley of the Tiber, winding along not far beneath us. The scene was glorious, it was one I had longed to see, and was now looking at. Ah, so much to awaken, to elevate, to touch the heart. It is not in one class of Roman interests alone that much is to be learned, those who devote themselves exclusively to one subject or period take only half of the blessing of Rome and perhaps the half which has the least human sympathy in it. Rome was not only once the Capital of the world, but also the centre of all that was inspiring in art and learning. It has priceless collections of ancient manuscripts, and is celebrated for its sculpture and architecture as well as for its business and social advantages. As we drive through the streets passing magnificent turnous, filled with richly-dressed ladies and gentlemen, everywhere we turn are many wonderful buildings. The City has scores of museums, and many picture galleries. I used to feel I did not quite appreciate sculpture, but when I visited the Vatican Museum, Statue and Art Galleries, I only knew what marble could be. The ruins are of great interest, the vast amphitheatre with the walls half in ruins, is all that is left of the Coliseum, the greatest show ground of all times. There the lions, tigers and other wild beasts once fought together and there, men, women and children were thrown to them, because they were Christians, to give the heathen Romans a show. A little to the left of the Coliseum is the Forum where the Romans held their metings and where the greatest of the Roman orations were uttered. The Rome of olden times was many feet below the Rome of to-day, but the Forum has been dug out and now forms a great pit filled with broken columns and blocks of marble in the heart of the City. We visited many of the beautiful churches the holy stairs and in the church of St. Peter in Chains, we saw the chains with which St. Peter was bound in the prison in Jerusalem, it also contained the tomb of Julius II, by Michael Angelo, who carved here the very celebrated statue of Moses, considered to be one of his most remarkable works. Agrippa's Panthean is a masterpiece of ancient Rome. Not having windows, it is lighted by an opening in the centre

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC ELEVATOR AT FORT WILLIAM.

THIS recently constructed Elevator of the Grand Trunk Pacific is of fire-proof construction throughout. It rests on over 11,000 piles, driven 50 feet in the ground. The foundations on top of the piles are entirely of concrete, and above the concrete foundations are the super-structures built of re-inforced concrete and steel.

Its capacity is 3,250,000 bushels of grain, but is only one small section of the great system of elevators which, will in a few years, border the docks of the Mission Terminal. The plans show three great piers devoted to the grain traffic. On each side of each is to be built a working elevator to unload in a 10-hour day 200 freight cars loaded with grain and to drop 75,000 bushels of grain every hour of the day if required into lake vessels lying alongside the elevators. Each working house will have connected with its storage, elevators to hold 10,000,000 bushels. And this is on each side of the three piers. Two hundred cars in a 10-hour day, 400 cars in a 20-hour day, at six places, means 2,400 cars a day when all of the elevators are finished. Three hundred thousand bushels an hour into vessels; 10,000,000 bushels storage at each working elevator; 60,000,000 bushels at six, working elevators. It is a plan for the future, but for a future which no one who knows the grain country will be willing to deny capable, of arriving.

"THOMAS MOORE" WAS THE SUBJECT DISCUSSED BY THE LITERARY SOCIETY

Enjoyable Programme at St. Alphonsus Lyceum Last Night—New Director Was Introduced.

MOORE'S SONGS SUNG

A highly successful meeting was held under the auspices of St. Peter's Ladies' Literary Society in St. Alphonsus' Lyceum last night. The subject for the evening was "Thomas Moore."

The programme was opened with a song entitled, "Kathleen Mavourneen" which was very beautifully rendered by Miss Genevieve Sullivan and Miss K. Gannon.

Miss Bernice Giroux followed with an excellent paper on the early life and manhood of Thomas Moore, and Miss Veronica Carveth presented a paper covering the latter days of the poet's life. Mr. Harry Quinlan gave a song entitled "Killarney," and he responded to an enthusiastic encore by singing the song entitled "Soldier Boy."

Miss Beatrice Malane next followed with a paper entitled, "The Poetry of Thomas Moore," which proved to be an excellent production of the subject in hand.

Miss Hurley, the president of the society, occupied the chair.

The Rev. Father McCarthy, the new director of the Society, was introduced by the Rev. Father McColl, who also gave a speech covering the benefits of a Literary Society to a community.

PROF. JACKSON ADDRESSES MINISTERIAL ASSOCIATION

Victoria University Professor and Exponent of Higher Criticism, Talks of the Preachers Past and Present of Great Britain---A Most Enjoyable Event.

The Ministerial Association of Peterborough and vicinity enjoyed a rare treat last night, in an address which was delivered before the ministers and their wives by Professor Jackson of Toronto. At the last meeting of the Association it was decided to invite occasionally some distinguished man from the outside to come and address them. Professor Jackson was invited to speak on a subject which one of the ministers had heard him speak on in another city: "The Preachers of Britain of Yesterday and To-day." He prefrred his address to be of an informal character, and more in the nature of a chat, on a few of the men to whom his own personal indebtedness is very great. He said unquestionably the theree greatest preachers of Britain in the last part of the nineteenth century were C. H. Spurgeon, Joseph Parker and Canon Lyddon. Spurgeon's printed sermons are a disappointment. One had to hear the man—to listen to the music of his incomparable voice, and come under the magic of his personality, to appreciate him. Parker was unquestionably a supreme genius, though his influence is now on the wane. The three preachers whom he singled out for special mention were: Dr. Alex. McLaren of Manchester, Dr. Dale of Birmingham, and Dean Church. The debt of the speaker to Dr. McLaren was very great. He had put a steady hand upon him and helped him to be certain of the certain things. There is no better model for a young preacher than he. He was without a rivl as an expository preacher. Dr. Dale was the foremost Nonconformist Theologian of the nineteenth century. But his theology was that of a man in contact with daily life. He not only had regard to the thing to be said, but to the way of saying it. He evidently had taken Burke as the model of his style, though it was sometimes said of him that his style was too massive and stately. He was never afraid of tackling a great subject. Too much of the preaching of to-day is suburban in character. God help the preachers who do not know how to preach on the great texts of the Bible.

Dr. Jackson spoke in glowing terms in his appreciation of Dean Church. He was an intimate friend of Newman, and the strongest man of the Tractarian Movement, a saner and stronger man than Newman. He was the most influential minister of the last century. He was himself a hater of the superlative, yet no man so provokes it in others when they speak of him. A distinguished literary critic said of a volume of his sermons that it was the greatest in the English language. Hugh Price Hughes was spoken of as one of the great preachers of British Methodism. He was one of the most alert and quick-witted debaters the speaker ever heard, and one of the most effective preachers. He used to say of his preaching that his one business was to win a verdict for Jesus Christ. He was never seen to better advantage than under the cross-fire of debate. He always woke up when the bullets began to sing round him. It was in his evening service that he did most abiding work for Jesus Christ. He changed radically the pulpit style of Methodism. His style was clean-cut, terse, incisive. He gave us a new type of evangeliam.

Speaking of the great preachers of to-day, he touched upon John McNeill, whom he spoke of as a man who gave promise of great things in his early day, but who is a great, unfulfilled prophecy, a spent volcano. Of Alexander Whyte he said that he is one of the most living and vital of preachers. He is a prodigious reader. The speaker once heard him say that he had just finished reading Carlyle's "Cromwell" for the tenth time. He is unequalled in his power of revealing to men the corruption of their own hearts. A critic once said of him that he was a specialist in sin and punishment, and if he did not know the devil personally, he knew Boston and Edwards, who did.

Among others whom the speaker touched upon was the present Bishop of Oxford. The most distinguished belonging to the Congregational Church are Campbell, Morgan, Dr. Horton, and Jowett of Birmingham. There is no greater preacher in the English language than Jowett. He is evangelical to the core. He had that peculiar thing, that witchery of heaven, which we call unction. Of R. J. Campbell of New Theology fame, he said that his theology was like a bad negative: it was under-developed and over-exposed.

At the close of Dr. Jackson's address, which was enjoyed by all, a vote of thanks was moved by Mr. Webb and seconded by Canon Davidson. All expressed themselves as delighted with the beautiful evangelical spirit of the speaker and his charming personality. It is a pity that a man who has been so eminently used of God, and whose influence is so potent for the Kingdom of Christ, should be made the subject of a lot of ignorant criticism by men who know nothing of his positive teaching. Here is an extract which we print from one of his sermons, and we give it to our readers, and leave it with them, to say whether or not he is a dangerous man. The extract is as follows:

"And if the Gospel can only tell us of a perfect example to be copied, then for ninety-nine out of every hundred of us it can be no Gospel, no "good news" at all. If it puts before us the life of the human Jesus and says, "Imitate that," and after that has no more that it can do, then is our last case worse almost than the first; our ideal is heightened immeasurably; our power remains where it was. But, thank God, He, who is our example is also our new life. Christ is not only there, without me, as pattern; He is also here, within me, as power. Name your heroes in literature and history; there is not one of them who can share his own powers with you. Christ can and does. We may live in Him and He in us, and all the forces that wrought in Him may work in our lives, too. Young men, there is but one source of abiding strength; it is here. "Be strengthened in the Lord". Will you seek it?

A RARE TREAT FOR PETERBOROUGH

Mr. Edward Terry Coming Here in "Sweet Lavender"

Mr. Edward Terry, the distinguished actor who is making a tour of Canada with his London company, will present one of the most famous Terry successes, "Sweet Lavender," on Friday, Jan. 27, at the "Grand." This play was originally produced at Terry's Theatre on March 21st, 1888, and at that time it ran for over two years. Since its original production Mr. Terry has played the part of Dick Phenyl, the eccentric hero, over 4,000 times in London, and the provinces. Of all the characters he has created in his forty odd years on the stage, none has been more admirably adapted to display his great gifts as a comedian. It will be a rare theatrical event for Peterborough, which our playgoers will avail themselves to see this admirable comedian and his company. Mr. Terry is enroute to Australia and is making this transcontinental Canadian tour the first stage of the journey.

Miss Barbara Tennant and the Spanish Mother.

The story of the Spanish mother by Sir F. W. Boyle, as told in verse by Barbara Tennant, is a dramatic episode of the Spanish wars, showing the great devotion of the proud Spanish women of those times to their men and their intense hatred of the enemies of their country. The poem opens with a very vivid picture of some French soldiers, ravenously hungry, coming across a wounded Spaniard being attended to by his devoted wife. In a fit of savage hatred the Frenchmen killed the Spaniard and dragged the woman away to procure food and drink for them, otherwise they would tear her limb from limb. The wife, dry-eyed rose with a strong resolution writ large on her features. Saying she would give them food and wine, she went into her cottage, closely followed by her relentless persecutors. She placed food in front of them and after a little while, wine. The soldiers suspected her object, poison, but the woman with calmness, to convince them, was about to drink, when the leader, seeing her child rolling on the floor, and knowing something of a mother's love, commanded the woman to give the wine to the infant. She at once complied, satisfying the brutes, they drank too.

Débauched with the liquor, the soldiers heard the wail of the child in agony, and then the dreadful truth came home to them that, in spite of their precaution, they were poisoned. They rushed to the woman to tear her to pieces, but too late. She had already drank of the wine and with a hatred begotten of the murdering of her man, twitted the savage brutes as devils only fitted to war on the defenseless. Then, with a majesty worthy of the Amazons of old, as she lay dying, spoke of the love of child as even less than the love of revenge for wrongs to her country and her love.

As one listens to Barbara Tennant in this little masterpiece, one is filled with awe. The intensity of the situation, the hatred of the woman dominating over the love of life, the passion of the wife who sees her husband done to death before her own eyes, all give Miss Tennant an opportunity to display her marvellous power of emotion and expression.

FOUR BURNED IN A TORONTO FIRE

Mother and Three Children Perish in an Early Morning Blaze---Maid Jumped to Safety---Father is Away in Chicago and Neighbours Wire the News.

Toronto, Jan. 21.—Mrs. Percy G. Brooks and her three children were burned to death in an early morning fire here.

The eldest child was five years of age. Two were girls and one a boy.

A fire that partially destroyed the frame house, 435 Indian Road, at an early hour this morning was responsible for the deaths. The fire apparently started near the furnace and worked its way into the upper part of the house, cutting off all escape for the family. The maid jumped from a rear window and escaped.

Mr. Brooks, manager and treasurer of the Fairbanks-Morris Manufacturing Co., is in Chicago on business. He was telegraphed to by neighbors immediately on the body becoming known. At 2.30 the fire was under control.

GAS, HEARTBURN AND DYSPEPSIA VANISH

Makes Your Out-of-Order Stomach Feel Fine in Five Minutes

You can eat anything your stomach craves without fear of Indigestion or Dyspepsia, or that your food will ferment or sour on your stomach, if you will take a little Diapepsin occasionally.

Your meals will taste good, and any thing you eat will be digested; nothing can ferment or turn into acid or poison or stomach gas, which causes Belching, Dizziness, a feeling of fullness after eating, Nausea, Indigestion (like a lump of lead in the stomach), Biliousness, Heartburn, Water brash, Pain in the stomach and intestines or other symptoms.

Headaches from the stomach are absolutely unknown where this effective remedy is used. Diapepsin really does all the work of a healthy stomach. It digests your meals when your stomach can't. A single dose will digest all the food you eat and leave nothing to ferment or sour and upset the stomach.

Get a large 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin from your druggist, and start taking now, and in a little while you will actually brag about your healthy, strong Stomach, for you then can eat anything and everything you want without the slightest discomfort or misery, and every particle of impurity and Gas that is in your stomach and intestines is going to be carried away without the use of laxatives or any other assistance.

Should you at this moment be suffering from Indigestion or any stomach disorder, you can get relief within five minutes.

CROMPTON REFUNDS

Returns $10,700 Given to Him by Manager Travers, and Others May Follow the Example.

RESTITUTION MADE

Toronto, Jan. 21.—Restitutions have begun in the Farmers' Bank case, and $10,700 has been returned by F. Crompton of the Crompton Corset Co. This is the first amount to be so returned, but it is understood that other sums have been tentatively offered by those who got money irregularly from the bank. Prosecutions may follow in some of these cases even after any restitution may be made.

The money returned by Mr. Crompton is the $10,000 received by him for $100,000 Keeley Mines, Ltd., stock which was given him by Travers to induce him to deposit $190,000 in the bank. The deposit was made and the stock transferred. When the deposit was withdrawn, Travers asked for the return of the stock, and Mr. Crompton agreed to return it upon payment of $10,000, which was paid him by Travers. The balance of the restitution is for moneys wrongfully paid out by the bank to Mr. Crompton as interest.

It was also learned yesterday that Messrs. J. M. Godfrey and T. N. Phelan of the legal firm of Robinette, Godfrey & Phelan, are now in New York advising with George Wishart, the Gotham broker, with regard to his possible return to Canada to give himself up to face the charge of conspiring with Dr. Beattie Nesbitt to steal $300,000 from the bank.

"They want to see him about the titles of certain mining properties in Porcupine," said Mr. Robinette, K.C., when asked about the mission of his partners to Wishart. "I do not know that we have been retained to act for Mr. Wishart in connection with the charge made against him. He may have retained both or either of them, and they may have seen Mr. Corley with regard to bail for him, which I understand will be granted, as is usual, should he return. But I do not know anything about it more than this."

The four provisional directors of the bank, Dr. John Ferguson, Provincial Archivist Alex. Fraser, A. S. Lown, barrister, and John Watson, ex-mayor of Listowel, Ont., were arraigned in the Police Court yesterday. All pleaded not guilty to the charge of conspiring to obtain $10,000 to answer which they were summoned. Magistrate Denison declared that he would not try this case, but that it must be sent to a jury. He gave as his reason that there was not time to properly investigate the case in the Police Court. Mr. Hugh E. Rose, representing the defendants, declared that as "the public mind is in such a state that every man mentioned in connection with this case is presumed be guilty until innocent," his clients were anxious for a speedy trial. The case was adjourned till Thursday morning. There was a great crowd in the court room to see these prominent gentlemen arraigned, and many were disappointed at the brief hearing.

As soon as they left the court room all four of the defendants were closeted with Inspector Duncan in his office for a short time. What was the nature of the conference could not be learned. Travers was not brought up from the jail to be used as a witness, but will be on Thursday next, when the hearing is continued.

Curator G. T. Clarkson is still confined to his house, and will not likely be at his office in the bank building until Monday, and may be away even longer than that.

Breaking the Ice.

Gloucester, Mass., Jan. 21.—Local fishing interests were gratified yesterday by the receipt of a private despatch from Newfoundland, saying that three Gloucester fishing boats, caught in the Bay of Islands, have been liberated by the Newfoundland cruiser Fiona. The vessels are the S. P. Willard, Ella M. Goodwin and the Dauntless.

As the cruiser was under no obligation to attempt to break the ice about the fishermen, the action is appreciated here as a bit of international courtesy.

Reject Mediation.

Guayaquil, Ecuador, Jan. 21.—Jose Fearita, the Ecuadorean Secretary for Foreign Affairs, yesterday made reply to the joint note of the United States, Brazil and Argentine, rejecting their attempt at mediation and the suggestion that the dispute be submitted to The Hague tribunal.

A "CURE"? FOR BALDNESS

The above expression is one which is used frequently in connection with hair preparations. Just exactly what is meant by it in each instance is a question. Baldness is not a disease and hence, does not permit of a cure. It is a result invariably to be traced to the dandruff germ and if the condition has become chronic, that is, if there is complete atrophy of the hair follicles, a "cure" is absolutely impossible.

Approaching baldness, seen in falling hair, may always be checked and if the hair follicles are not atrophied the hair may be induced again to grow.

This is accomplished by regular applications of Newbro's Herpicide which cleanses the scalp and kills the dandruff germ. The destruction of the germ does away with the accumulations of scarf skin and thus eliminates the most common enemy to beautiful hair.

Soft, glossy, fluffy hair cannot grow on a scalp infested with dandruff any more than a delicate plant can grow on an ash heap. The scalp must be kept clean and free from dandruff. The best remedy for doing this is Newbro's Herpicide which receives the highest endorsement from professional men, the stage and the best people everywhere.

Herpicide is sold and guaranteed in one dollar size bottles by all druggists. Applications obtained at first-class barber shops and hair dressing parlours.

Address The Herpicide Co., Dept. R., Detroit, Mich., enclosing 10c. in postage or silver for sample and booklet.

YESTERDAY IN HOUSE

Hon. Geo. E. Foster Takes Exception to Things—The House Sat on Supply.

CASE OF PRISONER

Ottawa, Jan. 21.—The House of Commons sat in supply last night, Hon. Dr. Pugsley presenting for approval appropriations for public buildings in Ontario.

Dr. Edwards made a vehement attack on the expenditures being made on drill halls and armories. He called upon the Government to inaugurate an investigation into the cost of militia and defence as compared with "the allowances grudgingly made to agriculture." He assured the House that Canada was today "paying far too much for fuss and feathers, and levying too heavy a toll for red tape and gold braid."

In the absence of the Minister of Militia, Dr. Pugsley suggested that the Kingston Military Institute estimate stand over.

Dr. Edwards referred again to the report published in The Kingston Standard concerning the inhuman treatment of a prisoner who had been discharged from the penitentiary without sufficient clothing to withstand the cold of winter, or sufficient money to purchase necessaries. Dr. Edwards noted that the Minister of Justice in his remarks on Thursday had dealt with only one case, but The Kingston Standard had declared that more than one prisoner had been released without sufficient clothing.

Sir Alan Aylesworth replied that he was endeavoring in satisfying the House that, so far as the warden and officials of the institution were concerned, they had obeyed the rules of the Department. But he thought the Penitentiaries Act had in mind the low temperature of Canadian winter, for prisoners had the option of remaining in the penitentiary during the winter months after the sentence had expired. The clothing which the prisoner had when he entered the penitentiary was returned to him, also the regulation suit, and a sum of money.

Dr. Sproule did not think much of the privilege which allowed a prisoner to stay longer in jail until the winter cold had passed. He thought it was only natural that they would want to get out as soon as possible.

R. S. Lake (Qu'Appelle), introduced a discussion upon the new departmental building on Sussex street, which is to cost $3,500,000. He said the archives building was in no way worthy of the country. He urged that the design of the new building should be a credit to the country.

He considered that the architects of the present day were on just as high a level as those of the past, and they had a pretty good example of modern architecture in the splendid building which was being erected by the Grand Trunk Railway in Ottawa. He could not help thinking that if a proper effort were made the new departmental buildings would be made just as worthy to occupy the situation they will occupy in the capital as the Parliament Buildings.

Mr. Pugsley said that prizes had been awarded for the design of the new building, but the Department of Public Works had decided not to accept any of the plans. New plans had been prepared by the architects of the Department, Referring to changes which had been made in the departmental plans subsequently, the Minister stated that these had been rendered necessary by an arrangement with the Improvement Commission.

George H. Perley asked the Premier if the report from Washington, that the draft reciprocity treaty had been forwarded to Ottawa for the approval of the Ottawa Government, was correct.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier: "It is certainly premature."

Ontario estimates were reached on going to supply, and the first item to be dealt with was $5,600 for a post-office and customs house at Athens. Athens is in Leeds, and the members of the Opposition arrived at the conclusion that it was in the constituency of Brockville, represented by Hon. George P. Graham. There was a cry that the vote was intended to help the Minister of Railways.

Mr. Pugsley did not know whether Athens was in the constituency of the Minister, or of Mr. Taylor, the Conservative whip.

Hon. Geo. E. Foster criticised the policy of the Government in maintaining a public building at the expense of the Public Works Department after it was completed. He contended that after it had been turned over to the postoffice and customs departments they should be charged with the cost of maintenance, which would show more clearly on the administrative statements of these branches of the Government.

Champagne Going to Waste.

Paris, Jan. 21.—Mediation conferences began yesterday to settle the dispute between discontented employes and the vineyard owners and champagne makers, which has resulted in the destruction of much property and the loss of thousands of gallons of wine and champagne.

It is believed that the Government will soon be able to establish the former good feeling between employers and employed.

AMERICAN SPIES?

Senator Landry Says They Took Plans of Quebec.

Ottawa, Jan. 21.—In the Senate yesterday Senator Landry was informed that complaint had been made as to the quality of the food served by Jacques Dery, restaurant keeper in the immigration building at Quebec. However, it was impossible to please everybody, and there were many patrons of the place who had made complaint. This matter would be investigated.

Hon. Mr. Landry was told the Naval Department proposes to post advertisements for the purpose of informing persons who desire to enter the navy of a means by which they can do so. Postmasters of several of the largest cities will be the recruiting officers, and will be paid $2 for each man they enlist for the navy.

Senator Landry asked if the Government had been informed that at the time of the Tercentenary celebration at Quebec, Americans disguised as English sailors were able to visit the Beaumont forts, and to become acquainted with the details of their construction and their armaments.

Sir Richard Cartwright replied, "No special instructions were given to guard against the admission of strangers to defence works at Quebec during the Tercentenary. The district officer commanding at Quebec has been asked to report on this matter."

Senator Thompson moved the second reading of the bill fixing the weight of a barrel of potatoes at 160 pounds. He explained that a weight standard for a barrel of potatoes had become necessary by the development of export trade to the West Indies.

Senator Cloran said that flour barrels were used for apples and potatoes, and they would not hold more than 150 pounds.

Senator Thompson replied that there was nothing in the bill requiring 160 pounds of potatoes to be put into a barrel, but the bill was designed to provide for the measurement of carloads or cargo lots in bulk.

Sir Richard Cartwright stated that in committee he would have some amendments which would make the bill clearer. The bill was given its second reading.

Eggs Rejected In New York?

Montreal, Jan. 21.—Dr. Lachapelle of the Board of Control and Dr. McCarrey, chief of the civic pure food department think that there is danger of Montreal being made a dumping ground for the foodstuffs rejected by New York and other neighboring cities.

"I am convinced," said Dr. Lachapelle yesterday, "that those eggs which we ordered removed on Thursday were rejected in New York before they came here. The people exporting this stuff are after money. They would not care if half the people in the city were made sick if they made a few thousand dollars. They must be shown that Montreal is closed against their improper food. And to accomplish this we have given instructions to Dr. McCarrey to report every case which seems to him to be at all suspicious."

The representatives of the owners of the frozen eggs, being interviewed yesterday, stated that the eggs complained of were perfectly wholesome and pure, and that the city had acted in a very arbitrary and unjust manner in regard to the affair.

"The city now proposes to confiscate the shipment on the strength of a single representative," he said, "although it has a contradictory report in its possession, without giving the owners any chance whatever to be heard.

"The owners of the shipment certainly will not submit to any such action on the part of the city."

Respect to Departed Judge.

Toronto, Jan. 21.—The funeral service of the late Mr. Justice Hugh MacMahon was solemnized in St. Michael's Cathedral at 9.30 yesterday morning. Rev. Father Teefy, a close friend of deceased, sang the high mass of requiems, and Rev. S. McGrath acted as deacon. Mrs. S. Coffey played the music. The body was interred in Mount Hope Cemetery.

Two sons, D'Arcy MacMahon and Harold MacMahon, survive and were the chief mourners at the service. A very large number of floral tributes covered the casket.

The honorary pallbearers were Sir William Meredith; Sir Charles Moss, Sir John Boyd, Sir William Mulock, Sir Glenholme Falconbridge, Mr. Justice Teetzel, Hon. J. J. Foy, Mr. Duncan Coulson, Mr. D. R. Wilkie, Hon. Wallace Nesbitt, Mr. Angus Sinclair and Mr. J. S. Willison.

An Encouraging Message

I have a message of hope and good cheer, of encouragement and inspiration to every suffering woman. I have endured the torture due to female troubles and the consequent despondency and mental agony almost to the point of despair, and I have been restored from this condition to a state of vigorous health, and to the happy, exhilarating frame of mind which accompanies physical well being. This change has been brought about wholly by the use of ORANGE LILY.

In addition I have had the pleasure and pleasure of inducing multitudes of other suffering women to give ORANGE LILY a trial, and have received thousands of enthusiastic acknowledgments of the blessings it has brought to them. The following is a sample:

Truro, N. S., April 5, 1909.

Dear Mrs. Currah,—Your very kind letter was received yesterday, In reply to your question about my health, I am thankful to say that I am very well. As I have never given you a statement of my case you may be interested in it.

For several years I have suffered untold agony. This suffering was continuous, but I would have violent attacks every few weeks, each attack lasting several days. The first Sunday in November, I felt the pain increasing and we did not go to prayers. The rest of the family did go, and soon after the forcing down pains seized me and I had to remain on the floor until their return. I was in great pain all night and was very sick for a whole week.

Then Mrs. L. came to see me and told me of your wonderful medicine. I got my husband to send for it right away, as I was too sick to write myself. (My doctor could do nothing for me.) I have used 5 boxes of ORANGE LILY, have had three months of good rest, and am now well, never better in my life. I have not had the old pains since. I often ask my husband if it is myself that is going around and doing my own work. I can scarcely believe it. It brings tears of joy to my eyes. I could shout it to all the world. I cannot speak enough in its praise.

Your friend,
MRS. E. H. F.

Receiving, as I do, dozens of such reports each day, I feel impelled to make known to my suffering sisters the merits of ORANGE LILY. It differs from other so-called remedies in that it is not taken internally. It is a strictly local treatment, and is applied directly to the affected organs. Its curative elements are absorbed into the congested tissues, expelling the stagnant foreign matter which has been irritating the membrane and oppressing the nerves, and a growing feeling of physical and mental relief is noticeable almost from the start. It is a positive, scientific remedy, and even if you use no more than the Free Trial treatment you will be very materially benefited.

FREE TRIAL OFFER

I want every reader of this, who suffers in any way from painful monthly periods, irregularities, leucorrhoea, inflammation or congestion of the womb, pains in the back, etc., to send me their addresses, and I will forward at once, without charge, a 10 days' treatment. If your case is not far advanced it may entirely cure you, and in any event it will do you much good. I am so earnest in making this statement, and so positive that it is true, that I trust every sufferer who reads this notice will take advantage of my offer and get cured at home, without a doctor's bill. Address, enclosing 3 stamps, MRS. FRANCES E. CURRAH, Windsor, Ont.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

PETERBOROUGH NEEDS THE GAME ON TUESDAY

A Win May Give Them the District—Trenton Will Have a Hard Task Winning Out in Cobourg, Judging by Last Night's Game in Trenton.

Not in years has there been so much interest in a hockey game in Peterborough as there is being evidenced over Tuesday night's game here between Trenton and Peterborough intermediates. There is so much at stake in the game that the excitement promises to reach the fever heat stage by the time the puck is faced. The crowd will undoubtedly be the biggest in some years. Despite the big league which Trenton had on the Petes in th game there last week, the local team is confident of reversing the decision. It is certain that the Petes will be in far better shape than they were last week and the team will be stronger in all points. On their own ice Trenton are practically invincible, but it is said that they are not nearly so good on the road. That remains to be seen, but it is certain that they will be handicapped to some extent on the smaller ice surface here, and with the Petes strengthened and in shape, they will have a very awkward proposition in front of them if they hope to get away with a victory. A win for Peterborough will tie the district, and if it were followed up by a defeat of the Trenton team at Cobourg would give the local team the group honours. The standing is as follows:

	Won	Lost	To Pl'y
Trenton	4	0	2
Peterborough	3	1	2
Cobourg	1	3	2
Belleville	1	5	0

Games to be played:—Trenton at Peterborough, Trenton at Cobourg, Cobourg at Peterborough.

Toronto Newspaper Men Want A Game Here And Will Be Taken On

The sporting editor of the Examiner has received a letter from a former Peterborough newspaperman in Toronto, in which the Peterborough newspapermen now living in Toronto challenge the Peterborough scribes to a game of hockey. The Toronto team would have a line-up which would include such well known hockey stars as Melville Jenkinson, Hutchinson, Samuel Sampson Moore, Pink Tea Huston, Harry Theobald, Geo. B. Van Blericom, Cornelius Burns, Buller Henry and others of that ilk, all of whom have shone brightly in days gone by in the historic battles between the Review and the Examiner. The "defi" it is likely, will be taken up. The newspapermen of Peterborough are not going to allow their Toronto brethren to get away with a bluff, and arrangements will likely be made for the game. The Peterborough team will go into training at once.

PILL-POUNDERS WIN BEAT RAILROADERS 8-3

The Pill-ounders, the team with the demon yell, added another top-piece to the scalps already dangling from their belts last night at Brock St. rink by trimming the Railroad seven by eight goals to three. The Transportation men were shy of steam and before the end of the game could hardly negotiate the heavy grades. Early in the struggle they made pretty fair going, but towards the end of the battle there was nothing to it but the Dope Specialists. The Railroad Kings took a leaf out of the Druggists' book and administered a hypodermic injection of morphine to Doc MacAfee, the Pill-pounders' goalkeeper, with the result that they slipped three past him before he came out of the influence. Otherwise there was nothing doing in the scoring line for the Railway men. Harry Lauder McGregor in the nets for the Railway team had more stops than a church organ and they were all needed too. Belmont Jamieson had a nice sweater and that let him out, while the rest of the team had the usual messenger boy speed. However, it is only fair to mention that the losers were handicapped by the absence of "Scout" Hardwicke who could not get a pair of skates to fit him. Charity forbids any publicity as to the size required. For the Druggists, Halpin, the abbreviated rover and Ross, the Midland importation, were the class. "Walt Mason" Curtis refereed and got away with it. The gladiators gave their names as follows:

KINGSTON'S BIG SCORE

Beat Picton on Their Own Ice 18 Goals to 7

Picton, Jan. 20.—Kingston juniors easily trimmed Picton in the O. H. A. game here to-night by 18 to 7, Picton was distinctly outclassed by Kingston's expert junior hockeyists. The Picton bunch, however, are a gritty bunch of first-year men and promise to make good material another season. Half time score 14 to 1. The line-up:

Referee—L. Marsh, Toronto.

FREEMAN PLAYED

Cobourg Used Sixteen-Year-Old Midget Against Trenton

Trenton, Jan. 20.—One of the largest crowds seen at the local rink for some time witnessed a fast and exciting intermediate O.H.A. game played here this evening with Cobourg, resulting in a victory for Trenton by 12 to 4. At half time the score was 5 to 2 in favour of the home team. Line-up:

Referee—Sproule, Toronto.

TURPIN TO PLAY

Big Point Man to be Used Against Trenton

To-night the Intermediate go to Trenton to play a schedule game. "Dick" Turpin has taken out a certificate for the locals and may play point for the balance of the season. Hand will be played on the forward line. Trenton is to play here a week from to-night and will likely run a special up.—Cobourg Sentinel-Star.

SOME HOCKEY HAPPENINGS

The Peterborough intermediate and junior O.H.A. teams will practice at Brock street rink on Monday night. A full attendance is expected, especially of the intermediates, as it will be the last practice before the big game with Trenton.

With the big improvement, Cobourg should take Trenton into camp when they meet here on Jan. 27th.—Cobourg Sentinel-Star.

The Cobourg juniors are still in the running by reason of Lindsay's defeat of Peterborough. They will play Lindsay here Tuesday evening next. Lindsay has discovered a good youngster in Dennison. The local juniors have shown considerable improvement and should give a good account of themselves.—Cobourg Sentinel-Star.

Reciprocity Is Assured.

Washington, Jan. 21.—Within two weeks from the date that the Canadian reciprocity commissioners began their conferences in Washington an agreement had been reached, so far as the executive branches of the United States and Canada are concerned, that will result in the substantial reduction of customs duties on a number of products, natural and manufactured, of the two countries.

The commissioners met at the State Department yesterday for the purpose of making a careful comparison of the various schedules involved in the arrangement, to make sure no error had crept in, and that nothing remained likely to be subject to conflicting construction in the future.

In accordance with the announcement contained in the statement given to the press when the commissioners began their work, even to-day individual commissioners felt bound to refrain from giving the least intimation as to the products affected by their negotiations. That information will be withheld until the sessions of the commissioners have reached an end, when formal announcement will be made.

Important Change In Rates.

New York, Jan. 21.—Officers of Canadian and American express companies, in conference here yesterday, announced last night a reduction in through rates soon to take effect between all offices in the United States and many in Canada. It is explained that several of the Canadian companies have held back up to the present, because the customs regulations at the Canadian border necessitates so much extra work that a reduction in existing rates would in many cases work a hardship.

All the important companies were represented, including the Adams, Canadian, American, National, Northern, Southern, Western, Pacific and United States Express Companies, Wells-Fargo & Co. and the New York and Boston Despatch. The announcement made follows in part:

"Instead of two companies which may handle an express package making a separate charge on each line, the charge will be the same as if one company had carried the package from shipping point to destination."

Forty Killed In Mine.

Warsaw, Jan. 21.—Four hundred miners were entombed alive yesterday and forty instantly killed by an explosion in the Casimir coal mine at Sosnowice on the Russo-Prussian frontier. Fire broke out following the explosion, cutting off the escape by the main shaft, but 360 cut their way through a wall separating them from a cross tunnel and came out alive. Rescue parties that were able to enter the mine after the fire had raged for several hours found forty men dead, their bodies badly mutilated.

Negligence of the mine owners to apply proper safety devices was responsible for the disaster and the arrest of three of the owners was ordered by Government officials, who arrived on the scene and directed the work of rescue.

Rioting broke out among the rescued miners and the relatives of the men who were killed and soldiers were called to prevent an attack on the mine owners when they were taken into custody.

Swallowed Oil of Cedar.

Hamilton, Jan. 21.—Edward Matthews, 98 Ashley street, took a dose of oil of cedar last night, evidently with suicidal intent. He keeps a blacksmith shop on John street, near King William, and it was there he took the poison. He lost a law suit recently over some property, and this is said to have preyed on his mind. He was taken to the City Hospital in an unconscious condition, where the stomach pump was used to good effect. He was reported to be in a serious condition, but it is thought he will recover. He is 25 years of age.

The Golden Lion's Greatest January Sale

Reductions are the Price We Pay for greater variety during the Selling Season

It is very easy to see how that is---the more variety, the greater chance of having an overstock in some particular kinds---and therefore, Reductions.

Every bit of a bargain which is offered at this Sale is intrinsically worth all of the full price, but since we were too liberal in our buying, the opportunity comes to lop off a third in some instances a half from the price.

Of course, we will have to take some losses, but our purposes is best served by selling quickly and we are making concessions to do it---You may as well save us your neighbor. :: ::

WAS A TREAT

Dr. Burwash's Lecture Was Greatly Enjoyed

A treat indeed was the lecture given in the assembly hall of the Normal School last night by Dr. Burwash, of Victoria University upon the subject of "Books—Their Uses and Abuses." There was a large audience present and Dr. Burwash's lecture was followed closely and with every indication of enjoyment. He is a scholarly and eloquent speaker and made his subject one of fascinating interest to those present. The lecture is one of a series that has been arranged for the Normal School during the winter.

THE STORY OF A TRIP ABROAD

of the cupola. This old classic temple has been used as a burial place for some of Rome's honoured men of the past. We go down in the catacombs outside of the city, which are vast caves and tunnels cut out of the soft volcanic rock, some lined with cells and shelves, which contain human bones. They were probably first dug out as a burial place of the Romans. Later, when the Christians were persecuted ,they fled to them for refuge, and lived here for years away down out of the light of the sun, having their food brought in at night. And then a great day comes, when we are received in public audience by our Holy Father Pope Pius the X, that grand, noble personage, so Christ-like and humility itself. He is indeed, in every sense of the word, our great spiritual father here on earth, and the impression was one never to be forgotten. And on the seventh anniversary of our holy father's coronation, we had the great privilege of assisting at his mass in famous Sistine Chapel, and heard that unique Gregorian chant.

The ceiling of the Sistine chapel contains this most perfect work done by Michael Angelo, in long and active life. Here his great spirit appears in its noblest dignity and in its highest purity. We visit St. Paul's gatse and the pyramid of Caius Cistus. Beneath its shadows lies the heart of Shelly, and his friend Keat is also burned here. Most of the monuments are to young people of promise, cut down on their travel, full of enthusiasm, full of enjoyment. It is a quiet, shaded nook, covered with violets and the pyramid that overshadows it, gives it a singularly classic air. You feel an interest, a sympathy you are not

FEEDING PIGS

From Farm and Dairy.

"Pigs is pigs," and prices will still run high.

The acquaintance with other breeders is a great advantage.

Keep an account with your pigs this year and see just how you come out with them.

It is simply throwing away feed, and so good money, to feed on the ground. Have good, tight feeding floors, enough for all the porkers.

Do you know that your pigs need salt as well as your sheep and cattle? They do, and if you do not want them to root give them some lime mixed with their salt. Air slacked lime is the best. Make a flat plank box three feet square and six inches deep for the lime and salt.

Did you ever notice that your pigs would eat all the coal ashes they can get? Why not let them have all your ashes? They are worth nothing to you and the pigs need them. The ashes will also help to keep them from rooting. Pigs root after something that their systems crave. A pig needs gritty stuff. Why not let them have such things?

FOODS FOR POULTRY

From Farm and Dairy.

The digestibility of the nutritive elements in our common foods is well known for all classes of farm animals except poultry. Extensive experiments to determine the digestibility of foods for poultry have been carried on at the Maine Experiment Station. It was found that the percentages of digestible protein, carbo-hydrates and fats in most foods were the same as in the case of other animals except that poultry cannot make as good use of crude fibre as can ruminants, or even horses. The conclusions arrived at from these experiments follow:

1. Corn shows a higher digestibility than any other grain tested.
2. Wheat bran shows a low digestibility and at present prices is not an economical feed.
3. A mixture of equal parts early, fine cut clover and corn meal is more digestible and a more economical feed than bran.
4. India wheat compares favorably with oats as a grain for fowls.
5. The ether extract of wheat has a low digestible coefficient.
6. Crude fibre was but very slightly digested and evidently is of but little use in a ration for poultry except to give bulkiness.
7. The mixing of about seven per cent. of bone ash with a ration consisting wholly of vegetable matter gave slightly higher average digestion coefficients than when the mixture was fed without it.

Editor, Farm and Dairy,—I feel strongly the advisability of holding a National Apple Show in Ontario next fall. I think there is no question at all about Toronto being the most suitable place to hold the show.

To make such a show the success we all would wish to see it will require a great deal more effort than the board of directors of the Ontario Fruit Growers' Association can put forth. Some of the most important apple sections have no representation on the Ontario Fruit Growers' Association board. The directors will have to be backed up by the rank and file of the leading growers all over the province. The Dominion and provincial governments, together with county, city and township councils should contribute liberally, and put up a prize list of at least $50,000.

The press all over the province should take hold of the matter and boost it. Committees should be formed in all the leading districts to encourage the growers, look after the collecting and proper packing of exhibits, or anything pertaining to the advantage of the show.

Now, Mr. Editor if we can all get busy right now, (not next summer, that will be too late) we can show the great possibilities of this province and have the honor of holding the greatest apple show ever put up in the world. The best time to commence preparing for the next show is the day after the last show is closed.

BUTTERMILK FOR HENS

From Farm and Dairy.

"Did I tell you about feeding butter-milk to my hens," said Mr. J. W. Clark, of Brant Co., Ont., a well known poultry man and Institute speaker, to an editor of Farm and Dairy, while in our office recently. "Professor Graham at the Guelph College and I have both had splendid results from feeding butter-milk. It takes the place of animal food in the ration and the germs in the butter-milk seems to have a beneficial affect on the digestive tracts of the hens. The germs that are always present in butter-milk seem to counteract other germs. We know for instance that butter-milk will cure roup.

"And then butter-milk unlike water will not freeze. If it does freeze somewhat, the hens can still eat it." "How about sweet milk for hens," Mr. Clark was asked. He replied: "I would not feed sweet milk at all. I would much prefer to have it sour and I would have it sour before I fed it to my hens. Sour milk is probably as good as butter-milk for inducing hens to lay eggs in winter."

NEGRO ARRESTED HERE ON CHARGE OF SHOOTING ANOTHER MAN IN MONTREAL

Fred Brown Taken Off the 5.25 Train Yesterday Morning by Officers Adams and Newhall —Admitted He Was Man Wanted.

TAKEN BACK TO-DAY

An important arrest was made here on Sunday morning by Constables Adams and Newhall, when Fred Brown, a coloured man, was placed under arrest, charged with shooting another coloured man in Montreal. It appears that Brown and his victim had a quarrel over a girl, and on Saturday night they had a fight, in which Brown use a 32 calibre revolver. He shot the other fellow twice, one bullet entered his chin, and the other pierced his side. At the time of going to press the bullet had not been extracted. Immediately after the shooting, Brown caught the 10 o'clock train, (C. P. R.) for the west, and had succeeded in getting as far as this city. He was arrested in the sleeper of the 5.26 here on Sunday morning and, when arrested, the revolver he had used was found under his pillow. The accused was head porter in charge of a first-class dining car on the G.T.R.

When caught here he offered no resistance, and does not deny doing the deed. Detective Biopel, of the Montreal Detective Department, arrived in the city yesterday and took his man back on the 11.38 train. The injured man may die.

"AN INTERESTING STORY"

Under the above heading the Peterborough Review republishes from "Toronto Saturday Night" an article in which it is insinuated that Mr. Stratton was instrumental in providing undue facilities for the obtaining of the charter of the Farmers' Bank. It is, indeed, an interesting "story," for it is a story in the worst sense of the word —an impudent falsehood from be ginning to end.

One would have thought that the Review, in a place like Peterborough, where the amenities of social and business relations demand fair play between citizens, and where injury to the good name of a citizen, is an injury to the good name of the city—one would have thought that the Review would have taken some pains to put such a "story" to the proof of inquiry, especially when Mr. Stratton was so easy of access, —on this occasion within a stone's throw of the Review office. Before spreading broadcast a slanderous falsehood, the Review might, in fairness have made inquiry, and followed the universally observed journalistic rule in such cases, to print both sides of a story. It might have asked if the "story" was true before publishing locally a statement that does a gross injustice to a citizen who does not try to make capital out of intermeddling with private affairs.

There is not one iota of truth in the article referred to, from first to last, not one justification for its statements and inferences. The promoters of the Farmers Bank may have deposited money, where it would be safe, in the Traders Bank, of which Mr. Stratton is vice-president, but not General Manager; and they may have borrowed money from The Trusts and Guarantee Company, of which Mr. Stratton is President, but not General Manager; but the security was unquestionable, as the repayment of the loan testifies. That is all the connection Mr. Stratton had with the matter. He was president of a company that might, or might not, have loaned money on proper security, and vice-president of a bank that accepts deposits in the regular way of business. If a bank demanded from every depositor where he got the money, or a loan company demanded from a borrower what he wanted to do with the money, business would become impossibly complicated.

There is not the slightest foundation in truth for the statement contained in, or the inferences of, the "story" published. As a matter of fact the qualifying deposit money of the Farmers Bank was chequed out of the Bank of Montreal, also in the regular way of business. There is no possible justification of Mr. Travers' management of the Farmers Bank that worked such widespread injury: but there is just as much justification as there was for the concoction of, and the Review's republication of, a story aimed to injure a fellow citizen.

TWO BELLEVILLE MEN KILLED IN A COLLISION

Two Grand Trunk Freights Collided at Collins' Bay at 1:30 O'clock This Morning, With Terrible Results---Wreckage Caught Fire and Body of Engineer Was Consumed

Special to The Examiner:

KINGSTON, ONT., Jan. 23.—William Dennis, an engineer, Thomas McDermott, a fireman, both of Belleville, were killed, and William Cunningham of Gananoque, arm taken off, were the casualities, at 1.30 this morning, at Collins-Bay, when two freight trains met in a rear-end collision. One train was stalled in a snow bank when the other crashed into it. All hte men were married. McDermott and Dennis each had three children. A horrible fire broke out in the wreckage and the body of hte Engineer was consumed. The body of the fireman was found standing on his head. Cunningham had his arm amputated by surgeons on the spot.

Almost consumed, the remains of Engineer Dennis were found, with his charred hand on the reverse lever, showing that he stuck to his duty, doing his best to stop the train.

CHINESE ATTACK THE FOREIGN QUARTERS AND SAILORS ARE CALLED OUT

Examiner Special.

WANKNOW, CHINA, JAN. 23.—Following the false reports that a Britisher had killed a coolie there was a concerted attack by Chinese on the foreign quarters here last night, necessitating the landing of marines from the British and German war ships to protect the district. The angry coolies brought up machine guns and prepared for business but were overawed by foreign soldiers.

A United States gun boat is also here with troops this morning. It is thought that the foreigners were not seriously harmed.

Hankew is the point where the Canadian Methodist missionaries embarked on river boats for the interior, and several are due to arrive there about now. A letter from one recently said the whole of China was ripe for rebellion.

TEMPERANCE SERMONS WERE PREACHED IN THE CITY CHURCHES

Representatives of the Dominion Alliance for the Suppression of the Drink Traffic preached in most of the city churches yesterday, giving stirring addresses upon the evils of the drink habit, and the necessity for greater effort on the part of the temperance people of Canada. Among the speakers were Mr. J. W. Bengough of Toronto, the well-known cartoonist and temperance orator, Rev. Benj. Spence, the Secretary of the Dominion Alliance, Mr. F. S. Spence, of Toronto, and other prominent temperance men. There were large congregations present throughout the day, and the remarks of the different speakers were followed with an interest that showed their audiences were convinced of the absolute truth of their statements.

WATER PIPE BURST CELLARS ARE FLOODED

A water pipe burst away from the main, on Hunter street, some time yesterday or last night, and to-day had done considerable damage to goods in the cellars of the stores in the vicinity, especially to that of Mr. T. H. Adams, there being about two or three feet of water in the cellar. A great amount of drygoods are under water, thereby almost completely destroying them. A gang of men are engaged on the work of repairing the break, which is directly in front of The Sun Life Insurance Company's office, on Hunter street. The pipe has been in about 20 years, which accounts for its giving out. Some of the other merchants in the vicinity also suffered more or less, but the exact amount of damage will not be known until the cellars can be entered.

A BOOM IN FARM VALUES

Examiner Special.

OTTAWA, JAN. 23.—In a discussion on the forecasts of the trade treaty a leading Ontario member of parliament here said this morning that the various changes would probably be vigorously opposed by the milling interests, but it should mean a big boom in agricultural districts, and an all-round increase in farm values in this province.

FINAL ORDER WAS GIVEN

In Connection With Winding Up of the Farmer's Bank Case.

Examiner Special:

TORONTO, JAN. 23.—Mr. Justice Riddell this morning granted a final winding up order in connection with the Farmers, and appointed Geoffrey T. Clarkson as Liquidator. This disposes of several other applications from various creditors who desired to take up the final closing of the affairs of the Bank.

SALARIES FOR COMMONERS

Examiner Special:

LONDON, ENG., JAN. 23.—It is stated on excellent authority that the Labour members will try to force Asquith to provide a sessional indemnity of two thousand dollars a year, and expenses, for members of the House of Commons. This payment of commoners is contrary to one of the beloved traditions of Great Britain and will develop a fight.

NOT BILLY MACLEAN'S ROLE.

The St. Catharines Journal gets a good one off on W. F. Maclean, the member for South York. In view of the fact that the Farmers' Bank has been proven to have been rotten from its very inception to the ignominious closing of its doors and that General Manager Travers has been sent to the penitentiary for six years for criminal acts, the Journal naturally finds the following extract from the Toronto World, owned and edited by Mr. Maclean, very interesting:

"The annual statement of the Farmers' Bank of Canada was published yesterday, and hte result of the year's operations is another tribute to the careful management given this, one of the youthful members of the Canadian chartered banks.

'Net profits for 'the year were $41,107.86 on a paid-up capital of $567,357.

"The steady growth of the bank is undeniably attributed to careful management. The policy of the management has been to take no chances; but to grow steadily. The aim has not been large profits, but a gradual increase of returns without assuming any unnecessary risks. General Manager Travers has come to be looked upon as one of the most informed and most conservative bankers in Canada. His large experience has added to the stability of the Farmers' Bank of Canada.

The St. Kitts Journal remarks "obviously Billy Maclean is a more reliable authority on cutting C. P. R. melons than he is on writing reviews for banks."

OFFICIAL APATHY.

(Toronto Telegram)

If an underpaid clerk—and clerks should be, and almost unanimously are, honest, irrespective of their rate of pay—stole a bank's money, the province of Ontario would follow him to the ends of the earth.

Ontario's pursuit of an erring bank clerk would be financed by the robbed bank.

A whole province has been robbed by the parties responsible for the existence and career of the Farmer's Bank.

Why should not the Attorney-General of this province be as energetic in promoting the law's pursuit of a bank wrecker as he would be in promoting the law's pursuit of a bank clerk?

The Attorney-General's Department of Ontario or the police authorities of Toronto discredited the administration of law in this province by a policy of apathy in the presence of a great crime.

How were the Attorney-General's Department and the police authroities to know that a great crime was implied in the collapse of the Farmers' Bank?

Absolute proof of crime was not "a condition precedent" to the surveillance of all parties who might be criminally implicated in responsibility for the disappearance of $2,000,000. The administration of law in this city and province should have been capable of saying to Dr. Beattie Nesbitt and every other alleged bank wrecker:

"You may be wanted in this case and you will be arrested if you attempt to leave town."

It would not have been possible for bank wreckers to escape from the authorities of an American community as Dr. Beattie Nesbitt and his associates eluded the Attorney-General of Ontario and the police authorities of Toronto. The administration of law in this province was discredited by the leisurely tactics that permitted the escape of Dr. Beattie & Co. The Ontario Government will be disgraced if a policy of equal leisure is to prevent the pursuit and extradition of every fugitive from the results of enquiry into the collapse of the Farmers' Bank.

The Threatened Ulster Rising In Relation To Irish Home Rule

(Montreal Witness)

The preposterous reports that Ulster was arming for resistance to Home Rule have, now that their use for election purposes is over, been effectually contradicted by the Unionist 'Daily Mail' after a special investigation. Most sensible people had already discredited the rumour. There are no more worthy people in the world than the Ulster men. At all events Canada, and Montreal in particular, owes them very much of their enterprise and progress. They are Irish, and like most Irishmen, are occasionally given to intemperate speech, which they soon contradict in action. Once upon a time, when Queen Victoria was newly come to the throne, there were Ulster men who suspected her family of Roman Catholic leanings, and talked of 'kicking her crown into the Boyne,' but before long the young Queen had no more faithful and loyal subjects than the men of Ulster. The instances are not precisely parallel, but the fact that the great body of Ulster men are steady, industrious, and law-abiding would lead one to the assurance that, if Home Rule is effective, they will make the best of the new conditions, and when Ulster men make the best of anything, that 'best' is generally very good. Those who know Ireland well, point out the fact that when the Irish Roman Catholic Celt is not specially stirred by political feud he has the greatest respect for his 'Prodestant' neighbour. In fact, as a rule, he picks his leaders from the Protestants instead of from his own people. Grattan, Emmett, Wolfe Tone, Lord Edward Fitzgerald, Isaac Butt, Chas. Stuart Parnell, and many other Irish leaders of the greatest note were of the faith of the minority. From this it might be expected that instead of Ulster rebelling against a 'College Green parliament,' she might send thither the best trusted and most effective body of legislators which it would contain. That some measure of Home Rule will be granted to Ireland at an early date seems a foregone conclusion. Signs are not wanting which tell us that if the Liberals went out of office it would be given by the Conservatives.

As a matter of fact, the Irish Nationalists have more in common with the Conservatives than they have with the Liberals. The very name 'Tory' is an Irish word originally applied in that country to the Royalist soldiers who supported the House of Stuart. The present Land Purchase Act was the work of a Unionist Government, and the Nationalist ideals of denominational education are, of course, quite at variance with those of the majority of Liberals. The same might be said of the Nationalist peasant proprietorship as opposed to the Radical Socialism and Land Nationalization. The Nationalists, too, are more or less the friends of the brewers and distillers, as well as more or less protectionists, if not tariff reformers. Mr. Redmond's recent statements of Ireland's demands are quite constitutional. In 'Nash's Magazine' he says:

What Ireland wants is really so reasonable, so moderate, so commonplace, in view of the experience of the nations, and especially of the British Empire, that once it is understood, all the fears and arguments of honest opponents must vanish into thin air. We want an Irish Parliament, with an executive responsible to it, created by Act of Imperial Parliament, and charged with the management of purely Irish affairs (land, education, local government, labour, industries, taxation for local purposes, law and justice, police, etc), leaving to the Imperial Parliament, in which Ireland would probably continue to be represented, but in smaller numbers, the management, just as at present, of all Imperial affairs—army, navy, foreign relations, customs, Imperial taxation, matters pertaining to the Crown, the colonies, and all those other questions which are Imperial and not local in their nature; the Imperial parliament also retaining an over-riding supreme authority over the new Irish Legislature, such as it possesses to-day over the various Legislatures in Canada, Australia, South Africa, and other portions of the Empire.

This, though still asking more than probably Mr. Redmond expects, is a very different Home Rule from the all but absolute separation which was once demanded. It would hardly be workable as Mr. Redmond has practically admitted without a federation of the United Kingdom. It would not do to have Irishmen at Westminster legislating for Great Britain in ways that the legislation of the larger island might not do for Ireland. That Irishmen of whatever political or religious creed should unite on some common ground and work for the common good of their common country is the desire of all true lovers of Ireland and of the Empire of which she forms such a notable part.

Ohased the Firemen.

Toronto, Jan. 23.—It is not often that the firemen are unwelcome when they come, but Saturday they were refused admission to 332 Parliament street. There had been a small fire at 11.25 in the morning, and somebody phoned for the firemen. Meanwhile the good lady of the house had fought it out with the infant blazes and whipped them to a frazzle. Therefore, she did not propose to have a herd of firemen tracking mud and snow on her spotless floors, and told them so, twice or more. Finally a bargain was made. The lady vowed that there was no more fire and the firemen departed.

Youngsters and matches caused a blaze in the kitchen of Chas. Davis' home at 219 Sumach street at 12.30 o'clock. The damage to the building was $20, and to the contents $200.

Moral Reform on Railroad.

New York, Jan. 23.—A despatch to The Tribune from Boston says: The New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad has issued orders to its conductors to stop all card-playing on the trains of the system. Another order is that children shall not ride in the smoking-cars, either alone or accompanied by an older person. Conductors have been empowered to have arrested the parent or guardian of the child if accompanied by such, on failure to leave the car when so ordered. Hereafter no games of cards, games of chance, or the use of chips will be permitted. Complaints were made about the presence of card sharps on the trains and the fleecing of passengers.

Ottawa Faces Epidemic.

Ottawa, Jan. 23.—As the result of the visit of a civic deputation to Montreal on Friday to investigate the hypochlorite treatment of water, City Engineer Kerr on Saturday took steps to begin purification of Ottawa's water at once. A special meeting of the council will be held to-day to sanction it. There were nearly 70 cases of typhoid reported in the city Saturday morning and the extent of the disease is rapidly assuming the proportions of an epidemic. Though the last samples of water sent to Toronto for analysis have not been reported upon, it is considered practically certain the typhoid is due to sewage contamination.

Perkins Medal Awarded.

New York, Jan. 23.—The Times says the American Society of Chemical Industry announces that the Perkins medal, which is awarded annually for important discoveries in applied chemistry, has been given this year to Charles M. Hall, who invented the process of producing aluminum at low cost.

The medal was first given to Sir William Henry Perkin, who discovered the first coal tar dyes, on the occasion of his visit to this country in 1906.

Killed Father In Defence of Husband.

Cravenette, Ark., Jan. 23.—Mrs. Nellie Allen, 21 years old, shot and killed her father, John B Boyer, a wealthy planter, at their home near Maysville Saturday, after the two had exchanged half a dozen shots. Boyer and the woman's husband, John Allen, were in a quarrel. Boyer rushed on Allen with a drawn knife, when Mrs. Allen opened fire. Boyer returned the fire, but his bullets went wild, while one of them from the woman's revolver pierced his brain.

Stamping Out Consumption.

London, Jan. 23.—In a letter to Hall Caine, who has been advocating Government measures with the object of stamping out consumption, principally through the state taking charge of all consumptives, David Lloyd-George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, makes the interesting announcement that he has already been considering the practicability of dealing with the problem in connection with his forthcoming scheme of invalidity insurance.

The Chancellor says that the chief difficulty is financial, and that it will be especially hard to estimate the maximum contribution which can be levied on workingmen. However, he expresses himself as hopeful of doing something to arrest the terrible scourge, "whose livid wheals are deeply marked on the face of Great Britain."

Good for Newfoundland.

St. John's, Nfld., Jan. 23.—The decision of the United States Treasury that duty must be collected on fish cargoes purchased abroad and taken to American ports in American fishing vessels, is regarded in the Government circles here as likely to operate to the advantage of Newfoundland fishermen, who will be able to compete on equal terms in American markets with American vessels. Heretofore American vessels have secured free entry for fish purchased by them.

One outcome of the decision is expected to be the employment of colonial vessels to carry herring cargoes from the southern bays. The colonial Cabinet will not grant American vessels permits to purchase cargoes there, and The Hague decision denies them access to these bays.

Workman Killed.

Montreal, Jan. 23.—On the Canadian Northern Railway at an early hour yesterday morning, at Maisonneuve a snowplow ran down and killed Joseph Dulhaime of Charlemagne, who was going to his work and was walking on the track. Two others who were also present, named Beauchamp and Goulet, 17 and 18 years of age respectively, were also run down and badly injured. In fact, they may or may not live. The inquest will take place to-day.

Died at Prayers.

Berlin, Ont., Jan. 23.—Leo Longo, 12-year-old son of Antony Longo, a well-known fruit dealer of this town, died while kneeling at his prayers in St. Mary's Church, about 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon.

The boy had been to confession during the afternoon, and was in the church repeating his prayers when he fell over while kneeling and died almost instantly. Death was the result of heart failure.

A Royal Visit.

Dublin, Jan. 23.—It is reported here that King George and Queen Mary will make a brief visit to Ireland, probably in July or August. They will reside in the vice-regal lodge, and will hold a series of brilliant state functions.

Her Propellor Broken.

London, Jan. 23.—The British steamer British Sun, from London for Philadelphia, was spoken with her propellor broken on Jan. 17, in latitude 46, longitude 43, by the German steamer Breslau, which passed Scilly (reported) from Baltimore for Bremen.

SAVAGES AND WHALERS

THEY WERE THE SUBJECTS OF W. L. ALLARDYCE IN FIJI.

Pro-Consul Who Is Now British Governor of the Falkland Islands, Stepped Man-Eating to Avoid Appearing on the Menu as a Piece de Resistance—Left Tropics to Serve Flag on Edge of Antarctic.

Twenty-five years in the south sea islands and six years on the border of the Antarctic are enough to fill a person with a desire to see something of the rest of the world, and that is possibly one reason why W. L. Allardyce, his Majesty's governor of the Falkland Islands, is making a tour of the world.

From 1789, when he first went out to the south seas as a junior clerk, until 1904 Governor Allardyce spent most of his time in the various islands in the Pacific, notably in Samoa, Tonga and the Fijis.

"I first went to the Fijis when King Thakombar was alive," said Governor Allardyce recently. "He was the original 'king of the cannibal isles' who has been sung about. Thakombar was a tall man with a big white beard, and his hands were so big that if you put one of yours in his it would disappear. He always wore the native garb, somewhat modified, for he insisted upon the white shirt of civilisation and a necktie, which first he wore tucked into a kilt of native cloth. His legs were bare. He also wore a headdress of some kind of white or smoked native cloth.

"Thakombar always insisted upon the observance of the outward forms of respect. As a rule, the native Fijian doffs his headdress when he comes into the presence of a higher chief, but this was not enough for Thakombar. The man who met the king on the road had to sit down in the road and clap his hands or smite his thighs and shout 'Woh, woh!'

"The missionaries thought the Fijians were civilised in that early day, and the natives had nominally accepted Christianity, but as late as 1894 they were not up to all the forms of Christianity and civilization, for they were still eating one another. In that year, however, it was stopped by force.

"There had been an outbreak in the interior. I was native minister at the time and with the governor, some 2,000 native allies and a few hundred of our own men went up and called upon the cannibals to give up those of their number who had not long before eaten two native missionaries.

"To our amazement the leaders replied that if we did not go away they would put the governor and myself in the oven also. We tried to call them to reason, but they would not entertain our truce envoys. Finally we had to attack them. We captured some 200 of them in the fight, and the licking they got taught them we meant what we said, and there has been no more man-eating since then.

"In the early eighties there were not more than 1,500 white men in all the islands. They were mostly Anglo-Saxons, some being Americans. The white population of the country is now over 4,000. In addition some 40,000 East Indians have been imported into the country from Bengal to work the sugar plantations. The sugar industry has grown so that the exportation is now approximately 80,000 tons.

"We try to preserve the communal system of Government among them as far as possible. The people are ruled by their chiefs, the something like 90,000 Fijians having several dozen head chiefs, and these have many petty ones under them. The heads of provinces are paid salaries ranging from $2,000 a year downward. These chiefs have not the power of life and death.

"There is never any summer in the Falklands," continued Governor Allardyce; "but, on the other hand, the thermometer hardly ever goes down to zero. But what gets to you is the cold wind with a low temperature. Most of the people there are engaged either in sheep-raising or whaling. The whole country is a sheep farm, and the holdings range from 700,000 acres, running 200,000 sheep, to small runs that carry only 3,000 to 4,000. There are 800,000 sheep in the Falklands. In the Falklands group are some fifty or sixty islands, the largest being East Falkland, which is about 90 by 50 miles, and West Falkland, which is 20 by 30 miles.

"The whaling industry is very remunerative. The whalers are mostly Norwegians, and they fish around the Falklands and South Georgia, also going as far south as the South Shetlands and the South Orkneys.

"There are five different kinds of whales in those waters. Of them the right whale, or the nord kappa, as the Norwegians call it, is worth from $7,500 to $10,000, principally on account of the whalebone. Then there is the blue whale, which is the biggest of all, often running to 90 or 100 feet in length. The sperm whale of course everybody knows. Then there is the humpbacked whale, so called from an enormous hump, and the sei whale, which is not so important."

The Spinster's Confession.

That versatile philosopher, Dr. Emil Reich, who has just died, possessed a rare fund of good stories. Once at a dinner at which he was present the conversation turned on marriage. "That was a wise saying of the old Greek philosopher," said someone, "'Whether you marry her or not, you will regret it.'" "Yes," answered Dr. Reich, "it reminds me of a certain old maid who once said something almost as good as that. 'Auntie,' said her little niece to her, 'what would you do if you had your life to live over again?' To which the lonely spinster replied: 'Get married, my child, before I had sense enough to decide to be an old maid.'"

THE ENTERPRISE OF A WELL KNOWN LOCAL FIRM

Description of the New Foundry Building of Messrs. Adam Hall and Sons'---Prospects for Further Expansion are of the Brightest---Fifty Hands Are Employed.

This week the doors of one of the best known local stores on George street closes its doors to the public after 32 years of continual business at the one well-known stand. Adam Hall's has been the name for any one wanting stoves and tinware, or for any one requiring the services of plumbers, tinsmiths or steamfitters. But increased business has necessitated a change. Believing in the future and progress of Peterborough, Adam Hall and Sons have launched out into a larger sphere of commercial enterprise, and have located a manufacturing plant at the corner of Simcoe and Bethune streets. Here the plumbing and tinsmithing business will be carried on, on a large scale, the firm now having better facilities for carrying on the same. To pay a visit to these works means a surprise to the ordinary citizen. You enter the door of the company's office, a room which is large and spacious, and is fitted up in the best style. At the rear of the offices is a large storeroom for all kinds of brass valves and fittings, and a large assortment of all kinds of pipe fittings, each size in its own particular bin, the whole arrangement resembling a wholesale house, more than a retail firm. In the basement all kinds of plumbing supplies and fittings are kept. Here also is the plumbers' workshop, with pipe-cutting machine (power driven), and all the necessary tools, etc., to carry on the plumbing business on a larger scale than the firm has done before. From her you go up-stairs, to the tinsmithing department. This is a large well-lighted apartment, where a large staff of tinsmiths are employed. This, with the plumbing department, is under the supervision of Mr. W. R. Turner, who has been foreman for the firm for many years.

From here one is escorted to the Steel Range factory. Adam Hall's steel ranges are known from coast to coast, thousands of our large hotels and nearby camps throughout tels and nearly every camp throughout the Dominion has a Peterborough stove. The firm has been manufacturing stoves for over 30 years, and to-day the demand is greater than ever. This is, largely, the cause of the firm's activity and enlarged plant. The steel ranges are made in all sizes from the four-hole range up to the large twenty-four hole range, with three ovens, which are used in the largest hotels throughout the country. A heavy stock of steel is carried for the manufacture of these stoves. This is taken direct out of the railway cars, right into the shops. The firm has splendid railway facilities.

After visiting the stove works one is taken to the new foundry. This is the firm's latest venture. This is undoubtedly one of the best foundries in the Province. It contains a pattern shop, machine shop, and all the necessary machinery that goes to make up a modern foundry. The large cupola is capable of melting five tons of metal per hour. Here a large staff of moulders are kept busy, making castings for the stoves, besides castings for other firms. The foundry was designed to allow for trade expansion, but it is already proving too small to handle the orders the firm has on hand, and enlargement will have to be made at an early date.

About fifty hands are employed by the firm, and as most of these are skilled mechanics, the pay roll is a heavy one. Enlargement of the works will have to be made at an early date for the firm to keep pace with the orders they are getting, and it is expected that during the year the firm will have to double its staff.

The whole concern reflects great credit on the enterprise of Adam Hall and Sons. While Peterborough is anxious to get new industries, the citizens ought to be proud that there are such firms as this in our city, who have built up a well-established concern without asking for bonuses or exemption from the city. This concern certainly deserves the commercial prosperity it has attained. Both 'phones, 88, as usual.

MR. EDWARD TERRY WELCOMED AGAIN AFTER SIX YEARS

(From the Montreal Star)

Bringing with him the evidence of talents undimmed by his more than threescore years, Edward Terry appeared at the Princess last evening, choosing as the opening play of his repertoire here, "Sweet Lavender," the comedy in which he established a record of enduring popularity in London; and in that same comedy last night he once more gave delightful evidence of the powers that have endeared him to English playgoers.

Some studies of Mr. Terry as He Appears in "Sweet Lavender."

Quaint humour and pathos blended into a simple play by Sir Arthur Pinero, the author, and the truly human feeling infused by Edward Terry into the leading character of Dick Phenyl, the eccentric barrister, have accounted for the popularity of the play and its record of over 6,000 performances.

No intensely modern problem is approached in "Sweet Lavender." That is perhaps why its charm has been so ably preserved. The comedy merely presents a simple picture of life in Brain Court Temple, with Lavender, a frail young girl, and Clement Hale, a young man studying at the bar, contrasted against the aged barrister, who has not won renown, who has been tottering downward in life, but who moves in his eccentric course the real deus of good, and the real hero of the comedy.

Far-reaching lessons are not taught in this unaffected picture of life, but the simple elements of the love-story between the young girl who lives in the basement, and the young man who shares his rooms above with the tippling Dick Phenyl, are charmingly bound together, and like lavender itself, the play infuses a charm to conceptions frequently set aside in present-day plays.

In keeping with the domestic atmosphere of the comedy, the action is all confined to the joint chambers of Dick Phenyl and Clement Hale with Lavender and her mother coming up from the basement from time to time, and with Clement's more fashionable relatives also whisking in at intervals. The three acts are in turn entitled: "Nobody's Business," "Somebody's Business," and lastly, "Everybody's Business."

Lavender's love for the aspiring young student-at-law is, through no fault of hers, entangled with her mother's early affection for Clement's foster father. Barely has the girl heard the young man's love story, when she is told that Clement's relatives will turn their backs on her, and that she will only bring bitterness into her lover's life. That was considered "nobody's business," but now Dick Phenyl made it his business, and now all the characters at last joined in making it their business, is the story of the play, and the channel for Edward Terry's talents.

There was no doubt of the audience's appreciation of Mr. Terry in the part last night. He was called to the curtain at the end of the first act, and the adaptability of the players surrounding him brought them out at the conclusion of each successive act. It will be recalled by many Montrealers that "Sweet Lavender" was also the play which he chose to open his repertoire when he last visited Montreal about six years ago.

Miss Rainer has a retiring role to play as Lavender and naturalness was man in the character of Geoffrey the kenote of her part. Mr. Pate-Wedderburn, the foster-father, furnishes the crisis of the play in his collapse on hearing of his ruined business and his meeting with Lavender's mother ,his early love. The other players suit their parts without striking features being necessary.

The same play will be produced on Saturday night. To-night, Mr. Terry will be seen in "The Magistrate, Sir Arthur Pinero's popular farce.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

HOW very much better and more clever people are when you know them.

Doesn't that come over you every once in a while?

It does with me.

Tell you what brought it this time.

An appeal for help came to me from a woman in need of work. It was a most pathetic appeal. It wrung my heart with its story of loneliness and bitterly handicapped struggle and failure and hopelessness. Unfortunately it came from a distance and from a locality where I had absolutely no influence in procuring the particular kind of work this woman wanted. So I sat down and thought over my acquaintances in that locality. They were few. The only one who seemed at all likely to possess the needed influence was a girl I knew but slightly. She was a very pretty girl, apparently rather frivolous, but I thought she might be able to say the word that was needed so I sent her the appeal.

By the next mail — the NEXT MAIL, mind you, not a week or two later as so many of us might have answered—a splendid letter came back from her assuring me of her real delight in this opportunity and outlining an excellent plan of campaign to be put into immediate execution.

Now, I had realized the girl was nice and charming and pretty, but you see I hadn't realised anywhere near how good she was.

I think that's the way with a good many of us. We don't give each credit for half that's in us. In the same way I seldom grow to know people well but I am led to marvel at how much more clever they are than I had thought.

The whole thing is in knowing people and also in liking them. For most people expand in the warmth of friendship into quite different beings from what they are to the casual acquaintance of a stranger.

How often we see two married people on the car or have two married people among our acquaintances of whom we say, "How COULD she have married him?" or vice versa.

We think we are pointing out the blindness of love.

As a matter of fact the blindness is ours.

She probably married him because she knew him and helped bring out qualities in him that we can never see.

It was her vision, not her blindness, that made her love him.

What a world of wonderful people it is after all, and how little room in it there is for hate or dislike or harsh judgments.

In your pet antipathy, if you could know him or her—the Mrs. Somebody you stigmatize as superficial and frivolous, the Mr. Somebody you put down as a cad—you would doubtless find splendid qualities if you only knew them better.

Cured His Rheumatism In Three Weeks.

James LeB. Johnstone, a prominent member of the Citizen's Band, of Chatham, writes:

"I contracted Rheumatism by exposure, few years ago, and was ailing for two months and in great pain all the time. I got Father Morrisey's No. 7 Tablets and took them for about three weeks, when the Rheumatism all left me and I have had no return of the pains since."

Father Morrisey's "No. 7" Tablets have cured thousands of this terribly painful disease.

Rheumatism is generally brought on by exposure, but is really caused by Uric Acid in the blood. This Uric Acid is an irritating poison, formed from the waste matter of the body. The kidneys should remove it, but when they fail it poisons the blood, and, settling in the joints, causes Rheumatism.

"No. 7" Tablets clear out the clogged-up Kidneys and stimulate them to perform their task of filtering the Uric Acid out of the blood. When this is done the Rheumatism simply and naturally vanishes.

"No 7" Tablets cost 50c. At your dealer's. 28

WHAT IS MAN?

Pastor Russell Agrees With Burns That "A Man's a Man for a' That."

Buffalo, N.Y., January 22.—Pastor Russell addressed large assemblages twice here to-day in his usual fresh, attractive and instructive style. One address was on "The Great Hereafter"; the other, which we report, was from the text, "What is Man?" (Psalm viii, 4).

Notwithstanding all that the Bible has to say respecting the nature of man few subjects seem to be more misunderstood. Science declares man to be an animal of the highest type or order. In this, science is in absolute agreement with the Scriptures, which declare of our first parents, "The first man was of the earth, earthy" (I. Corinthians xv, 47). Our text agrees with this, declaring that man was made a little lower than the angels—angels being the lowest form of spirit beings, man the highest type of earth beings. A particular account of man's creation is given, and when we examine it we find it in full agreement with what we have seen to be the teachings of other parts of the Scriptures. That account declares that God formed man of the dust of the earth, and it tells us that after man's transgression had brought him under the Divine condemnation of death, his Creator said to him, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

In view of these facts, which we now have clearly before our minds, how strange it seems that most of the civilized world denies all and declares to the contrary—that man is a spirit being, and that his death is merely an evolutionary step by which he passes on to his real nature as a spirit. This is supposed to be very scientific, because many, presumably wise and scientific people, thus assert themselves. However, according to these same people, such an evolution, from human nature to spirit nature at death, instead of being a desirable progression or evolution, is a decided disadvantage, because, as they tell us, the majority of those thus graduated from flesh conditions to spirit conditions will find themselves tortured, either pugatorially or eternally. It would seem, if this be true, that this at least, to the majority, would be a step of de-volution rather than one of evolution.

But upon what are these "scientific" and learned assumptions based? Who will vouch for the change said to take place at death? Who will prove to us that a man in dying becomes a spirit being of a higher order than human?

There is no such proof; the wish is parent to the thought. Yet why should men wish to be spirit beings at death, if they believe, as the creeds declare, that tortures await them in the spirit land—await nine hundred and ninety-nine out of every thousand? Ah, here again humanity does not believe its own creeds. The devilish suggestions are allowed to remain in the creeds, unbelieved by the intelligent, to affright the unintelligent. But alas! these misrepresentations are really blasphemies against our Creator which misrepresent his Wisdom, Justice, Love and Power. And these blasphemous thoughts are accredited to the Bible, with the result that it is disbelieved and it is great Author doubted or denied and thousands of the intelligent of our race are agnostics.

Spiritism speaks up to assert that it, and it alone, can furnish proof that man, of the earth earthy, is after death a spirit. It furnishes us mediums at whose instance tables are tipped and rappings are heard and other evidences are given of unseen powers, we are told, are the spirits of dead men seeking to prove to humans that they are not dead, but that in the moment of death they were transformed into spirit.

And now our scientific men are taking up the subject. They decline to be identified with Spiritism and designate their findings Psychic Phenomena. Mediums and their demonstrations have been subjected to every imaginable scientific test to demonstrate that the results are not fraudulent—that there is really a spirit power, an invisible power which can do and has done remarkable things beyond the power of humanity. Accepting these investigations as scientific, and accepting the results as scientific proof that there is a spirit power or force which can and has operated in conjunction with human affairs and especially through mediums, what does this prove? What scientific fact have we here to evidence that these spirit powers have anything to do with our friends who have died?

These spirits operate through mediums sometimes in trance, sometimes answering by written notes from "nowhere," sometimes mechanically grasping the hand of the writing medium and using it without her volition; sometimes by rappings and sometimes by ouija-boards, declaring themselves truthful, sincere, honest, desirous of assisting humanity, etc.

But does this prove, scientifically, that they are honest, that they are true? Ask any spiritualist! He will tell you, at very most, that he believes some of them are honest, or will tell you sorrowfully that some of them have lied to him time and again; and if he an advanced and experienced Spiritualist he will tell that at times some of these evil spirits have made all manner of vile suggestions to him. But he will tell also that at first it was not so; instead he was at first told that he should pray more and read the Scriptures more. Afterwards he was jeered at and mocked and told that the Scriptures were nonsense and that although there is a God the enquirer is too renegade to hope for any blessing from God.

We have neglected our Bibles too much; we have trusted too much to worldly wisdom. The Bible alone gives the solution of the matter. It alone tells us respecting these spirits that they are not human and never were; that they are the fallen angels, D. V. we will consider them a week from now.

The Bible is thoroughly consistent with itself; from first to last it maintains that man is an earthly being. According to the Greek and the Hebrew of the Bible he is an animal soul or animal being in contradistinction to a spirit soul or spirit being. "Man that is born of woman is of few days and full of trouble"; "Man dieth and wasteth away, and where is he? He shall not awake nor be raised out of his sleep until the heavens be no more"—until the present order of things shall have passed away (Job xiv, 1-10).

Again we read respecting the death sentence and man's hope of recovery out of death by a resurrection, "Thou turnedst man to destruction; thou sayest return ye children of men"; "Cease ye from man, whose spirit (breath of life) is in his nostrils" (Psalm xc, 3; Isaiah ii, 22); "If a man die, shall he live again? All the days of mine appointed time will I await until my (resurrection) change come. Thou shalt call and I will answer thee (awakening from the sleep of death), for thou wilt have desire unto the work of thy hands"; "There shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and of the unjust" (Job xiv, 14; Acts xiv, 15).

They are dead, they are not alive as spirit nor in any other sense. They will be dead until God's time for the resurrection of the dead. Resurrection of the living would be unnecessary, and if death brought to man a change to a higher plane of existence as a spirit being, then the resurrection of the dead would not be set before humanity as a blessed hope, for rather it would be a punishment, even to the holy.

It seems probable that this serious error, which has had so much to do with the world's theological confusion, came about through the misunderstanding of the Bible teachings respecting the Church—the application of things said concerning the Church to the world, to whom they did not apply. Bible students are coming more and more to see, in the light which one passage of Scripture throws upon another, that the Church is a distinctive class, separate from the angels and the world of mankind in general.

The Divine Plan revealed in the Scriptures sets forth one salvation for the Church—on the spirit plane. It reveals to us two classes who will be blessed on the spirit plane. It shows us that one of these classes was typified in the priesthood of natural Israel and that the other class was typified in the Levites who assisted the priests as servants. The remainder of the tribes of Israel represented typically, the entire world of mankind who will ultimately be saved, not to a heavenly state or condition, but as men to a restored earthly condition.

It will be remembered that the Priests and Levites had no inheritance in the land, thus typically showing that they represented that portion of humanity which, by God's grace, will obtain a heavenly inheritance and experience a change from human to spirit nature.

As the Levites and Priests represented the first-born of Israel saved at the Passover, so those who will attain a resurrection to the spirit plane are Scripturally designated "the church of the first-born," and again, "the first-fruits unto God of his creatures." The elect of this Gospel Age are not, therefore, all who are to be saved, but merely all who are to be saved to the spirit plane. With the completion of the elect Church and her glorification with our Lord in his resurrection, the "first resurrection" (Philippians iii, 10; Revelations xx, 6), the Kingdom will be established for which we pray.

The Kingdom, per se, will be spirit, invisible to men, but it will have earthly agents and representatives and its dealings will be with mankind to uplift Adam and his race from sin and degradation—not to spirit conditions, not to heavenly plane, not to make them like the angels, but, as the Scriptures declare, to restore them to human perfection—to perfection of the earthly nature, in which Adam was created and from which by sin he fell and has been redeemed by the grace of God in Christ Jesus.

Very long ago the distinctions between these two salvations was lost sight of—the heavenly calling for the Church and the Restitution for the World (Hebrews iii, 1; Acts iii, 19-21). The old Testament refers exclusively to the heavenly and its promises was overlooked. Thenceforth no difference was recognized between the consecrated Church and mankind in general, and the words of the Apostle, addressed to the Church class only, were applied to all.

For instance, in first Corinthians, the fifteenth chapter, St. Paul discusses the general fact of death reigning through Adam and of the provision, through Christ, of a resurrection of the dead. Then he proceeds to speak specially of the Church class, saying, "this is the resurrection of the dead." The (emphatic) resurrection of signifies the special or First-resurrection class, and the dead similarly marks the special class of dead ones—the saintly dead, the Church of Christ, begotten of the holy Spirit to a new nature, the heavenly nature.

Not noticing this, commentators and people in general have applied these words to humanity in general and understand them to teach that all that are sown in corruption will be raised in incorruption; that all who die in weakness, will be raised in power; that all who die animal bodies, will be raised spiritual bodies. But the Apostle is endeavoring to impress a very different lesson, namely, that the Church is a special class and will have a special resurrection to spirit conditions which the world will never know anything about, experimentally.

The Bible shows this had we but noticed it: The Apostle says, "God giveth to every seed its own body"; that is to say, if we sow wheat we expect to reap wheat, if we sow oats we expect to reap oats. The Apostle's argument is that none need expect to be of the wheat class, the spirit class, unless they are of that class when sown in death. In other words, he would have them understand that a natural man, an animal man, in the resurrection will be an animal man, but those who accept the Divine offer of this Gospel Age, to become new creatures in Christ Jesus, begotten again by the holy Spirit — these will not come forth in the resurrection human beings, but, being in full harmony with the begetting of the spirit which they have received, will in the resurrection be born of the spirit.

Up to the time of Christ no promise of a change of nature from human to spirit had been received by any member of our race. The Lord Jesus himself became the Captain and Forerunner of "the Church, which is his Body," and which, during this Gospel age, has been walking in his steps of self-sacrifice. The special privilege of this Gospel Age is the sacrifice of the earthly nature in order to the attainment, instead, of the heavenly nature.

This was an incomprehensible matter to those to whom it was preached at first. No Jew had ever thought of anything higher than the human plane and Divine service on the human plane. But the message of the Gospel was a call or invitation to the heavenly nature and heavenly service as the Bride of Christ and his Joint Heirs in glory. Of this call St. Paul says that it is a "mystery that was hidden from past ages and dispensations, but that it is now revealed unto the saints" (Colossians i, 26). It was not proper that any but the saints should fully appreciate and comprehend this. "To you it is given to know the things of the Kingdom, but to outsiders these things are spoken in parables and dark sayings that they might not understand."

This Mystery was, therefore, never understood by many because the saints were never many, and by and by, when saintship was at a discount and when nominal Christians became numerous and influential and made the creeds, it was but natural that the Mystery should become more or less befogged. But instead of going back to preach human restitution to the human plane in a world-wide Eden, the misinformed theologians hung their own hopes and the hopes of the world upon the heavenly assurances—just where they did not belong.

Thus it was that, despite our five senses and every plain statement of the Bible, it has become the prevalent belief that humanity is of spirit nature and not earthly, human; that dying is but getting him either to Heaven, Purgatory or Hell. With this confusion the danger all along theological lines has become great, so that practically every doctrine of the Church is more or less confused thereby. This is the secret, this is the reason why the Bible is misunderstood and being cast aside with the creeds of the Dark Ages as no longer worthy of consideration, while the bulk of Churchianity rushes madly toward the ditch of "Higher Criticism, Evolution, Agnosticism"—with little faith in a personal God and no definite hope.

It is time, my dear hearers, that we seek the old paths, the Bible paths, and that we seek them intelligently and reverently and honestly. There has been much searching of the Bible to find proofs of what we believe and to entrench ourselves in errors handed to us from the past by well-meaning but deceived forefathers. It is time for us to be honest and to search that we may know God's message to us through his inspired prophets and his Son and the Apostles.

It will not do to say that doctrines are unnecessary. The Bible puts faith, proper faith, at the very foundation of Christian character. "We believe and therefore speak."

Let us do this, let us not be content until we know exactly what the Bible teaches concerning "What is man" and respecting the hope, man's restitution, and respecting the high calling, the heavenly calling of the Church. When we begin to see these matters clearly the entire Bible shines as never before, our faith becomes strong as never before. And then, if we are honest, our love for God and our zeal for his service must also increase proportionately.

At some future time we may take up, "What is the soul of man?"

FINE RENDITION

One of the Choruses of Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm Sung by St. John's Choir

St. John's choir gave a fine rendering of one of the principal choruses in Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm last night. Part of the chorus "Come Let us Sing" and its finale "For the Lord is a Mighty God" were sung during the offertory. The latter is a magnificent example of canon, well interpreted last night, the men's chorus showing up tuneful and strong. The whole work is to be given in Lent.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR BOYS IN CANADA

Enjoyable Address Given by Mr. D. O'Connell to the Peterborough Boy Scouts on Saturday Night.

SOME GOOD ADVICE

The members of the Peterborough Boy Scouts who attended the meeting in the Armouries on Saturday night were very fortunate indeed, in having the opportunity of listening to Mr. D. O'Connell's eloquent address on "Opportunities for Boys in Canada," and Dr. MacPherson's able demonstration of "How to Treat a Broken Limb."

Mr. O'Connell encouraged the boys to aim at the ideal of becoming useful and pre-eminent in whatever vocation they might decide to enter upon and gave some striking examples of such men as Michael Angelo, Archimedes, Shakespeare and Beethoven, who had risen to great eminence from very humble homes and surroundings. He showed very clearly that the best aids towards attaining the highest degree of good citizenship lay in three very important traits to be developed by each boy as he approached maturity, (1) To pay strict and careful attention to the work in hand. (2) To be thoroughly honest and honourable in all dealings with one's fellows and (3) To be loyal to and proud of our country and our king.

By elucidating these points, Mr. O'Connell furnished those present with an interesting and inspiring address and the applause that greeted him at the close clearly demonstrated that another visit in the future will be highly apreciated and that the boys are certainly already developing the first trait mentioned.

This week Mr. J. H. McClellan, Supt. Trent Canal, the man who, it might be stated, stands foremost of those who have furthered the Scout Movement in Peterborough, will address the boys, but his subject at present has not been announced.

THE
Prettiest House Dresses We Have Ever Shown
Best Values For The Prices

Our first complete showing of new house dresses for Spring is now ready, and we are distinctly pleased with them.

They are the most attractive and best garments we have ever offered for the prices.

We opened negotiations with the manufacturers with the statement that we wanted to do better for our customers in the matter of house dress than had ever been found possible heretofore—we wanted better styles, better quality garments to retail at the ordinary price of commonplace frocks. At first they demurred, and then they co-operated. The result is that we have realized our wish.

The models are neat and becoming, the materials will resist long wear, and the prices—they speak for themselves. It is well worth while to come promptly for the first choice.

"The Mystery Of Pain" Was Discussed By Goodfellowship League

At the usual men's meeting yesterday afternoon, under the auspices of the League of Good Fellowship, an address was given by the Rev. C. Carpenter on "The Mystery of Pain." He said that the existence of pain was the most supreme difficulty with many professing Christians. There are depths which cannot be sounded, but it does not follow, that pain is always frightful torture. The difficulty is to reconcile the existence of pain and suffering with the fact, that the omnipotent and benevolent God is a God of love.

There is a difference no doubt between the suffering of the brute creation, and that of human beings. The brute creation with their inferior reasoning powers, have not the degree and intensity of pain that is felt by the human being.

Two things may be accepted as axioms. First, that in this world there is moral evil, and second that, we are in the world to form character and not to please ourselves. Pain is a great factor in making and moulding character, the keynote of which is not pleasure but in living up to the highest and thus diffusing better influences among other inhabitants.

Pain, in the lowest sense, is a punishment; it draws attention to the fact that sin exists; it acts as a warning; it is necessary to formulate character.

Savage races have no conception of pain except as a vindictive punishment or vengeance but civilization acknowledges a corrective influence, bringing the cause back to our consciousness. "Consequences are God's commentaries." There is also a purgatorial use in pain. There is need of purging of impurities, as a tree requires pruning to produce its best, so by pain, (even suffered by the innocent) development ensues, and they are caused thereby, to look within, and to seek a way out. Men learn by experience (principally painful). It is the things which have cost us agony that can elevate, ennoble and refine, and that can evolve the highest and the noblest. All great men have been men of great sorrows, and who have "trampled upon their dead selves" and have worked through pain to the highest point.

Knowledge is power, and pain is power, for it purges the evil of the past, and develops for the future. Much so-called unmerited punishment is a call to higher things, and will make the sufferer realise potentialities in his character, and enable him to hand on a stimulus and an example to his descendants.

Painful twinges of conscience, come as a warning from God, and to neglect these is the path of difficulty and ruin. If by pain we can reach higher things, can we say that God is not a God of love?

Christianity teaches that any injustice, will in a future state not only be rectified, but also justified.

The pain and suffering of Jesus Christ was necessary to approach the Divine. He endured the cross, endured the pain to win for us joy, happiness and all the fruits of the Spirit. No life will be perfected until washed by sorrow and etherealized by pain.

Progress is the result of pain and suffering. It is a noble thing to spend and be spent. Pain lifts the load of sorrow from the human heart by arousing sympathy and binds and welds mankind together with a unity that can never be severed.

The St. James' quartette, Messrs. Turner, Read, Bloore and Sandiford sang (1) 'Beautiful Isle of Somewhere' and (2) 'The Heaven.'

PUBLIC TEMPERANCE MEETINGS TO BE HELD

At the last meeting of the Royal Templars of Temperance, a series of open meetings was planned to be held on the fourth Tuesday night of each month, at different points throughout the city, the first of which will be held to-morrow night in the Mark street Methodist church at 8 o'clock. Rev. Mr. Webb will give an address on lines of temperance work, and among other interesting features of the programme, it is expected that the orchestra of the George street Methodist Sunday school will have a place.

The intention is to make these monthly meetings bright and helpful with the hope that they may contribute much to the growing sentiment of the day against the use of strong drink.

The public are cordially invited to attend, and to aid by an active sympathy, the series of meetings thus inaugurated for the good of the community.

There will be no admission price or collection.

THE HORSE SHOW

In connection with the announcement of Wednesday night's horse show at the Armories, under the auspices of the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition, the omission of a line made the article read that there would be a collection taken up at the door. What was intended was "There will be a collection taken up to defray the expenses of the band, but there will be absolutely no charge made at the door." The public is cordially invited to attend, and there promises to be a very large turnout of spectators.

CHAIRMAN OF BOARD OF EDUCATION GIVES INTERESTING STATEMENT

Mr. John Crane Shows That the Board of Education Has Not Been Extravagant — What Has Been Done.

NEED OF ACCOMMODATION

Editor of The Examiner—

Sir,—In a recent issue of the Examiner an article appeared giving municipal statistics in tabulated form and arriving at the tax per head in a number of cities and towns of the province. The same article undertook to show that, in school expenditure, Peterborough was within two of being the highest, and this feature was commented upon editorially by a contemporary.

The statistics were credited to the Financial Post, and from the standing of that paper would be assumed as practically beyond criticism. It is apparent, however, that in the compilation of these returns there is much diversity of method, for, from authentic information gathered by me some time ago from a number of the cities cited, it is clear that ordinary revenue and expenditure is mixed, without comment, with capital revenue and expenditure in many instances. Consequently, for the purpose these statistics do not afford the information desired. In fact, the same paper, The Financial Post, last week was led to observe, editorially, "If the various governments insisted on uniform financial statements from the cities and towns, there would be some basis for an adequate comparison of the standing of the various municipalities. At present it is difficult to arrive at such a comparison of any considerable value on account of the various ways in which revenue and expenditure are classified."

Peterborough citizens were proud of the statement published in our local papers recently that "Peterborough, in point of growth, had outstripped nearly all the cities of same standing in the past ten years."

This feature is also apparent in point of school enrolment, and it is to this matter that I wish especially to deal. The school enrolment of the past ten years has jumped from 1,862 to 2,564.

It is compulsory on the part of the School Board to provide school accommodation for these children; up to the last three or four years no enlargement of our school premises had been provided, consequently the calls for extension came in quick succession, with no other alternation but to provide. With this point in view, and from which there was no other method of overcoming, the question naturally boils itself down to: Are our school buildings beyond our requirements? Is waste room apparent? Are they abounding in luxuries? In fact, has the people's money been spent in equipments for which there is no need?

These questions scarcely need an answer for, beyond our Institute, King Edward and Queen Alexandra schools, the other schools cannot be characterized as suitable in any respect for children to spend the major portion of their lives in, and we all agree that environment has much to do in the education of a child.

I therefore take the position that so far as the provision of school buildings is concerned, the expenditure is practically uncontrollable on the part of the Board.

Our Collegiate Institute is a credit to the city, and in its erection the Board cannot be blamed for a spirit of optimism since the accommodation of the building is already taxed.

In the cost of administration of the Institute it is again difficult to obtain a comparison with that of other cities. Some are free—others charge small fees, others larger fees, others are open to the counties and receive liberal grants in consequence. Others, again, have not met the requirements of the Education Department in the matter of equipment and staff cost to be placed on the list as 'approved schools.' A few of the city collegiates are quite small, so that for these, and other reasons a fair comparison of the cost of administration is a difficult problem. I believe, however, that considering the excellent equipment of our Institute, and the high standing of its staff, that this branch of our system is being run at a minimum of expense consistent with efficiency.

Teachers' Salaries.

The chief item of controllable expenditures in the maintenance of Public schools is the salaries of the teaching staff. In the table appended it will be seen that Peterborough stands 12th in a list of 18 cities in the salaries paid to male teachers and 9th in that to female teachers. The average salary paid to our male teachers is $967.00, while the average in 18 cities is $1,264.00. The average salary paid to lady teachers here is $509.00, while in the 18 cities the average is $635.00.

It will further be noticed that, in proportion of male to female teachers Peterborough stand second in the province, and I am further informed that respecting the qualifications of our teachers, Peterborough stands first, i.e., that we have a greater percentage of highly qualified teachers than any other city in the province.

Cities	No. of male teachers	No. of female teachers	Amt. paid male teachers	Amt. paid female teachers	Av. salary male teachers	Av. salary female teachers

Niagara Falls	2	20	2,254	9,450	1,127	472
Ottawa	39	103	50,751	66,652	1,301	647
Peterborough	10	34	9,675	17,309	967	509
Port Arthur	2	25	2,550	17,400	1,275	696
St. Catharines	2	24	1,700	11,869	850	494
St. Thomas	6	35	5,750	16,000	958	458
Stratford	5	29	4,400	13,995	880	482
Toronto	111	639	158,800	462,100	1,430	723
Windsor	3	40	3,300	23,300	1,100	582
Woodstock	5	24	3,950	10,392	790	433
Average salary paid male teachers, $1,264.
Average salary paid female teacher $633.

Peterborough stands 6th in the province in point of enrollment per teacher—the figures being an average of 48. With the exception of one school the enrollment was over 50 per teacher, so that it cannot fairly be said that the classes are unduly small, for effective work, these figures are somewhat high.

In considering the increased expenditure in our city schools during recent years, it must be remembered that three new schools have been erected and equipped. The introduction of manual training and domestic science has added to the cost, but the chief expense has been incurred to meet the changes in our educational system.

The abolition of 3rd class certificates, and the establishment of Normal schools in various parts of the province have brought great changes in our system of Public school education. The Education Department is determined to have efficient teachers, and the demand for them is so great that they can command decent salaries. Schools that formerly paid their teachers $275.00 to $300.00 per annum, are now advertising and offering $500.00 and $550.00 per annum, and it is a common occurrence to see $600.00 offered for a teacher holding a second class certificate to take charge of an ordinary sized rural school.

It will be seen, therefore, that Peterborough is by no means paying the highest salaries, and while striving to keep the staff up to an efficient level, is effecting such at a reasonable cost as compared with other cities.

The bald statement that the School Board is asking twice as much for school purposes as they did years ago while true, should not brand the Board with extravagance, and all the blame for an increasing tax rate. Other municipal expenses have grown, and will grow in proportion to our increasing population, the fact being that the School Board has very little money at its command to use as controllable expenditure and will only ask for such funds to provide for these advantages in school education, which should be placed within the reach of every child.

I regret having trespassed on your space to such an extent, but I believe information is what the citizens want. I am writing this as a citizen only, and not on the authority of the School Board, of which I have the honour to be presiding officer.

Yours truly,
JOHN CRANE.

MISS BLODGETT IS A REMARKABLE SPEAKER

January 23, 1911.

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Will you kindly permit me, through the columns of your paper, to draw the attention of the people of Peterborough to the presence in our midst of the very talented Bible teacher, Miss May Blodgett, who has been giving a series of Bible addresses during the past week, and who is to speak on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of this week. On account of pressure of ministerial work and other engagements, it was not my privilege to hear Miss Blodgett until yesterday afternoon, when she addressed a large audience in St. Paul's church. I have heard a considerable number of women speakers in my day and I do not think I am guilty of any exaggeration when I say that yesterday's address was the ablest thing I ever heard from the lips of a woman. And indeed, for that matter, I could count on the fingers of my hand the number of addresses that I have heard from men that equalled it. Miss Blodgett is a woman of culture, of keen intellect and of great fluency and power as a speaker. Then she is a thorough student of the word of God, loyal to the grand old truths of revealed religion and the gospel of Christ. And better than all, she is a woman of consecration, spirit filled for service, who knows by personal experience the truths which she speaks. She has announced a special series of addresses for the last three days of this week. As she is anxious that this series should be heard in sequence, I am writing this note now to urge upon the people of Peterborough, men and women, not to miss hearing her on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. If the audience room of the Murray street church proves insufficient, St. Paul's church will be opened for all who come.

THE SIGNS POINT TO COMMENCING OF THE GEORGIAN BAY CANAL

$3,000,000 in the Estimates---Special Sum is Said to Have Been Arranged and Will Constitute Enough for This Year's Work---May be a Free Waterway.

Ottawa, Jan. 23.—It is now regarded as a settled fact that this year will see a start on the Georgian Bay Canal. A special estimate of three million dollars, allowing for a beginning, has been prepared, and it is expected that it will shortly be brought down. Confirmation of the report is indicated in the remarks of Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux at Montreal, and also in statements that have been made by some of the Ministers to members for constituencies particularly interested in the work.

The amount proposed as a starter will be quite sufficient for this year, as by the time it is spent the next session will have convened, when the big expenditure will be made at the two ends — Montreal and the French River.

Whether the route at Montreal will be in front of the city or by the Back River is an open question. Each has its advocates, but the latter, it is said, is the cheaper by two million dollars.

It is understood that while the work will be done by contract it will be a Government undertaking, rather than that of a private company with a bond guarantee. The canal, like the others of the Canadian system, would in all probability be free.

QUARREL OVER WOMAN ENDS IN A MURDER

Italian Shot Through the Head and Dies in a Few Minutes---Shooting Supposed to Have Been Done by a Fellow Countryman.

Montreal, Jan. 23.—John Olander, an Italian, 35 years of age, who resided at 231 St. Martin street, was shot through the head in a gateway in Vitre street, near St. Dominique, on Saturday evening. He died in a few minutes.

The shooting is supposed to have been done by a fellow countryman, who was seen to empty the cartridge shell from his revolver after Olander fell, place the weapon in his pocket, and walk from the yard.

An ambulance from the General Hospital was summoned, but when it arrived, the physician, who accompanied it, said that life was extinct, and the body was taken to the morgue.

Words over a woman led to the quarrel that ended with the killing of Olander.

From what could be learned from the police, the woman's name is White. Detective Cowan arrested one Italian, a man named Frank Dorolo, 24 years of age. He was taken into custody early on Saturday. While there is so far nothing to connect him with the murder, he answers the description of a man seen walking through the gateway after the shooting, and it is thought that he knows something about it.

CREW RESCUED.

Nova Scotia Captain Tells a Harrowing Story.

Halifax, N.S., Jan. 23.—Telling a tale of hardship almost unprecedented in the history of the North Atlantic, Captain Howard and crew of the Nova Scotia schooner H. J. Logan, which was abandoned off the Grand Banks on Dec. 19, arrived in Halifax on the Allan liner Hesperian from Liverpool. Captain Howard and his men were rescued from their waterlogged craft by the steamer Bardistan, bound from Norfolk for Bremen, after all hope of rescue had been abandoned.

The schooner, which was a fourmaster, and one of the last of her class now left in the province, sailed from Chatham, N.B., late in October for New York with a cargo of lathes. Off the Georges she ran into hurricane weather, which carried away her sails and rudder and also loosened her timbers, allowing the seats to sweep in. The pumps were kept working night and day, and the hardy seamen did all in their power to keep the big vessel on the American coast, but the gales carried her far off her course, and she drifted to the Grand Banks of Newfoundland.

Day after day, and night after night the aged captain and his men paced the deck expecting every moment that their ship would founder, as she pitched about in the trough of the sea. The provisions began to run out, and for days the crew were on short rations, which nearly added greatly to their sufferings. On the 19th of December Captain Howard decided to abandon his craft and signalled the Bardistan, which carried the men to Bremen.

The H. J. Logan was built in Parrsboro, and was owned by her captain. She was valued at $50,000.

Picked Out Landing Place.

Havana, Jan. 23.—J. A. McCurdy, who is to make a flight from Key West to Havana and who arrived here on Saturday on the U. S. torpedo boat destroyer Paulding, for the purpose of picking out a suitable landing place, inspected the parade ground and polo field at Camp Columbia his present intention to start to-polo field was an ideal spot for landing. He will leave here to-day on the Paulding for Key West, and it is his present intention to start tomorrow morning between eight and nine o'clock on the voyage to Cuba. He expects to make the run in two hours should the present favorable conditions continue. He will circle Morro Castle and then follow the line of the Malecon drive along the shore to the camp.

Two Killed In Railway Wreck.

North Portal, Sask., Jan. 23.—Word was received here Saturday morning that a bad wreck had occurred on the Portal section of the Soo Line near Macoun. A rotary plow, going from Estevan to Weyburn to work on the forward branch, had a rear-end collision with No. 205 passenger train. After being in a snowdrift for eighteen hours near Kenmore, the passenger train left North Portal at 3.30 Saturday morning, running with the mail car in the rear owing to broker draw-bar. This undoubtedly saved the lives of many passengers.

Two passengers in the sleeper were killed and one of the mail clerks seriously injured. Two coaches went into the ditch. Trainmaster Hakette left here immediately on a special for the scene of the wreck.

The names of the unfortunate passengers who were killed in the smash are: P. J. Hunt, commercial traveler, ticketed from Toronto to Seattle, and R. Chapman, traveler, Toronto to Calgary.

The names of the injured mail clerks are: Lewis Manahan and Greenhaugh. A porter named Coble was also injured. All the injured are expected to recover.

Macoun is situated on the Canadian Pacific branch line between Moose Jaw and Portal, where the Soo Line connects with the Canadian Pacific. It is the first station north of Estevan.

Whirled to Death.

Schenectady, N.Y., Jan. 23.—As J. Krygowski, an employe at the American Locomotive Works, was about to replace a chain on a sprocket wheel of a machine used to straighten scrap-iron, his sleeves caught in the cogs and he was whirled about until his legs had been torn from his body, his head crushed and his clothes completely ripped off. He then fell 15 feet to the floor and was picked up dead.

Bubonic Plague at Pekin.

Pekin, Jan. 23.—A number of deaths from the bubonic plague have occurred in this city since the first death from the disease here was reported on Friday. Delegation staffs are quarantining themselves within their own walls, having been unable to agree upon general measures for the entire legation quarter.

Offered Mediation.

Washington, Jan. 23.—In response to the request of Haiti, the American Government has formally tendered its good offices to both Haiti and Santo Domingo, in a friendly effort to bring about a settlement of the territorial dispute which is seriously threatening the peace of the two countries.

A Clean Man

Outside cleanliness is less than half the battle. A man may scrub himself a dozen times a day, and still be unclean. Good health means cleanliness not only outside, but inside. It means a clean stomach, clean bowels, clean blood, a clean liver, and new, clean, healthy tissues. The man who is clean in this way will look it and act it. He will work with energy and think clean, clear, healthy thoughts.

He will never be troubled with liver, lung, stomach or blood disorders. Dyspepsia and indigestion originate in unclean stomachs. Blood diseases are found where there is unclean blood. Consumption and bronchitis mean unclean lungs.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

prevents these diseases. It makes a man's insides clean and healthy. It cleans the digestive organs, makes pure, clean blood, and clean, healthy flesh.

It restores tone to the nervous system, and cures nervous exhaustion and prostration. It contains no alcohol or habit-forming drugs.

Constipation is the most unclean uncleanliness. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure it. They never gripe. Easy to take as candy.

New Minister of Justice?

Ottawa, Jan. 23.—It is reported here that Wallace Nesbitt, K.C., of Toronto, is to be Minister of Justice in succession to Sir Allan Aylesworth, who is slated for early retirement. It had been thought that Mr. Nesbitt was a Conservative, but it is stated that he has been close to the Government during the last few years. The fact that he has been exceedingly busy of late in addressing Canadian clubs and the like is taken to mean that he is paving the way for entrance into public life.

It is understood that he will run in Sir Alan Aylesworth's constituency of North York, if the statement that he is to become Minister of Justice is true, which it is affirmed it is.

Eight Chinese Killed.

Hankow, China, Jan. 23.—The death of a coolie, who was found in a state of collapse by the British police, resulted in serious disorders yesterday. British and German gunboats landed detachments and fierce fighting followed, in which eight Chinese were killed. The viceroy is sending native troops to restore order.

Hankow is a treaty port of China, in the Province of Hu-Peh, on the Yang-tse-kiang. It is one of the largest cities of the empire, with a population of 860,000. Many foreign merchants reside in Hankow.

The proposal to be laid before them by the companies will be for a 20 per cent. reduction on upper berths, and the lower will be charged on a mileage basis. As an example of the effect of the reductions, the rates out of Ottawa for upper berths will be: Toronto, now $3.50, will be $6.40; Vancouver, $17.50, down to $14; Montreal, $1.50, will be $1.20; New York has been $2.50, and will be $2. These rates will go into effect Feb. 1.

FORTIFY THE CANAL

President Taft Begins His Campaign to Protect Panama—No Treaties to Prevent Doing So

PEACE IS FAR OFF

New York, Jan. 23.—President Taft began in earnest his campaign for the fortification of the Panama Canal. His entire speech at the annual dinner of the Penna Society in New York was devoted to this subject.

In the Senate the President has been told the sentiment in favor of the fortifications is almost two to one. The House seems pretty evenly divided, but not along partisan lines.

In his speech last night the President declared there was absolutely no treaty obligations in the way of fortifying the canal; that the United States had every right and reason to protect what was purely an American waterway.

The President said he yielded to no man in his love of peace and hatred of war. He said he hoped to submit soon to the Senate arbitration treaties of a broader nature than had ever come before that body or any other legislative body of the world. At the same time, Mr. Taft cautioned his hearers that universal peace was still a long way off, and he could not conceive of any patriotic American being willing to allow an attacking force free and equal use of a waterway which was built by Americans largely as an instrument for the defence of their country.

The President recalled that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of 1850 was made with Great Britain at a time when neither country contemplated building the canal. After the failure of the French company, he recalled, came the Spanish-American war, and the 12,000 mile cruise of the Oregon demonstrated the necessity for the canal to double the efficiency of the U. S. fleet. He quoted at length from the correspondence between John Hay and Lord Lansdowne in support of his proposition that nothing in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty precluded the right of the U. S. to fortify the canal.

"Suppose," said the President, "that England is at war with some other country that is not bound to us by treaty rights at all, isn't it essential that we should have fortifications here to protect the canal, not only for our own use and for the world's commerce, but for the use of England and her warships as a means of passage? In other words, we have to preserve that canal as a means of transit to belligerents in time of war as long as we are not ourselves engaged in the controversy."

It was interesting to watch the face of Andrew Carnegie as the President warmed to his argument and hammered home his points.

"Can we feel entirely safe from injury from some irresponsible belligerents?" demanded the President. There was a chorus of "Noes," but the ironmaster did not join in them. He followed the speech closely, but applauded seldom. It was not until the President spoke in favor of broader arbitration that he earned Mr. Carnegie's applause. Then the champion of peace stood up in his enthusiasm, and waved his napkin about his head. But he subsided again when the President admitted that it was still a possibility, and did not join in the cheers that marked the close of the address, although he applauded mildly with the others.

Escaped From Flames.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Jan. 23.—About midnight the occupants of William Wylie's boarding-house at S David's, which was formerly a hotel, were awakened by the light glare without. The fire quickly spread, the occupants escaping in night attire. Some leaped from the windows, but none were injured. The village has no waterworks system and assistance was summoned from here. The old hotel building and adjoining barn were totally destroyed. In the barn, which was afire, when the occupants of the house awoke, were four horses, and a cow burned to death. The rest of the live stock was rescued. The cause of the fire is unknown.

Three Boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills Cured Her.

But they can't help it. If more work is put on them than they can stand it is not to be wondered they get out of order.

Weak back is simply a warning from the kidneys and should be attended to immediately so as to avoid years of terrible suffering from kidney trouble.

Mrs. N. Larmour, Smith's Falls, Ont. writes:—"I take pleasure in writing you stating the benefit I have received by using Doan's Kidney Pills. About a year ago I was terribly afflicted with lame back and was so bad I could not even sweep my own floor. I was advised to try Doan's Kidney Pills, which I did, and with the greatest benefit. I only used three boxes and I am as well as ever. I highly recommend these pills to any sufferer from lame back or kidney trouble.

LINE-UP FOR TO-MORROW IS NOT YET KNOWN

Seven to Meet Trenton Will be Selected After To-night's Practice---Game Will be the Event of the Hockey Season---Lawson Whitehead Has Been Appointed as Referee.

The line-up of the Peterborough team for to-morrow night's game with Trenton will not be definitely known until the executive meets to-night, after the practice. There is great speculation among the fans as to the personnel of the seven, but the executive is not giving out any information. However, the team will be a good deal stronger than that which played in Trenton; that much may be taken for granted and the players and officers are confident of beating the crack team from the East. Good ice is assured and the conditions will be favourable to both teams, as both are light and fast. Whatever may prove to be the result there is no doubt that the game will be the fastest and hardest-fought ice battle seen in Peterborough in many seasons. The Trenton Club is running an excursion to Peterborough for the game, and their rooters will be strengthened by recruits picked up all along the line. They are bringing with them a bunch of confidence, and a barrel of money and may leave a good deal of both thngs behind them—if the calculations of the Peterborough team do not go astray. There will be a monster crowd present and the fans are warned to come early in order to be sure of seating accommodation. Lawson Whitehead of Toronto, has been detailed to referee the battle, which will start sharp at 8.15 p.m.

CARL MORRIS THE HOPE OF THE WHITE MAN

New Aspirant For Heavyweight Honours Weighs 235 Pounds and is 6 ft. 4 in. in Height---Has Reach Much Longer Than Jack Johnson.

NEW YORK, JAN. 21.—The fact that the Tulsa Athletic Club in Tulsa, Oklahoma, has announced through its matchmaker, H. C. Pouder, that the club management will hang up a $15,000 purse for a fight between Carl Morris and Jim Flynn, Tony Ross, Al Kubiak, Jim Perry, or Al Kaufman, makes the followers of the fistic art throughout this section wonder whether a future championship possibly will really come out of the West in hte person of the young giant from Sapulpa. The Tulsa promoters state that in the event of such a battle being held they are prepared to build an amphitheatre capable of holding 25,000 spectators. They believe a contest of this character would net $35,000 in receipts, and thus repay the necessary outlay.

A Good Line.

A meeting with any of the men mentioned would give the general public a better line on the ability of Morris than is obtainable at the present time. His fight with Marvin Hart was no criterion, as that fighter had long passed his top form—and Hart was never in a class with men like Jeffries, Corbett, Fitzsimmons or Sharkey.

From what can be learned of the personal history of Morris, he was born in Kentucky on August 3, 1886, and spent most of his life on the farm of his father. He worked on the farm until 1904, when he came to Sapulpa and applied for a position as helper in the roundhouse. His work attracted the attention of his employers, and it was only a short time until he got a position as fireman in the yard. He soon became fireman on the road, and was promoted to the position of engineer.

His First Fight.

He served in that capacity faithfully until a little occurrence one day at Okmulgee, when a negro, who had some trouble with a brakeman on Morris' train, attempted to strike him. Morris stepped down from the engine, and interfered, with the result that for a time it looked as if the brunette gentleman was going to need a glass carriage with black plumes. Occurrences of this kind caused people who knew him to spread his reputation as a rough and tumble fighter, and those who were not acquainted with him seldom pushed a dispute to extremes more than once.

Carl began to think of taking up pugilism as a profession, and as soon as he learned that Jeffries had been defeated by Johnson, he asked for and received a year's leave of absence, without losing his standing in the line of promotion by the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of which he is a member. When he began training every railroad man working out of Sapulpa became a Morris booster, so that the giant was soon heard of throughout the State.

A Huge Fellow.

It is probable that Morris has physical advantages over every other heavyweight in the world. He is 6 feet 4 inches tall, has a reach of 80½ inches, and he has trained down to 235 pounds. He weighed 300 last June. He has never indulged in liquor or tobacco in any form and is a stickler for health rules. He is married and owns a home in Sapulpa. Ever since he disposed of Hart with two broken ribs, a fractured nose, and other injuries, Morris has been discussed all over the United States.

In spite of his size and weight, Morris is said to be extremely fast and active. It is rather interesting to compare such of his measurements as are known with those of Jack Johnson. The two shape up as follows:

Age—Johnson, 33 years; Morris, 25 years.

Weight—Johnson, 205 pounds; Morris, 235 pounds.

Height—Johnson, 6 feet 1 inch; Morris, 6 feet 4 inches.

Chest—Johnson, 40 inches; Morris 49 inches.

Reach—Johnson, 72 inches; Morris 81 inches.

This gives Morris the advantage of 30 pounds in weight, 3 inches in height, and 9 inches in reach over the champion. His normal chest measure is 9 inches greater than Johnson's and within 3 inches of what Jeffries' chest measure expanded.

Morris has been in six battles, the longest four rounds.

The following are the names of the fighters he has faced and finished:

Tim Hurley, knockout, third round.
Ed. Anderson, knockout, third round.
Battling Britt, knockout, 1 minute 10 seconds.
Jim Harper, knockout, third round.
Marvin Hart, won, fourth round.
Spike Kennedy, knockout, second round.

The fights with Harper and Anderson were held in Tulsa, so the promoters there have had a chance to size up the man from Sapulpa, and the fact that they are willing to offer a big purse for his appearance with some good heavyweight shows htat they believe that Morris has ability.

After his argument with the fighting engineer, Hart is reported to have said:

"Morris is the best man I ever met, and he will certainly whip many a good man inside the next year."

If the Oklahoma giant is a man with real fighting ability, what he needs most is an experienced manager and handler. Such a man would not only be able to show Carl the finer points of fighting and conditioning himself, but his judgment would also be invaluable in deciding just who Morris should meet in the ring. Many a prominent fighter has been ruin edby matching him with some clever, hard-hitting veteran before his knowledge of the game had been sufficiently developed.
